MACK SENNETT, manager of the Keystone Film Company, announced in a recent interview, that plans had been virtually completed for the increase of Keystone comedies, and that even more money would be spent in the future than had been in the past to produce feature comedies of the highest order. Mr. Sennett, said H. E. Aitken, the President of the Triangle Film Corporation, had met with himself and Adam Kessel, Jr., the president of the Keystone Film Company, and had entirely agreed with the plans he had formulated for the coming year.

Mack Sennett.

"We believe in film preparedness," Mr. Sennett said when asked if the fact that three of the executives of the Keystone Company were in the city had any especial meaning, "and we are only laying our plans to be ready to meet coming conditions."

Mr. Sennett was asked if these plans would mean a cutting down in the present cost of the features, and with one of his characteristic, forceful answers, gave a hint of what the company founded by him was considering for the coming year.

"By no means," the manager said, with a characteristic smile. "We are perfecting plans which, instead of meaning a smaller expenditure of money, mean that we will disburse many times more than we have in the past.

"The styles change in comedy screen productions just as quickly as they change in women's millinery for example. We have always set the comedy fashions for the world just as Paris sets the millinery ones, and it is only because we intend to continue to do so, that I asked Mr. Kessel and Mr. Aitken to take advantage of the weather back east and meet me here at this time.

"Our twelve producing companies will be increased to fifteen as soon as possible. We will do this because the stories I have in mind for summer and fall production will mean a greater outlay of money and will require more actors than any we have done in the past."

"Will the increase in the number of producing companies mean the Keystone will release more comedies per week than in the past?" Mr. Sennett was asked.

"Not necessarily," he replied. "At the present time we are releasing two comedies a week. When you stop to consider the time necessary to produce a story, you will find the answer to more companies needed."

Mr. Sennett then spoke of the almost impossible task of finding people who could make up the personnel of the three companies he wants to add to the producing forces at the first opportunity. He said his past experience had shown him it was not practicable to engage either actors or directors for a new company, but that new people could be added to the old companies while the directors had to come from those who had been trained in Keystone ways.

"Our comedy is different from any other in the world," Mr. Sennett said. "It is individual to such an extent that the average director would be lost when given a scenario to produce. His first remark would be that the script was a drama rather than a comedy, and in a measure, he would be correct.

"Our stories have certain situations. They have a thrill, or rather, they must have a thrill, while we have the comedians who can put in the comedy. There are a number of Keystone directors who have gone to other companies especially with the understanding they were to produce Keystone comedies. It cannot be done when they leave the Edendale plant, and in this I will stand by the judgment of any audience in the world.

"When watching a picture you often hear someone in the audince say 'Look, they are trying to copy the Keystone comedies.' At one time I thought this might hurt us, but have since found that it is one of our greatest advertisements, for with all those who have tried, I have yet to see the first Keystone comedy which was not produced in the Edendale studio.

"This makes it necessary that we train our directors and actors. The three companies which I shall put to work in the near future will be headed by people trained in Keystone ways, while the others necessary to fill the gaps will be placed a few in each company, where they will begin their course in Keystone comedy.

"When you speak of lessening expenses, you can quote me as saying, 'The Keystone was never in such fine financial condition.' We have enjoyed a most prosperous year. We have never been able to supply the exhibitor with all the comedies he asked for, and my aim will not only be to make Keystone comedies better each day, week and month, but to continue to set the pace in the comedy film world. This will all mean money, great sums of money, and the Keystone Film Company will spend much more in the future than it has in the past.

"I have often thought of the lines in Kipling's "Mary Glouster"—

'They copied all they could follow,
But they could not copy our mind,
And we left them sweating and swearing,
A year and a half behind.'

"That is the Keystone motto for the future and we shall spend huge sums to prove it to the theater-going public."

Mounet-Sully, French Actor, Dead

Renowned Tragedian Was Among First of Prominent Stage Players to Contribute to the Screen.

THE celebrated French tragedian and dean of the Comedie Francaise, Jean Mounet-Sully, died at his home in Paris, March 3, in his seventy-sixth year. Although M. Mounet-Sully has not been concerned in the production of pictures during the past few years, he will be remembered by pioneer manufacturers as one of the first great actors to recognize the artistic possibilities of photoplays. At a time when most of his associates in France regarded the screen with scant favor, the greatest of French actors devoted much time to perfecting the pictures released under the name of Film D'Art and handled by Pathe. As the interpreter of many characters and the inspiration of the company with which he worked, he was to a large degree responsible for progress made in the early days of pictures and displayed a conception of screen art that has not since been surpassed.

M. Mounet-Sully was born in Dordogne Department, at Bergerac, February 27, 1841. He acquired a knowledge of Greek literature and art, and in 1868 won the first prize in tragedy at the Conservatory. Later in the same year he made his debut at the Oreon, the secondary classic stage of France, with slight success. Then came the Franco-Prussian War in which he acquitted himself with distinction. In 1872 he became a member of the Theatre Francais, making his first appearance as Orestas and from that time on his advance in artistic distinction was rapid. Playing the part of Oedipe Roi, in 1888, he surpassed all previous successes and not long after that he was made a Knight of the Legion of Honor. His first appearance in this country was in the season of 1893-94 when he was welcomed by large audiences. The last of his own plays to be produced was "La Viellesse de Don Juan," which was written in verse and acted at the Odeon by Barbier in 1906.

MISS WHIPPLE CLAIMS "VAMPIRE" RECORD.

Clara Whipple, the pretty Equitable star, declares that she holds the record for "vampiring." In one puny little week and a half she "sirened" through five big, long reels of photoplay. "The Reapers," in which Miss Whipple played in support of John Mason for the Triumph Company, was all finished up in just eleven days. In this picture the pretty star is seen again in the type of role with which she has come to be associated. She has intense dramatic ability and a striking stage presence which equips her for the really strong and dramatic rather than the ingenue. In her previous picture, "The Question," she plays the role of a young girl. Her work in this picture is exciting comment all over the country.

Kalem Meets Comedy Demand

Sis Hopkins Heads List of Three Single Reel Comedies a Week on Kalem Schedule.

WITH Rose Melville's Sis Hopkins, Ham and Bud, and Ethel Teare, the featured fun-makers, Kalem's schedule of releases through the General Film Company now shows the completion of a plan to meet the heavy demand for good comedy subjects. Three of its regular issues through offices of the General Film Company are now one reel comedies, the other issue being the "Hazards of Helen," while the new two-reel series, "The Social Pirates," will be a special release through General Film.

The Sis Hopkins comedies, with the national prestige of that fun-maker, naturally heads the list. From advance bookings and the enthusiastic reports that have come from exhibitors on the early releases, Kalem is certain that the Sis Hopkins comedies will make Rose Melville's creation even more famous on the screen than she was on the stage.

Two characteristic Sis Hopkins comedies are promised among the early releases in "A Flock of Skeletons," released Friday, March 17, and "When Things Go Wrong," on March 24. Trade paper reviewers who have been strong in their praise of the Sis Hopkins comedies also declare that "When Things Go Wrong" reaches the high-water mark. It shows Sis as the first and only servant of a family of Newlyweds. Having Sis in charge of the kitchen is trouble enough, but when relatives come on a visit the troubles that follow reach a lively climax.

Ham's burlesque on war is among the most important of the coming comedy releases. It is "Ham Agrees With Sherman," released on Tuesday, March 14. This single reeler was staged with hundreds of soldiers, aeroplanes, and artillery equipment, at a cost that should set a new mark for one-reel subjects. Ham is the commanding officer of a motley army whose uniforms vary from Mexican guerilla outfits to powder wigged Colonials. Bud is his aide and Norma Nicholls a fascinating spy.

Another Ham subject promised for early release is "For Sweet Charity," on March 21, in which a charity bazaar and numerous pretty girls are the background for Ham and Bud's fun.

Ethel Teare's popularity forced her to stardom and now that she is there Ethel is doing more than living up to her laurels. In "At Bachelor's Roost," Ethel is seen in a story constructed especially for her and one that allows her opportunity to display her many-sided charm in practically every scene of the film. This single reeler is released March 22, with "The Eveless Eden" preceding it on Wednesday, March 15. In "The Eveless Eden" Ethel causes a disruption in the ranks of a woman-hater's club.

"THEATERS AND PICTURE HOUSES."

We have just received from Arthur S. Meloy, an architect of Bridgeport, Conn., a copy of the above work, which is just off the press. It contains an excellent classification of the various phases of the subject matter, but does not contain much new or original information not already familiar to architects. The book, however, may be worth adding to the library of picture theater managers.

Arrow Promises Strong Film

Florence Reed Starred in "The Woman's Law," to Be Released by Pathe March 21.

THE Arrow Film Corporation's initial Gold Rooster release on the Pathe program will be Florence Reed in "The Woman's Law," an adaptation of Mrs. Maravene Thompson's story, which first appeared in the American Magazine and achieved even greater popularity when published in book form. Sales have exceeded the 300,000 mark.

Miss Reed makes it a point never to contract to appear in a photoplay until she has read and approved the scenario. When W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film, approached Miss Reed for the purpose of getting her to play in "The Woman's Law," he found that she had virtually agreed to go on the road in a production of "The Yellow Ticket." Finally she affected a compromise whereby she promised to postpone the road tour and star in the picture, if she found the scenario to her liking. A few days later Mr. Shallenberger received the following note from Miss Reed: "This is the very best scenario that has ever been submitted to me. I think it will make the finest photoplay ever shown on the American screen." To Harvey K. Thew and Albert S. LeVino, co-authors of the scenario, the actress sent equally warm praise.

Advance reports say that the production by Director Lawrence McGill in every respect fulfils the optimistic forecast, in providing an intense drama, finely staged and excellently acted by one of the strongest casts ever assembled for a picture released through Pathe. Supporting Miss Reed, who plays the home-loving wife of a dissolute young New York millionaire, is Duncan McRae, an actor of long experience. Others in the cast are Philip Hahn, John Webb Dillion, William A. Williams and Jack Curtis. "The Woman's Law" will be released March 21.

Tom Mix

TOM MIX, star in Western Pictureplays released by the Selig Polyscope Company, and whose daring feats of horsemanship have created amazement on the part of motion picture theater audiences, started to work in the silent drama as an "extra". He was one of those hard riding supernumeraries who lent the local color and added excitement to the film dramas of the Western plains. He made a place for himself almost from the beginning. His dare-devil feats astride a spirited horse, frequently caused him to be engaged to "double" for some leading player who did not possess the skill in equestrianism that came second nature to Mix.

Tom Mix.

Mix was formerly a cowboy or, a "cowpuncher," up in Wyoming, and there he received his training in horsemanship while caring for the great herds of cattle that roamed the plains in that day. When the motion pictures came into being and the services of skilled riders were required, he gravitated to the Western studios and was given an engagement by the Selig Company. He won his promotion by conscientious work and by feats of unusual daring.

Students of the motion pictures claim that the Mix horsemanship is not equalled. He can, upon a moment's notice, take his place in a contest requiring skill, agility and quick brain work. He has been presented with several medals won in riding contests which are frequently staged in the West among the cowboys and other expert riders.

Mix is known as the man who does not hesitate to take a chance. Broken wrists, sprained ankles, etc., are not classed by him as serious hurts but as necessary discomforts to the day's work. He is always ready to spring the feats of unlooked for daring and it has come to pass that his fellow artists and the photoplay public expect almost any spectacular action on the part of Mix.

He is undoubtedly one of the most popular of Western motion picture stars, and his appearance on the screen is the signal for crowded theaters.

Auburn-Haired Beauty Wins at Ball

Seventeen-Year Old Girl Gets the Decision Over Many Others and Will Be Seen in Thanhouser Subjects.

THERE'S one happy girl in New York today who will never forget the big ball at Madison Square Garden. She is little Pearl Shepard, who was chosen as the most beautiful girl at the ball, and with the honor an opportunity to sparkle among the motion picture stars through Thanhouser films.

When the contestants were called out for the judging, the jury realized what a difficult task it would be. There were over a hundred entries, one more beautiful than the other, but Florence La Badie, as chief judge, was equal to the occasion. A process of elimination left little Pearl Shepard alone at last, and when she was escorted by the police to the Thanhouser box the tumult of the thousands who looked on testified approval of the judge's work.

Pearl Shepard.

The winner is auburn haired and seventeen years old. She lives with her parents at 969 Simpson avenue, in the Bronx, and is a graduate of a public school in New York. Her good fortune comes to her in doubly good effect, because she has within the past year sought an opening at the various film studios, but has only been accorded the usual scant attention given novices.

It is announced by the Thanhouser Company that Pearl Shepard will most likely be seen in a picture in which she will work with Doris Grey, who got a place in the New Rochelle organization by winning a beauty contest at the recent motion picture ball in Boston. The element of beauty in the Thanhouser cast promises to be a prominent feature.

LAUGHMAKERS JOIN UNIVERSAL COMPANY.

Margaret Joslin and Harry Todd, well-known comedians, are now members of the Universal forces. Miss Joslin is the lady of generous proportions who for a long time has been causing gales of laughter among the motion picture fans throughout the country on account of her comical antics in the "Snakeville" stories pictured by the Essanay Company. Todd also will be remembered as one of the leading comedians appearing in the same pictures. Miss Joslin and Todd will play opposite each other in single-reel comedies directed by Craig Hutchinson.

AIRDOME THEATER, LAS VEGAS, TO OPEN.

The Airdome theater, Las Vegas, Nev., will begin operations on March 31. This outdoor photoplay house when it is completed will be one of the finest in that region. It has a seating capacity of 600, and all of the chairs, which were made specially for this house, were manufactured by the Steel Furniture Company of Grand Rapids, Mich. A part of the projection apparatus consists of two Power's 6B machines, and the program will be composed of Triangle, V-L-S-E and Paramount productions. The bill will be changed daily.

MARY STANTON WALTERS DEAD.

Mary Stanton Walters, wife of the late George W. Walters, died at her home in New York, 100 West Eightieth street, on February 21. Mrs. Walters was in her eightieth year. She was the mother of the late Mrs. Barry O'Neil. Interment was at Woodlawn.

Gasnier Forms Producing Company

Organizes the Astra Film Corporation—Will Occupy Pathe Studios and Release Through That Company.

LOUIS J. GASNIER, formerly vice-president and general manager of Pathe, has launched a new producing corporation, which will release through that company. The company has been incorporated under the laws of the state of New York, with the title of the Astra Film Corporation. It is a close corporation with a capital of $50,000. Mr. Gasnier is president and general manager; George Baker, well-known in Jersey City, is vice-president, and Geo. B. Seitz, secretary. The board of directors is comprised of the above with the addition of Donald Mackenzie and George Fitzmaurice. Messrs. Mackenzie and Fitzmaurice are the well-known producers. Ralph Navarro is assistant manager.

The new company has entered into a contract to release through the Pathe Exchange exclusively, and has leased a large part of the Pathe studios in Jersey City. Work will be started at once on a serial with Grace Darmond, Ralph Kellard, Leon Bary, Leslie King and Hallan Mostyn in the cast.

Donald Mackenzie, who, with Mr. Gasnier, will direct the serial, has left with a company of thirty-five players, including Mr. Kellard and Mr. Bary, for Cuba, where many scenes will be taken. In addition to the players three cameramen were taken along and a force of mechanics. A stopover will be made in Key West and some scenes taken there.

While on the boat Donald Mackenzie will put on a comedy in which he will play the leading part. This comedy will be the first instance in which Mr. Mackenzie has appeared in a picture in two years, his last role having been that of the famous pirate in "The Perils of Pauline."

The company will also utilize the natural scenery of the south to make some interesting scenic and educational pictures.

With the remarkable picture-making talent represented among the officers and directors of the Astra Company, splendid results are confidently expected. Mr. Gasnier is unexcelled as a judge of pictures and knows how to obtain effects as do few men. Mr. Mackenzie has built up a reputation as one of the best producers in the business. With their combined talent the success of the new company seems to be certain.

LASKY STUDIO ACTIVE.

With the arrival of Marie Doro at the studios of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, at Hollywood, Cal., there is unusual activity at the head producing quarters of the company. Miss Doro will start almost immediately upon her first production entitled "In Service," which will be released in the United States by Paramount and in Canada by the Famous Players Film Service, Ltd., on Monday, April 24.

At the studio at the present time, Blanche Sweet is completing with the support of Theodore Roberts, Thomas Meighan and an all star cast, a picturization of "The Sowers," and Victor Moore with Anita King in his support, is finishing an elaborate production entitled "The Race." Cleo Ridgely and Wallace Reid also have well under way their next co-starring production entitled "The Love Mask," which is being produced under the direction of Frank Reicher. This is an original story by Cecil B. De Mille and Jeanie MacPherson.

NOVEL ESSANAY RELEASE.

Essanay is now offering for release a series of artistic sketches of all the points of interest and large buildings in the principal cities of the world. These sketches are drawn by Vernon Howe Bailey, the noted newspaper and magazine artist who is recognized as the best in the world in this particular line of work. One of these subjects is released every other week. To date Mr. Bailey has made sketches in and about New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, London and Paris. He is now at work on New Orleans and vicinity. The sketches run for five hundred feet, the remainder of the reel being devoted to actual scenes taken around Quebec, Santa Fe, N. M., and in the Canadian Rockies. The drawings are exact reproductions of the famous buildings of the world. They quash in as the artist draws them and the spectator practically sees the structure being built, though built by a pen.

Winifred Kingston

AS LEADING woman for Dustin Farnum, Winifred Kingston has appeared with marked success. Of English birth, Miss Kingston was educated in Edinburgh, Scotland, and Paliseul, Belgium. At an early age she appeared on the stage in England, and later played leading parts for Charles Frohman and Sir Beerbohm Tree. In America Miss Kingston played in "The Servant in the House," "Thais," "Seven Sisters," "Pomander Walk," "The Elixir of Youth" and other productions of prominence.

Winifred Kingston.

Winifred Kingston upon completion of her initial photoplay cast her lot with the silent drama. Presenting chief support to Dustin Farnum in "The Call of the Cumberlands," "The Gentleman from Indiana," "Ben Blair," "Davy Crockett," "Captain Courtesy" and "The Virginian." Miss Kingston has endeared herself to thousands of screen patrons.

Tennis, horseback-riding, good books and last, but by no means least, her garden are Winifred Kingston's hobbies. These are all shared by her mother, who is her constant companion. As a horticulturist, Miss Kingston has gained no little fame, and her rose bushes, lawns and shrubberies are the source of pride to both her mother and herself. When one considers she has scarcely passed twenty, the future of this talented girl can be appreciated.

Betty Howe, Latest Vitagrapher.

THE Vitagraph Company announces it has added the name of Betty Howe to its roster of stock players. Miss Howe is another who comes into filmdom with no stage experience, and the experience of many another who entered the Vitagraph Company under similar conditions justifies the prediction that before long her beauty and attractive personality will win her multitudes of admirers.

Betty Howe.

Miss Howe belongs to the "petite" class. She is dark, with sparkling brown eyes, a shapely nose and an expressive mouth set in a face of perfect oval. She is animated and vivacious, athletic and slender, and moves with a natural gracefulness so essential to film work.

The new player comes from Tremont, N. Y. Although she admits to eighteen years, she hardly looks sixteen. What little experience she has had was gained in amateur productions at the Quaker boarding school, Chappaqua Mountain Institute. She is a relative of the late Julia Ward Howe.

Miss Howe has always been a lover of drama and has been a close student of the stage. Her quick intelligence and natural grasp of emotional and comic situations are destined to advance her rapidly in filmdom.

Her newest work will be in the company supporting Robert Edeson in a new James Oliver Curwood thriller. She has already appeared with Frank Daniels in some of the one-reel comedies detailing "The Escapades of Mr. Jack," released by the Vitagraph.

Selig Reopens Chicago Studio

Special Company of Picked Players Under Direction of Colin Campbell to Make "The Crisis."

AFTER being closed for several months because of winter weather, the Selig Polyscope studios in Chicago were opened on Monday, March 6, and there are scenes of great activity at the big Chicago plant. Colin Campbell, dean of the Selig corps of directors, has been transferred from the Selig Los Angeles studios and has commenced active production of the Selig spectacular drama, "The Crisis," which William N. Selig plans to be the greatest and most realistic photodrama ever released. "The Spoilers," "The Ne'er-Do-Well," and other Selig plays will be outdone according to the plans formulated by Mr. Selig and who is devoting much of his personal attention to the details of production of "The Crisis."

Miss Bessie Eyton, Thomas Santschi, Eugenie Besserer and other Selig stars arrived from Los Angeles the week of February 28 and were joined by several distinguished New York artists. A large stock company was previously held in readiness and active work has started. Colin Campbell is the director who produced "The Spoilers," "The Ne'er-Do-Well," "Thou Shalt Not Covet," etc., and it can be said that the best talent available has been secured to make "The Crisis" the very last word in massive productions.

Three cars loaded with special properties, costumes, armament peculiar to the days of '61, etc., arrived at the Chicago studios last week and a large force of scenic artists have been working for weeks on interior sets. Thousands of supernumeraries have been engaged to work in spectacular scenes called for in Winston Churchill's greatest novel.

The Chicago newspapers have made much of the fact that this is the first visit ever paid by Miss Eyton, a motion picture star of international renown, to Chicago, Ill. Miss Eyton, previously to this visit to Chicago never placed her dainty foot outside the confines of California. She was given a cordial reception by her Chicago friends and admirers.

It was seven long years ago that Thomas Santschi left Chicago with a Pioneer company of Selig players for the Pacific Coast. Since that time he has never returned to Chicago, the scene of his initial motion picture triumphs until he arrived to enact the leading role of "Stephen Brice" in "The Crisis."

Miss Eugenie Besserer owns a pretty home in Los Angeles and was loth to leave that home, but she cheerfully answered to the call of duty and will enact an important role in the forthcoming Selig drama. Miss Eyton while in the spoken drama supported Wilton Lackeye, McKee Rankin, Margaret Anglin, Frank Keenan and others, and once held the title of the champion lady fencer of the world.

These and other stars have been overwhelmed with invitations to receptions, card parties, etc., for their Chicago friends seem determined to make their sojourn in Chicago a most happy one.

Mr. Selig expects to escort his players to St. Louis, Vicksburg, Miss., and other localities in order to film scenes called for in "The Crisis." In St. Louis, the courthouse, the arsenal, the old slave pen, etc., will be filmed and the old battle grounds at Vicksburg will also be utilized. The Vicksburg Chamber of Commerce has extended a sincere invitation to Mr. Selig to take advantage of all localities wished for.

The entire summer months will probably be utilized in the work of producing Winston Churchill's great novel.

On the V-L-S-E Program

Several New Lubin and Selig Plays Are Scheduled.

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by General Manager Walter W. Irwin, of the V-L-S-E, that in adidtion to "The Toilers," the five-part drama of capital and labor, which was written by Daniel Carson Goodman, author of "Souls in Bondage," "The Fires of St. John," in which Nance O'Neil is to be starred under the direction of Edgar Lewis, the Rex Beach novels, "The Barrier," "The Silver Horde," and "The Iron Trail," the Lubin Company will soon release, through the Big Four, the picturization of Clyde Fitch's great play, "The Woman in the Case." This is to be given an elaborate production under the direction of Joseph Kaufman. It will feature Ethel Clayton and E. K. Lincoln. The supporting company will be a notable one. It is said that Mr. Kaufman has been given carte blanche in expenditure in making this production, and that the art directors of the Lubin Company have been instructed to exceed all previous records in providing sumptuous "atmosphere."

Through the same distributing company, Lubin will release in the immediate future, a picturization of Albert Payson Terhune's novel "Dollars and Cents." This is a story of the influence of personal finance upon domestic serenity, and was one of the most widely read novels which appeared in both magazine and book form in recent months. Ethel Clayton and Tom Moore appear as leads in this production.

Selig is preparing in addition to "The Crisis," and "The Prince Chap," a feature play entitled, "Into the Primitive," for release on the V-L-S-E program. This is a dramatization of Robert Ames Bennett's novel of the same title. The story concerns the adventures of a foreign nobleman, a rough and ready American, and a young society woman who, after a wreck at sea, are cast upon the uninhabited shores of South Africa. There they encounter many perils and hardships, the plot lending itself logically to the production of numerous wild animals indigenous to that country. Kathlyn Williams, Guy Oliver and Harry Lonsdale will have the principal parts.

Chaplin Seen Out of Makeup

In 100-Foot Subject Showing Signing of Contract He Appears Sans "Mustache" and in Clothes That Fit—Comedian on Way West.

CHARLES CHAPLIN, who has just signed a year's contract with Mutual, left for the West early this week. He went to Chicago for a short sojourn before proceeding to the coast. Preparations for his coming are in progress at the new studios being put in shape for his company in Los Angeles. Henry P. Caulfield, who will be in charge of the studios, has left for Los Angeles.

In Chicago Mr. Chaplin will attend to the cutting of his last release with Essanay, with which he had been employed the last year. Only two Chaplin releases are yet to come from this company, despite the report to the effect that a large stock of Chaplin's was to be released to ride on the Mutual's publicity efforts.

The first "Mutual Chaplin" is now being released. It is the one-hundred foot picture showing Chaplin and President John R. Freuler of the Mutual signing the memorable contract which gives Chaplin the world's biggest salary.

This picture, taken primarily for the purpose of the Mutual Weekly, has been much in demand among New York exhibitors. No less than twelve prints of this expensive and tiny release are working among the theaters of New York. It is Mr. Chaplin's first appearance in motion pictures without a make-up—and it is probably his last.

J. E. GOODMAN TO WRITE FOR LASKY COMPANY.

The man who put Robert Louis Stevenson's "Treasure Island," contrary to all beliefs of experienced managers, on the stage in New York as one of the biggest plays of the season, has been engaged by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company to write photoplays exclusively for it. He is Jules Eckert Goodman, dramatist of international reputation. As a writer for the legitimate stage, Mr. Goodman's name has been before the public for years. "Treasure Island," now playing to capacity audiences, is his second play of the present season in New York. At the Gaiety Theater last autumn one of his dramas entitled "Outside the Door," produced by Henry Miller, had a substantial engagement. He also wrote "Elevating a Husband" and other plays.

Dintenfass Gets Loving Cup

Jacksonville's Mayor and Chamber of Commerce Show Appreciation of Courtesies Extended by New York Film Man.

AS a mark of appreciation for the courtesy extended to a committee of Jacksonville business men delegated by their associates to interview film manufacturers in New York and also in recognition of his efforts in furthering the interests of the Florida city, Mark M. Dintenfass, secretary and treasurer of the Vim Comedy Company, has been formally presented by the City of Jacksonville and its Chamber of Commerce with a handsome silver loving cup. The token with its base is eighteen inches in height and twelve inches across the handles. It bears the following inscription: "Presented to Mark M. Dintenfass as a token of appreciation from the City of Jacksonville and the Chamber of Commerce for his unselfish courtesies extended to their special Motion Picture Committee — February 10, 1916." On the reverse is the following: "J. E. T. Bowden, Mayor; Charles H. Mann, treasurer of the Chamber of Commerce; J. J. Logan, Telfair Stockton, W. R. Carter, J. B. Pound, George H. Nason, H. M. Stanford, Committee."

Mark N. Dintenfass.

It was early in January that Messrs. Logan, Stockton, Carter and Pound came to New York with a letter of introduction to Mr. Dintenfass, written by Louis Burstein, manager of the Vim studio in the southern city. Mr. Dintenfass invited film manufacturers to meet the committee, and on the return of the latter to Florida they sent an invitation to Mr. Dintenfass to visit them that they might return his courtesies. On February 8, the day of the New Yorker's arrival, he was given an extended luncheon by one hundred Rotarians. The Real Estate Exchange also entertained Mr. Dintenfass. It was on this occasion that one of the speakers, calling attention to the fact that a literal translation of Dintenfass in the Austrian tongue was "inkstand," added to the hilarity of the occasion by remarking: "If, as has been said, 'a drop of ink will make millions think,' what might an inkstand do?"

Loving Cup Presented to Mr. Dintenfass by Jacksonville.

On February 11, Mr. Dintenfass went to the Atlantic Beach Hotel to keep a luncheon appointment with a friend. He found, to his surprise, a large and representative gathering of Jacksonville business men awaiting him—and also the loving cup. Mayor Bowden spoke to the toast, "The City of Jacksonville and Her Invitation to the Movie People." Mr. Carter responded to "The Reception in New York." Mr. Dintenfass also spoke, praising the city and its citizens.

Mr. Dintenfass is a strong partisan of the southern city as a claimant to the attention of picture manufacturers. He said there were six studios there at present and there were strong indications that another winter would see several others. The old-time film man showed an attested copy of a resolution passed on February 15 by the City Council as an evidence of the active interest being taken in the moving picture industry and the determination of the city officials to aid manufacturers in every way possible. The resolution set forth:

"Be it resolved, by the City Council of the city of Jacksonville, that the City Council hereby expresses itself as being in favor of granting to moving picture companies the right to take pictures on any buildings, grounds or improvements of the city of Jacksonville, including the prison farm, waterworks and the electric plant, upon making application to the head of the department having charge of such property.

"Be it further resolved, that the Board of Bond Trustees and Committee on Public Works and the Board of Port Commissioners be requested to enforce this resolution and that they furnish to moving picture companies the right to take pictures of their respective departments."

Mr. Dintenfass announced that the two Vim Companies, now working in Jacksonville, would shortly be augmented by the organization of a third.

Increased Theater Tax Threatened

Ligon Johnson, of the United Managers, Points Out Necessity for Prompt Action by Entire Theatrical Industry.

THE United Managers' Protective Association is continuing its fight against the war tax on theaters. It will be remembered that in December last the tax that had been in existence for the preceding year was re-enacted, it being understood that this was preliminary to the enactment of a measure imposing far greater burdens on the theatrical industry and which would be credited to the cost of preparedness. Ligon Johnson, general counsel of the organization of theater managers, stated this week that much work had been done in the way of impressing upon Congressmen the injustice that would result should any further tax be levied on the theater managers.

"Much work remains still to be done," said Mr. Johnson. He pointed out that the past year had in a great many instances been a severe one for theater managers—that both the stage and the screen had been hard hit by the war tax. He called attention to the fact that aside from the war tax those houses making money already were paying an income tax in addition to their regular property tax.

"It is of vital interest to every person connected with a theater—this proposed war tax and armament equipment bill," continued Mr. Johnson. "We understand there is a plan on foot again to single out the theater for an unwarranted tax. In addition, there is a scheme to add most of this on the theaters by basing the impost on the maximum entrance fee charged for admission. We have called the attention of our members to another phase of the situation, i. e., that the tax on whiskys and wines, on tobaccos, on telephone messages and right down the list is passed on to the ultimate consumer. The owner of the business, even though prosperous, is not the one who actually pays the tax; but the theater alone, the one enterprise least able to stand it, is singled out."

The statement is made that the members of the 1,600 locals of musicians and of stage employes are actively at work against the war tax on theaters.

Motion picture theater owners and managers and their employes may do much in the campaign if they will get in communication with their Congressmen and tell them how the theater tax is affecting their business and employment.

GRANVILLE LEAVES FOR VILLA CAMP.

Fred Granville, the cameraman who accompanied the Steffanson Arctic expedition and brought back such a wonderful collection of motion pictures of the northland within the Arctic Circle, this week left the Universal City studios for a stay of several weeks in the camp of the revolutionist leader, Francisco Villa, in Chihuahua, Mexico. The purpose of Granville's trip into the hostile territory south of the Rio Grande is to procure a series of motion pictures which are to be released on the regular Universal program, showing actual conditions in the civil-war-ridden nation.

Paragon Studio

Some Interesting Features of the Big Plant Recently Completed for Paragon Films, Inc., at Fort Lee, N. J.

NO motion picture studio in the United States offers a more interesting study than the fine, new plant of the Paragon Films, Inc., a producing company of the World, at Fort Lee, N. J. In the way of capaciousness and unique innovations, this studio and its adjoining printing plant presents many interesting points to the student of motion picture production.

The Paragon studio is one of the largest in the East. It is a square building with an exterior measurement of 200 by 200 feet. The studio floor has an area of approximately 20,000 square feet, with a wide strip partitioned off for offices and work rooms. From the ridge of the great glass roof to the studio flooring is a drop of 75 feet. These figures fail to convey the immensity of the plant, which must be entered to be appreciated.

In the new Paragon studio the possibility of vibrating floor spoiling a negative in the making is eliminated. The flooring is nailed into a base of concrete composition and appears absolutely impervious to shock. In testing it, Studio Manager Henry Bayard had a camera man take a strip of film while from the girders above, workmen dropped to the floor heavy bags of sand all around the studio. The test film showed not the slightest tremble. Had it been taken under similar conditions in many studios, the picture on the film would have been hopelessly damaged by the vibration of the floor.

In addition to this feature, the Paragon studio is unique in possessing two large revolving stages, each of which is capable of holding two large and two small sets at the same time. With this revolving stage, a director can work upon scene after scene without moving his lights or camera and thus save many hours.

Another distinctive feature is the steel bridge that travels the entire width of the studio and from which a director and his cameraman may "shoot" down upon a series of settings from various angles.

It was this bridge that enabled Director Maurice Tourneur to make use of a most remarkable setting in the picture he has just completed, entitled "The Hand of Peril."

At one end of the studio, Director Tourneur built the interior of a three-story house, showing nine rooms, with stairways connecting them. By "shooting" from the bridge at various heights and horizontal positions, the director was able to take scenes showing action in all the rooms of the house simultaneously, as well as close-ups of each individual room. Such sets have been used occasionally on the stage, but never in motion pictures.

Still another remarkable feature of the Paragon plant is the terrace, twenty feet wide, extending entirly around the building. The side walls have several sliding panels that can be opened, and use made of the extended floor space offered by the terrace. Both ends of the studio can be thrown completely open with no upright supports to obstruct the vision.

As an example of what this novel constructive idea will permit, the director can erect on the studio floor a setting showing the exterior of a house, carrying out the effect with balconies and balustrades upon the terrace. Then he can arrange a formal garden on the studio property beyond the terrace and, by placing his camera at the extreme end of the garden, can "shoot" the entire vista up to and into the studio itself. This combination of exterior and interior operation has never before been possible in motion picture studio work.

Other distinctive features of the Paragon studio are the property rooms, which are devised in two levels; one to take in material and the other to take it out; and the dressing room arrangement, which is so thoroughly planned that there is even a private corridor and stairway for the stars and leading players, separating them from the "extra" people engaged for ensemble scenes.

The printing plant adjoining the studio is claimed to be the largest in the country, having a capacity of 2,000,000 feet a week. Among its distinctive innovations is the spraying chamber, 150 feet long, where many reels of film can be washed at the same time through a device that travels up and down the room spraying the film with a fine watermist. The printing plant also includes half a dozen projecting rooms, one 75 feet long.

A conservative estimate of the entire outlay for studio and printing plant, including the equipment, is $750,000. In this plant the Paragon Company expects to produce series of as nearly perfect films, photographically at least, that were ever placed on the market.

HOW ARTHUR KANE GOT HIS START.

Arthur S. Kane's secret is out and at the hands of no less a person that the Mayor of Topeka, Kan., Jay E. House. In addition to mayoring Mr. House conducts a column on Governor Capper's Topeka Capital under the same caption, "On Second Thought," given it by Mr. Kane when he was city editor of that newspaper. The other day House got to "reminiscensing" about Topeka's great public building, the Auditorium, and wrote: "The first big attraction to appear in the Auditorium was the United States Marine band. That was in January or February, 1901. Arthur Kane, then a North Topeka druggist, now a magnate of the moving picture world, was the local impresario. He cleaned up a thousand dollars on the engagement. Nordica didn't sing in the Auditorium until December, 1901, or January, 1902. Her concert also was promoted by Arthur Kane, and he made so much money off the two concerts that he sold his drug store, quit the newspaper business (he was at the time city editor of the Capital), and went into the game as a regular thing. Kane was getting $25 a week as a newspaper man. He has since drawn $20,000 a year in the film business. Nordica sang to the biggest money ever turned into the Auditorium box office. The prevailing prices were $1 a seat and enough extra chairs were put in to seat 4,100 people. There were special trains from all over."

LE VINESS DIRECTING FOR AMERICAN.

Carl M. Le Viness, who has had a number of years of directing experience with producing companies on the Pacific Coast, has been placed in the directorship of one of the "Flying A" companies at the American studios in Santa Barbara. Director Le Viness will produce three-reel "Flying A" pictures. He already has begun work on his first subject, a drama from the pen of Carl Coolidge, in which the principal roles will be taken by Vivian Rich, Alfred Vosburgh and George Periolat. The title of this picture will be "Four Months."

A Week's Universals

Releases for the Week Beginning March 20 Make a Well-Balanced Program.

THE Universal Film Manufacturing Company will put out, during the week of March 20, one of the best-baianced programs that it has yet released. Of the sixteen releases to be issued for that week, "Drugged Waters," with William Dowlan and Gloria Fonda, is the Red Feather feature, while there are seven comedies, seven dramas and one comedy-drama. Many of the popular leading actors and actresses of the Universal forces appear on the program, including Francis Ford and Grace Cunard in a Gold Seal; Rupert Julian and Baby Zoe Bech, in a Laemmle; Myrtle Gonzalez, Clara Byers, Edith Roberts, Gale Henry, Ben Wilson, Dorothy Phillips, Billie Ritchie, Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Betty Compson being among those whose work will be shown.

The releases for Monday, March 20, are "Drugged Waters" and "Love and Vaccination," a comedy Nestor. "Drugged Waters" is a tale about High Bluff Mineral Springs, which has long been doped by the manager of the Springs, with lithia, sulphur, etc., in order to attract the wealthy patients who imagine they have ailments. The denouement of the plot is very interesting.

The Nestor comedy, produced by Al Christie, tells about a young doctor and his sister who have arrived at a popular summer resort in quest of a practice. The doctor finds things very dull and his talent is wasted. The majority of the visitors are entirely too healthy to need the services of a doctor, so he and his sister decide upon desperate measures to secure patients. A smallpox scare is started, and, after the news spreads at the resort, the doctor has his hands full. Such a comedy in the hands of Lee Moran, Betty Compson, Eddie Lyons and Neal Burns will produce many a hearty laugh.

Tuesday, March 21, there will be three releases, a Gold Seal, Rex and Imp. Francis Ford and Grace Cunard appear in the Gold Seal in a comedy drama of adventure, in which Miss Cunard, owing to her resemblance to the madcap queen of Corna, takes her place in the palace while the queen is gone madcapping away from the ceremonious atmosphere of the palace. Many complications follow which are carefully and artistically worked out to a final pleasing conclusion. "The Phantom Thief," the Rex release, is a detective drama in two reels with an unusually fine story, while "A Quiet Day in Centerville" is the Imp release, this being a comedy with Victor Potel cutting capers.

Wednesday, besides the release of the Universal Animated Weekly, with all the latest pictorial news of the country, there will also be an L-Ko Komedy of two reels, with Billie Jacobs and Olive Johnson in the leading roles. "The Desperado," with Rupert Julian and Baby Zoe Bech, will be the Laemmle release of the day. This is an appealing story of western life in the time of Forty-nine and carries interest from beginning to end.

Thursday, Myrtle Gonzalez and Fred Church will be seen in a two-reel drama, "The Secret Foe," written and produced by Lynn Reynolds, this being a Laemmle release. "On Dangerous Ground" is a single-reel Big U drama, written by Clarice M. MacQuarrie and produced by Murdock MacQuarrie, he also playing the leading role. "Pimple's Scrap of Paper" is the Powers' comedy release.

On Friday, Clara Byers and Edith Roberts appear in "The Crimson Trail," a two reel Imp drama, written and produced by Winthrop Kelley, being the story of an evil woman's regeneration through the awakening of love, Stanley Walpole marking his return to the Universal eastern forces in this picture. "The Wrong Bird" is the title of the Nestor comedy, written by Al Christie and produced by Horace Davey. The story is of the newlywed's first meal after the return from their honeymoon, which does not turn out to be much of a success. The bride is willing, but lacks the technical training necessary to an appetizing meal, which starts the ball rolling for the fun to follow.

Saturday, a Bison three-reel feature will be released, "Monna Vanna" being a typical story of the west such as have made the Bison famous for producers of great pictures. There is also a Joker comedy, "Fifty-Fifty," with William Franey and Gale Henry, directed by Al Curtis, which is uproariously funny.

Billie Ritchie and Peggy Pearce are seen in an L-Ko Komedy on Sunday in "A Friend, But a Star Boarder." "Ways of Providence" is a Rex three-reel feature, with Ben Wilson and Dorothy Phillips playing the leading roles, directed by Mr. Wilson. It is a political and love story admirably well put on, and one which bears all the good marks usually found in Ben Wilson pictures.

Paramount Cameraman Returns

H. D. Blauvelt Reports an Interesting Picture-Taking Tour to South America.

WEARING an expansive smile, but telling tales that thrill, H. D. Blauvelt, one of the most enterprising and experienced motion picture cameramen in the country, returned to the States last week. He spent thirteen months in South America, securing the admirable pictures for the Paramount South American Travel Series, which have been released through Paramount Pictures Corporation during 1915.

Prior to his South American trip, Mr. Blauvelt represented prominent press associations, and toured Europe as cameraman with Theodore Roosevelt, ex-President of the United States, and also accompanied other expeditions. None equaled his last trip. He visited every country and possible haunt to obtain his unique, unusual pictures which have added so much to the attractiveness of the Paramount series.

H. D. Blauvelt.

His return brings with it many stories of unusual happenings, for he was marooned in Peru, forced to sleep with a man who had smallpox in Ecuador, escaped being crushed to death by a falling building in an earthquake, was compelled to cling to a bed mattress overnight during a flood, besides going through several disasters ashore and aboard. His stories are as interesting as the pictures he took.

Mr. Blauvelt was highly elated over the fact that the South American Travel Pictures are being used so extensively in educational institutions, and that they have been indorsed by the best known educators in the country. He said that it had been the purpose of Paramount from the inception of the trip to combine geography and history with the Travel Pictures, and because of that, it made his trip highly pleasurable and interesting.

The pictures he took of widest interest were ostrich farming in Florida, harpoon fishing in Key West, shark fishing in Havana, mahogany lumbering in Guayaquil, cocoanut gathering in Quito, sponge fishing in Kingston, the Panama Canal and Locks in Panama, seal hunting in Payta, the Peruvian types in Mallendo, the Chuncha Indians in Titicaca, the great gravity railway at La Paz, the tropical birds at Valparaiso, the ranching at Santiago, the icebergs in Port Stanley, the Falls of Iquaza near Buenos Aires, sheep ranching near Montevideo, the Sugar Loaf mountain at Santos, diamond mining at Bahia, and a wonderful lot of other things.

Not a single incident of any importance, nor bit of history or geography, nor the natural things that the ordinary traveler would see, did he miss. He got more than that, for he sent back many exceptionally unusual pictures.

The cameraman left America the first of last year and returned on February 1, this year. He has been a cameraman for twenty years, doing motion picture work for nearly four years.

Mr. Blauvelt is undecided as to which continent he will next set out to conquer. He fears none. He loves thrills. So he says.

"SMALL TIME" PUBLICITY.

New wonders in the moving picture business are unfolded in the write-up accorded Director Winthrop Kelley's company of Universal players during their Kingston, N. Y., visit by the expert of the Kingston Daily Freeman, which reads in part:

"Every morning the group of actors and actresses, fourteen in number, left their headquarters at the Stuyvesant and journeyed by auto to the scenarios, being gone all the day and sometimes making pictures in the night by means of powerful radium torches which perform their functions much better than the sun."

New Lasky Laboratory

Complete and Modern Equipment Installed in New Building at Hollywood, Cal.

THE new laboratory of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, at Hollywood, California, has the distinction of being the most modern and efficient building of its kind in America. When completed and fully equipped, it will represent an outlay of $125,000, and when in operation it will give employment to 75 persons.

It was designed by Cecil B. De Mille, director-general of the Lasky Company, and Alvin Wyckoff, director of photography. The completed plans represent three months of careful study of film requirements. The building is solid concrete, three and one-half stories in height, and in addition to the rooms used for the developing and printing of the motion picture film contains a fully-equipped theater, with a seating capacity of 150. This theater is to be used for the entertainments given by the members of the Lasky Company, as well as for the projection of the pictures.

There is not a door between any of the dark-rooms and the drying-room, sunlight being excluded by cleverly arranged light breaks. The interior lighting system was installed by a special representative of the Eastman Kodak Company, who was brought to the Lasky studio for that purpose. The light is so diffused that it is possible for the employe to work in the dark-rooms in a light practically as clear as that of day.

With the new arrangement, every employe, upon entering the building, goes into a large locker-room and there changes to his or her laboratory costume of white, with rubber-soled shoes and white gloves.

The building is so arranged that from the negative developing-room to the shipping-room the film never doubles on its course, but moves systematically forward; as fast as the work of one department is finished, the film is sent directly to the next, so that there is no crossing and recrossing and doubling back.

One of the unusual features of the building is a director's cutting-room. In this the director and his assistants can prepare the production entirely remote from any outside disturbance.

For the testing of each positive before it is shipped to the distributing company, a number of small projecting machines have been installed, presided over by a competent inspector.

In the basement of the building the huge filtering, heating and refrigerating plants are located. In the drying-rooms the filtered air changes every minute and a half, while in the remainder of the building washed and cleaned air is changed every three minutes.

By means of the unusual automatic refrigerating and heating system, an even temperature is maintained inside the building throughout the entire year, regardless of climatic conditions outside.

Throughout, the building is equipped with the most modern machinery, the perforating and printing machines having been especially made for the Lasky Company. Under complete operation the plant will have a capacity for turning out 500,000 feet of perfect film a week.

Raver to Give Trade Show

Will Exhibit a Number of Productions to Exhibitors and Buyers at Wurlitzer Hall.

THE first trade exhibition of Raver-Ocean features will be held during the week of March 6-11, at Wurlitzer Fine Arts Hall. Invitations are being sent to managers of first class theaters and state right buyers for the event. Wm. J. Locke's famous book, "The Fortunate Youth," in motion picture form; the noted play, "Driftwood," by Owen Davis, and the official films of "Austria at War" will be shown consecutively.

Since the consolidation of the distributing interests of the Raver and Ocean companies under one roof much progress has been made in editing and preparing the combined product for the market.

This work is being done under the personal supervision of Harry R. Raver, head of the Raver and Itala companies, the former producing the famous plays of Augustus Thomas and the latter producers of the great spectacular film, "Cabiria," which is now in its second year of phenomenal success.

The Raver-Ocean productions are particularly attractive for their splendid line up of stars, in addition to the already established popularity of authors and plays. Among the prominent people identified with these films are Marshall Farnum, Vera Michelena, Percy Standing, Wilmuth Merkyl, Lucy Cotton, Lillian Leslie, Charles Graham, James J. Corbett, Paul Gilmore, Edith Luckett, Harry Spingler and others well known to the public.

After the New York showing, other cities will be visited and the Raver-Ocean first five productions shown in a similar way. The road contingent will be in charge of Frank Samuels, formerly identified with traveling "Cabiria" and "Birth of a Nation" exhibitions.

Lorrimer Johnston Heard From

WRITING from Johannesburg, S. A., to The Moving Picture World, Lorrimer Johnston says:

"I have now been in South Africa for two months. I have just returned from a tour of 2,500 miles, visiting Rhodesia, Swaziland, Zululand, Natal, Orange Free State, Basutoland, Cape Colony and Transvaal. I have made this trip to familiarize myself with the actual locations for the pictures I am to produce.

Caroline Frances Cooke in Rickshaw.

"We have contracted with Sir Rider Haggard to picturize "King Solomon's Mines," combined with "Allan Quartermain," and shall make this a massive production in five reels. We are constructing a power system to use in the Cango Caves, the actual place Haggard describes in the novel, and as we will use thousands of Zulus in their own country you can see how great a production I shall make. I shall also produce "The Story of an African Farm," by Olive Schreiner; "Gloria," by Charlotte Mansfield, and "The Great Trek," and a five reel to be called "Dingaan."

"We are building here in Johannesburg a studio 90 by 60, and a complete plant for productions, including twenty-four dressing rooms, for the artists, scenic rooms, carpenter and property shops, and all is being built in an artistic and decorative manner in stone and concrete.

"I am inclosing some photos of my leading woman—Caroline Frances Cooke—and as they are very out of the usual, I hope you will find a place in an early number of the World to use them. Wishing you all the compliments of the season, I am, Sincerely yours,

"LORRIMER JOHNSTON."

Jack Murray, Director and "Dare Devil"

JACK MURRAY, motion picture player, who has established considerable of a reputation as "dare devil," or player of big stunts for pictures, also as a player in straight comedy and dramatic parts and a director of any style of subject, is one of the veterans of the screen in point of service. Though a young man in years, he began his picture service nearly ten years ago with the Edison Company, rising to the position of director in the two and a half years he was with that concern and taking part in many important productions. Among these were a series of Northwest pictures and the first of the United States navy pictures.

Jack Murray.

His next appearance was with David Horsley at the Bayonne studio during 1914. Since then he has appeared in a number of productions under various auspices and has written a large number of scenarios which have been successfully produced. Some of his latest work was for the Metro Corporation. In the way of versatility Mr. Murray refers sometimes to the Peerless production, "The Code of the Mountains," in which he successfully carried nine different parts—all widely dissimilar characters. He has also done a lot of daring riding and jumping and other perilous stunts, entitling him to the soubriquet of "dare devil."

Jack Murray was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, but has since lived in Alaska and in various other parts of the United States. He has an intimate knowledge of the legitimate stage, having begun his dramatic career with the once famous Forepaugh stock company of Cincinnati, which was for years the recruiting ground for many theatrical organizations. His last dramatic work was with Nance O'Neil.

One of Mr. Murray's specialties is writing scenarios for the pictures which he directs, and his methods have proved very acceptable to producing companies that have engaged him.

NO RELEASE DATE ON A.-B. COMEDIES.

Fifty-three reels of Biograph comedies featuring Mack Sennett, Mabel Normand and other stars have been shipped to the various General Film exchanges, with portrait one-sheets and other paper. This means that exhibitors who have been handicapped by the scarcity of good comedy material may book the new prints of these famous subjects as they please, one with each change of program, if desired.

It was originally intended to release these selected Biograph comedies on the regular program, but following the representations of exhibitors and exchange men that simultaneous release was more desirable owing to the dearth of comedy subjects, the entire selection of negatives, chosen from more than four hundred, were put through the laboratories last week, and new prints are now available at all General Film exchanges.

NEW DATE FOR UNIVERSAL BALL.

Two important changes have been announced by the committee of arrangements for the Universal Film Manufacturing Company's fourth annual ball. The date, which was first set for March 11, has been changed to Saturday evening, March 18, and by request of many of the Universalites the committee has decided to have this a masked ball, which bids fair to eclipse anything of the kind held this season, each member of the Universal staff having the privilege of inviting two guests, while the company itself will have 1,500 specially invited guests. It is expected that over three thousand persons will attend. Grand Central Palace is the place.

American Gets "Happy Family" Stories

B. M. Bower's Delightful Series on Western Life to Be Translated to Pictures.

PRESIDENT SAMUEL S. HUTCHINSON of the American Film Company, Incorporated, has obtained the film rights to the famous "Happy Family" stories. The tales are from the pen of B. M. Bowers and are declared to be exceptionally adaptable to film presentation.

"Curlew Corliss," the first of the "Happy Family" series, will be released in the Mutual service on March 14 as a three-reel American "Mustang" star feature. Art Acord, the famous "Buck Parvin" of the films; Nita Davis, a new American star; Lawrence Ross Peyton, Dixie Stratton and a host of other American favorites will appear in "Curlew Corliss" and in the other "Happy Family" family productions which American will film during the months tf come.

Joe Massey, who established a reputation as a comedian in his role of the property man in the "Buck Parvin" series, is cast in an amusing character part in "Curlew Corliss." Joe has earned the honor of being known as the best free-hand expectorator in motion pictures.

William Bertram will direct the production of this new series.

BEYFUSS TALKS OF ADVERTISING VALUES.

Manager of California Company Says Exaggeration Defeats the Ends of Publicity.

MUCH of the future growth of the motion picture business, according to Alex E. Beyfuss, general manager of the California Motion Picture Corporation, depends upon more care, precision and truth in advertising copy.

The purpose of advertising, according to Mr. Breyfuss's definition, is to let the public know as effectively as possible just what one has for sale. To go beyond this and make exaggerated or even doubtful claims for a product defeats its own ends.

"If a producer has a picture of real merit I believe in his using every avenue of advertising open to him to acquaint the public with this fact," says Mr. Beyfuss. "But let him stick to the truth and hold the copy within the limits of probability. There are far too many 'great and only' pictures in printer's ink that fall below par on the screen.

"The character of copy some of our producers use proves them poor advertising men. Further than this, however, it proves a startling deficiency in their knowledge of dramatic values. They sin outrageously against the cardinal principle of a climatical arrangement of plot. First it is a glowing announcement of a picture in printer's ink and then—the picture itself when seen on the screen is a dispiriting anti-climax."

RELIANCE WINS AGAINST DR. BRADY.

In the case of Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady against the Reliance Motion Picture Company and others to prevent the translation to films of the plaintiff's story, "A Child of God," on the ground that the Munsey Company, from whom the picture rights were purchased, had no right to sell them, after dragging through the United States courts for several months the case came before Judge Mayer recently on a motion to dismiss. Judge Mayer granted the motion on the ground that the Reliance Company had no knowledge of the cancellation of the agreement between Dr. Brady and the Munsey Company under which the rights were obtained. The court makes it necessary for Dr. Brady to prove that the Reliance Company had knowledge if he would continue the case against that concern.

CUMMINGS HAS WAR PICTURES.

Samuel Cummings, who is handling the war picture, "Fighting the Allies," and "Germany at War," reports that there is a large demand for those subjects. He has a three-reel subject designed for an added attraction and a five-reel subject for an entire show. These pictures have been used successfully on the Keith Circuit and by several traveling companies.

THIRTEEN HUNDRED FROM CHAPLIN!

Charles Chaplin slipped into the office of the moving picture campaign for the Actors' Fund of America at 30 East 42d street, New York City, last Saturday, and deposited with Samuel Goldfish, chairman of the executive committee, a check for $1,300, half of the amount he received for appearing at the Hippodrome last Sunday night.

Essanays for March and April

Offers a Strong List for V-L-S-E and General Film Programs.

GEORGE K. SPOOR, president of Essanay, announces an unusually strong list of releases for the months of March and April. Among these, released on the V-L-S-E program, are "Sherlock Holmes" and "Secret Service," the two plays written and enacted on the stage with such great success by William Gillette.

Mr. Gillette's services were secured by Mr. Spoor and this famous actor will portray in film the characters which every stage lover knows.

Another strong multiple release is "The Havoc," written by H. S. Sheldon, which play also had an exceptional run on Broadway. Gladys Hanson, the famous Broadway star, was secured to enact the leading role, that taken in the stage success by Laura Hope Crews. Lewis H. Stone, who played the leading role in the speaking production of "The Misleading Lady" and in many other plays famous on the stage, takes the leading masculine part, in which Henry Miller appeared in the stage version. Bryant Washburn, known to all film lovers, is the heavy, and carries out the part with his characteristic ability.

Among Essanay's shorter productions, released through the General Film Company, are several notable plays. "Beyond the Law" is one of the strongest of these. This is a three-reel subject taken from "The Snow-Burner Pays," written by Henry Oyen, the well-known novelist, and published in the Adventure Magazine. This is a sequel to the three-reel production released some time ago by Essanay, "The Snow-Burner."

This story is of the north woods, and a troupe of players went to Virginia, Minnesota, the exact location in which the novel is laid, where the play was taken under the direction of E. H. Calvert, who also plays the role of the snow-burner. All the characteristic scenery of the country of deep snows is shown. Marguerite Clayton takes the leading feminine role in the picture.

Another notable subject is "Joyce's Strategy," a two-reel play, written by Harry Beaumont especially for Joyce Fair, the eleven-year-old star who made such a hit on Broadway in "The Dummy," playing opposite Ernest Truex. Darwin Karr takes the leading masculine role and Lillian Drew the heavy lead.

Other strong three-reel releases are "A Man's Work," featuring John Junior and Elizabeth Burbridge; "Unknown," featuring Richard C. Travers, Marguerite Clayton and Ernest Maupain, and "I Will Repay," featuring Marguerite Clayton, John Junior and Edward Arnold.

Scene from "A Man's Work" (Essanay).

"The House of Surprise," in which John Junior and Elizabeth Burbridge are featured, and "The Intruder," featuring Marguerite Clayton and Richard C. Travers, and other strong two-reel releases.

With several of Vernon Howe Bailey's sketch books of various cities in America and abroad, the Canimated Nooz Pictorials, by Wallace A. Carlson, and "The Mary Page" series, with Henry B. Walthall and Edna Mayo, the program is one of the best put out.

Charles Manley Dead

Veteran Theatrical and Screen Actor Passes Away at Los Angeles Home.

CHARLES MANLEY, veteran actor of both the legitimate and the motion picture screen, passed away at his home in Los Angeles, Saturday, February 26, after a short illness, at the ripe old age of 86 years. At the time of his death Mr. Manley was a much beloved member of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company at Universal City, Cal., where he had been located for over a year.

Charles Manley.

Mr. Manley was born in a small town in Pennsylvania, and his meagre schooling was procured in a little log hut near the village of his birth. From boyhood he had aspirations for the stage and at the age of fourteen he had his first experience in the theatrical business, but it was not until he was sixteen years old that he really procured a steady position on the stage. From that time on he gradually worked his way up, until he was much sought for by the big theatrical managers of his time. He is better known to his host of friends and admirers as "Daddy," and always took pride in the fact that he spent the greater part of his life in the theatrical business.

Mr. Manley started in the motion picture business with the Edison, later playing with the Biograph, Lubin, Powers, and since 1914 has been with the Universal at Universal City, he and Mother Benson being the oldest couple in the motion picture industry.

Mr. Manley's past work with the Universal Company is too well known to all picture patrons to need any summarizing at this time. What will be of interest to them, however, is that Mr. Manley is the only octogenarian ever featured in a series of pictures, such as Mr. Manley was featured in "The Master Key," with Ella Hall and Robert Leonard. Other features in which he appeared were "Their Golden Wedding," by Frank Lloyd, and "Learning to be a Father," by Jacques Jaccard. He also was the writer of many scenarios, chief among which was "Hearts of Gold."

DINNER TO DAN FROHMAN.

In recognition of his years of service for the betterment of the stage and the motion picture, in which field of late he has been very active, Daniel Frohman will be the principal guest at a dinner in his honor in the Astor Hotel ballroom some Sunday evening in April. Both men and women of prominence on the stage and screen will attend. The committee in charge consists of Messrs A. L. Erlanger, Otto H. Kahn, Alexander Lambert, Brander Matthews, Dudley Field Malone, J. Stuart Blackton, Marc Klaw, John Drew, Alf Hayman, Walter Damrosch, Augustus Thomas, Charles B. Dillingham, Adolph Zukor, William Harris, Sr., George M. Cohan, William Courtleigh, Sam H. Harris, John W. Rumsey, David Belasco, William A. Johnston, Joseph Brooks and Samuel Goldfish.

BIRTHDAY PARTY FOR MRS. LONERGAN.

On Monday evening, February 27, Mrs. Lonergan, of 130 Lefferts place, Brooklyn, mother of the well-known scenario writers, Lloyd and Phil Lonergan, and Elizabeth Lonergan, a newspaper woman, was pleasantly surprised by the arrival of a gay party of friends who were anxious to wish her many happy returns of the day. Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Thanhouser, who, with Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Lonergan, motored from New Rochelle in honor of the occasion; Miss Emma R. Steiner, Mr. Chas. S. Sewell, Miss Anna Bird Stewart, Mrs. Joy, Miss McKee, Miss M. I. MacDonald and others. Mrs. Lonergan was made the recipient of many beautiful presents, accompanied by hosts of the season's blossoms.

Big Writers With Universal

Plenty of High-Class Story Material Is Being Supplied by Prominent Playwrights and Novelists.

WITH writers such as Harold MacGrath, Richard Barry, Vera Tyler, Elizabeth Carpenter, Reginald Wright Kauffman, Paul West and Irving R. Bacon, contributing to the Universal program, there is no reason for any of the players suffering from the lack of suitable material.

Mary Fuller, who has just completed "Thrown to the Lions," from the celebrated novel of the same name by Wallace Irwin, has started work on "The Huntress," written by Vera Tyler. After "The Huntress," Miss Fuller will appear in Richard Barry's novel, "Horns of the Devil."

Irving R. Bacon's human interest story, "Alice," which received such wide-spread publicity at the time of its publication on account of its sweet, delicate story, has been dramatized for motion pictures, and will also be played by Miss Fuller.

King Baggot has also been provided with several plays which are particularly adapted to his personality, and under the direction of Henry Otto should make some of the greatest pictures of his career. His first big production will be in "Half a Rogue," the novel which brought in more royalties to Harold MacGrath than any other of his best sellers. "The Haunted Bell" is a fine two-reeler in which Mr. Baggot is ably supported by Edna Hunter in the leading role. "One Was a Man," is the title of a quaint picture play in which only male characters take part. Ethel Grandin has returned to the Universal fold and will be seen in the near future in "The Thousand Dollar Pendant," by Elizabeth Carpenter.

Paul West, formerly editor of the New York Sunday World, has joined the list of Universal regular contributors, and many West comedies which have delighted the World's Sunday readers, will be filmed. His first was "Object—Matrimony," and his second contribution will be "The Society Sherlock." Both of these comedies will be produced by Director Matt Moore with himself and Jane Gail in the leading roles.

Billy Garwood, just returned to the eastern studio after having been loaned to Universal City, has started in directing his own company. His first play was "Charlie's War Brides," a funny comedy, presenting the troubles of a man who falls in love with "war brides" and faces all sorts of international complications.

H. J. Shepard, head of the scenario purchasing department of the Universal in the East, is responsible for the many new writers who have been attracted to the Universal fold, and his knowledge of books and plays has greatly benefited the Universal releases in the past few months. Reginald Wright Kauffman has been engaged by Mr. Shepard to write a play in which a woman star will be featured. The title has not yet been selected, but it is known that the play will be sociological drama.

FLEMING DIRECTING FIRST EPISODE OF "THE IRON CLAW."

The commendatory notices upon the showing of the first episode of "The Iron Claw," the new Pathe serial, inspires Carroll Fleming to rise to remark, "I did it." Mr. Fleming was formerly associated with the Shuberts in the Hippodrome productions and gained his first motion picture experience with the late Charles J. Hite. He remained with the Thanhouser Company until some time after Edwin Thanhouser assumed the management. Afterward he became associated with the Feature Film Company which undertook the production of "The Iron Claw" for Pathe. Mr. Fleming has had a long and successful career as a producer of dramas and spectacles.

HARRY PALMER MAKING NEWS CARTOONS.

Returning to the particular cartoon idea which he was the first to present upon the screen, Harry Palmer will now devote the entire time of his Gaumont staff to the making of animated cartoons, which are humorous reflections upon the news of the day. This will replace "Keeping Up with the Joneses" upon a split-reel with Gaumont's "See America First" series, a Mutual weekly release.

Mr. Palmer was a cartoonist of national reputation when he turned to the screen with the first animated cartoons of news events. In addition to working on metropolitan newspapers, he had spent two seasons in Canada during political campaigns as official cartoonist for one of the great parties of the Dominion.

Hoffman on Tour

Manager of Bluebird Photoplays Goes South—Tells How He Put Bluebirds Over.

M. H. HOFFMAN, general manager of Bluebird Photoplays, left New York last Friday for a trip that will extend through the South and Middle West for the purpose of seeing for himself the work branch managers have accomplished in establishing the new feature program in their territory. For just two months Mr. Hoffman has been overseeing the job from his New York headquarters and now he goes to get a close look at results.

Regarding what has been accomplished Mr. Hoffman said: "I haven't really had occasion to survey the job as a whole until right now. Of course I have known every step in the campaign of exploitation, but what we have accomplished through able assistants in about eight weeks surely is considerable, now that I come to reflect with the whole work assembled as one job.

"Where we had the advantage over most new programs was in the fact that we made ready the preliminaries before we announced what we were going to do. That, in my survey of like propositions when undertaken by most firms, is an unusual procedure—others generally announce what they are going to do several weeks before they start doing it; we simply reversed that order, by attaining preparedness and then going ahead without delay.

"We made the first announcement of our program in the trade papers dated nearest to January 1. On January 5 we pre-released the Sarah Bernhardt feature, "Jeanne Dore," to the F. F. Proctor theaters in New York, and in the Studebaker Theater, Chicago. Before the regular release date for Sarah Bernhardt we had also pre-released Helen Ware in "Secret Love," and Ida Schnall in "Undine."

"The regular release date of "Jeanne Dore," which initiated the series, was January 24, giving us seven features in our program, to include "Rupert of Hentzau," March 6. Right now there is not a community of any size containing a theater capable of paying the price for Bluebirds that does not have the pictures regularly shown.

"This has been accomplished, as I have said, by active co-operation on the part of our enthusiastic representatives. These men knew me and I knew their capabilities, forming a combination that depended for success only upon the fundamental plan of campaign. This plan has worked out in two months better than we had figured; we are now where we really did not expect to be until several weeks hence."

Jeanne Ivers

OUT of a score of applicants it remained for an Ohio girl to attach herself as the star of the motion picture production "One Day," sponsored by B. S. Moss, in New York City. The girl in question is Ruth MacTammany, of Akron, Ohio, with talent and beauty in abundance. Her professional name, and the one which has identified her in this country and abroad as a classic dancer and soloist, is Jeanne Ivers.

Jeanne Ivers.

Miss Ivers made her first appearance on the stage at the age of five with a local stock company. At fifteen at a "home talent" concert, Miss Ivers electrified her audience with a voice of unusual charm. A representative of a talking machine company engaged her for a year. Miss Ivers sang frequently at the famous Tremont Temple of Music. Miss Ivers went to Europe to study and later made a concert tour of the European capitals.

Combining her ability as a singer, Miss Ivers has marked talent for dramatic work, fostered by thorough stock experience. Miss Ivers is a brunette. She is fond of outdoor life, being a golf devotee, and can hold her own in shooting, horseback riding, and drives her car with the skill of a professional.

Broad Grin Comedies Company

Organized to Make Single-Reel Laughs by C. Lang Cobb, Jr. —Contracts with Jolly Fanny Rice, Sally Cohen, Sam J. Ryan and Others.

CONTRACTS were signed Saturday in his offices in the Columbia Theater Building by C. Lang, Cobb, Jr., with Jolly Fanny Rice, Sally Cohen, Sam J. Ryan and other well-known players for his newly-organized company, which is to be known as the Broad-Grin Comedies Company, for the purpose of producing one one-reel comedy a week. Mr. Cobb, who, it will be remembered among other things, put Ramo on the map, will act as general manager of the company, of which he is the sole owner. Philip Mindil will be the advertising and publicity manager, and Charles M. Seay, well known as a comedy director, will be the producer.

The Broad Grin Comedies Co.

Mr. Cobb will release his product independently of any program and has already signed contracts with many of the leading exchangemen in the principal cities of the United States. The first picture will be released on Wednesday, April 5, and will be followed by another on each succeeding Wednesday.

"I feel," said Mr. Cobb, "that we are filling a demand which the public (and therefore the exhibitor) has long been making without satisfaction. Somehow, the manufacturers have been stubborn, in the face of repeated and multitudinous requests for clean, smart comedy, and have persisted in giving in its place a lot of cheap and vulgar slapstick farce, played by clowns instead of actors. Is it really funny to drench an old man from a fire-hose, throw a soft mince-pie in a pretty girl's face or have a gang of impossible policemen run around in circles and fall over each other?

"We have in our company just the sort of people to make it live up to its name of 'Broad Grin.' Who is better known throughout the entire country as a wholesome laugh-maker than Jolly Fanny Rice, and is there a greater petite favorite than snappy little Sally Cohen, who, with her late husband, John C. Rice, formed one of the most popular vaudeville acts on the big time? Sam J. Ryan, who was for many years the leading comedian of all the big George M. Cohan plays, needs no introduction to the amusement-loving public of America."

MERSEREAU AND GARWOOD REUNITED.

Admirers of the Violet Mersereau-William Garwood pictures, produced by Universal last fall, will receive with acclaim the news that Manager Julius Stern has arranged for a joint starring engagement of these favorites at Universal Heights. It will only endure for one or two pictures, when the individual featuring of the stars will be resumed.

Mersereau and Garwood have started "Some Leap," under the latter's direction, at the big eastern studio. It is a story of ticklish situations, one of which brings Garwood into his room at night to find Miss Mersereau occupying his bed.

The photographer gets a chance to shine, too. In one scene he makes Garwood hand himself a marriage license. Incidentally, the Garwood role is a dual one.

Smoking in Pictures Discouraged

Universal Directors Are Told That Liquor and Tobacco Are Not to Be Used Except When Action Demands Them.

IN LINE with the Universal Company's policy of producing pictures of a healthful tone, General Manager Joe Brandt, at the suggestion of President Carl Laemmle, has sent a notice to directors, reading, in substance, as follows: "There are a great many instances where men in their homes are seen smoking cigarettes or cigars, where the action of the play would be just as interesting, just as forceful and just as impressive, and would get over just as well, if the participants did not resort to the use of tobacco in any of its forms.

"Very often we find a situation where a person takes a drink before starting in to do some work, which has no vital bearing either on that scene or on the plot. If we can keep down this promiscuous use of both liquor and tobacco, we will be doing away with an undesirable tone in pictures. We will be maintaining our productions so clean, so pure, so devoid of objectionable elements, that they will stand out prominently as the most refined pictures of the industry, and the least liable to injure the morals of the young."

George Terwilliger

ONE of several notable refutations of the statement that in order to be successful as a producer of motion pictures one must have had stage experience is George Terwilliger, who, for the past two years, has been making pictures for the Lubin Company—and writing most of these. Mr. Terwilliger's rise to directorship has been a natural evolution—not an easy one, however—beginning with newspaper work, and with the growth of the industry and its opportunities shifting to scenario writing.

George Terwilliger.

For nine years Mr. Terwilliger was on the Dramatic Mirror. Then he established the motion picture department in the Morning Telegraph, becoming the original Gordon Trent. With the Reliance Company he was for a year scenario editor, and when he was not engaged in writing his "one a week," attended to the advertising and publicity. Three years ago he went to Philadelphia as scenario writer. It was but a year later when a company was placed at his disposal and he was made a director. On March 20 he will begin the making of a big serial for a company the name of which has not yet been made public.

During the two years with the Lubin Company, Mr. Terwilliger has spent two winters in St. Augustine and two summers in Newport. To the uninitiated that has a sound like something "soft," but when it is considered that all this time the director has written practically all his own scripts, something few other directors have accomplished, it will be seen the reverse is the truth. As he tersely expressed it the other day: "It's no joke to be sent away for a few months at a time and be told to send in pictures. You write them as you go along, manage your company, get your locations, and do all your own business besides directing. Nothing to do all day."

Some of the pictures produced by Lubin under the hand of Mr. Terwilliger have been "The Daughters of Men," "The Nation's Peril," "Race Suicide," and "The Cry of the Blood," all from his own pen. He has also made "The Gamblers and Expiation," not yet released. His latest two-reeler is his own, "The Last Shot."

Mr. Terwilliger, who is one of the charter members of the Screen Club, is a frequent—and a welcome—visitor to New York, where he has a host of friends who keep close tabs on his steady progress.

"The Suppressed Order"

Picturesquely Staged American Three-Reeler—Impressive Love Tale of the Days of the Civil War.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

TO the author of the story of this film, Kenneth B. Clark, some credit is due, because it contains a consistent, clearly defined plot, and holds interest from first to last, subordinating to a degree the military aspect to the individual, human thread of the story. A capable cast and careful direction have also a large share in the honors which go to the production.

Scene from "The Suppressed Order" (American).

Winnifred Greenwood, in the role of the tavern keeper's daughter, is a pleasant sight to look upon, and has an excellent conception of the woman who is about to sell her virtue to save the life of her brother, when he, overhearing rushes from his hiding place, enters into a desperate struggle with her assailant, and kills him. Playing opposite her is Edward Coxen, with George Field doing duty as the villain.

The production contains some thrilling battle scenes, staged artistically, and may be classed as one of the best three-reelers of the season.

"The Mother Who Paid"

Great Northern Five-Part Drama of Good Quality—Regina Wethergren Featured in Emotional Role.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE latest dramatic production from the Great Northern studio scores emphatically on two counts. It is lavishly mounted and well cast, with Regina Wethergren, an actress of considerable emotional intensity, playing the part of a woman who is forced to sacrifice a mother's normal love for her son that his political career may not be prematurely closed. Clear photography is to be expected in Great Northern pictures and here, rather more than in the average photoplay of European origin, there is a story calculated to stir a sympathetic response in an American audience.

The appeal lies in a picturesque presentation of a thoroughly romantic tale in which there is no pretense of realism and no more regard for probabilities than must govern even the writer of colorful fiction. Granting the premises introduced in the epilogue—the substitution of the child of a gypsy for that of a countess, and the mother's willingness to relinquish all claim to her offspring—there is no reason to question the turn events take some thirty-five years later when the gypsy passes as Madam de Thebes, a clairvoyant patronized by the aristocracy, and the son is a prominent statesman. The plot hinges on the mother's self denial in resisting the impulse to make the relationship known, and on the efforts of Winthrop's opponents to use the secret of his birth as a damaging weapon.

As developed in "The Mother Who Paid" a story that may seem a trifle familiar in its inspiration, is given enough unexpected turns and dramatic climaxes to provide a full five-reels of legitimate, unpadded action. Scenes such as those in the House of Parliament at the time of Winthrop's appointment to the office of Secretary of Foreign Affairs, followed by the bitter denunciation delivered by his political antagonist, Beresford, are especially worthy of comment, because of the accuracy of the settings, the sincere acting of the principals and the handling of the crowd on the floor and in the gallery. It is in these concluding emotional passages that Mme. Wethergren contributes some of the most effective playing in the picture. The son is interpreted by a man who has the bearing and the forceful dignity of a statesman, whereas his sweetheart is capably presented by a most attractive young woman.

"The Devil's Toy"

The Premo Corporation, with Adele Blood as the Star, Makes Strong Drama for Equitable-World Film Program.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

A POEM by Edward Madden called "The Mills of the Gods" inspired this five-part drama and a fortunate inspiration it was—fortunate for the Premo Corporation, producers of the picture, for the Equitable Corporation and for the World Film, on whose program it is to be released. "The Devil's Toy" merits endorsement as a photoplay of certain drawing power, one of the best, from a popular viewpoint, that Equitable has stood sponsor for in recent weeks.

Winning elements are to be found in a somewhat sensational story, which is kept on the safe side of the moral boundary; in the introduction of many distinctly human scenes and in the vivid acting of Adele Blood and Montague Love, also that of Edwin Stevens to a lesser degree, not because of inferior ability, rather owing to limited opportunities. The picture is suitably cast and that means much. Moreover, it possesses what so many otherwise commendable photoplays lack—the backbone of a real story supported by a comprehensible theme, as old as "Faust," but still open to original treatment. Here is an artist of vaunting ambition and small capacity ready to sell his soul for three things—fame, wealth and love. We see how he gains wealth and loses it, how a transitory fame leaves him in ignominious contempt and how the love he thinks he has grasped proves but a mockery. Behind the embellishments of the photoplay—and they are numerous enough—is the story of a man, steadily and faithfully developed.

Miss Blood, playing an artist's model, is a surprisingly good screen subject. Her physical attractions stand the test of the camera and her personality is sufficiently in keeping with the character of the girl who plays an adroit game for the sake of the unfortunate Paul, deprived of the rewards of genius. First honors, however, belong to Mr. Love for his portrayal of the emotions consequent upon a surrender to each alluring temptation offered by the Devil. His degeneration is gradual and only at the very last, when he appears as a bedraggled tramp, does one feel a change in wordly position too sudden to be natural. Mr. Stevens' suitability for a Mephistophelian impersonation is a matter of stage history. Double exposures showing the tempter and the tempted are expertly introduced and by way of contrast, there are several pictures of childish innocence, in which the charming Madge Evans figures with a pet dog of most likable qualities.

Scenes of ice-skating on the Hotel Biltmore roof and a display of fashionable gowns, might be called padding had not Director Harley Knoles given them a reasonable place in the story. Mr. Madden and Maurice Mars collaborated in writing the scenario and adhered to the spirit of the poem with enough fidelity to justify the use of verses for sub-titles.

"The Hunted Woman"

Vitagraph Makes Five-Part Adaptation of James Oliver Curwood's Novel, for the Program of the V-L-S-E.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IN filming the story of James Oliver Curwood, the director, S. Rankin Drew, has surrounded himself with the best of material for the building of a fine picture production. The cast of players with which he has worked includes Virginia Pearson in the title role, Ned Finley as Bill Quade, George Cooper as Fitzhugh, Jr., Frank Currier as old Donald, himself as John Aldrous, and Denton Vane, Chas. Wellesley, Harold Foshay, Mae Greene, and Billie Billings in roles of minor prominence.

The picture has been carefully constructed, securing and maintaining suspense to a remarkable degree. For instance, we are forced to wonder through several scenes of "Joanne" and "Fitzhugh" before we are let into the secret that they are husband and wife, that the woman has been forced into a union with a man whom she detests, and that because of her refusal to live with him upon discovering his true character, she is hunted like an animal. We are likewise lured scene by scene to a thrillingly anxious climax in the fifth reel. A few of the old standbys have been resorted to, 'tis true, especially in making explanation of past circumstances; and still it is so neatly done that we feel no objection.

Scene from "The Hunted Woman" (Vitagraph).

Virginia Pearson surpasses many of her former screen efforts in the role of Joanne, the beautiful woman for the possession of whom more than one man has fought and died, according to Curwood's perfectly probable story. The majority of the scenes of the play are laid in the heart of the British Columbian mountains, breathing that atmosphere of romance and lawlessness that is always charming to the mere spectator.

S. Rankin Drew has succeeded well in doing the double duty of actor and director.

"As in a Looking Glass"

Kitty Gordon Is Introduced to World Film Audience in Melodrama of Intrigue and Love.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

QUITE frequently Director Frank Crane permitted Kitty Gordon to turn her back to the camera and it generally happened that her gown was pronouncedly—need it be added—becomingly decollete. In producing "As in a Looking Glass" Mr. Crane surely bore in mind the probable spirit of the public, how eagerly it would await a convincing display of Miss Gordon's much advertised back, and how little the story mattered by comparison.

As a matter of fact, the melodramatic material given the director in the adaptation of E. Phillips' novel seems to have lacked inspirational qualities, and he was fortunate in having a star capable of carrying so much responsibility on undraped shoulders. Nobody is going to be disappointed in Miss Gordon's beauty, from whatever angle it is viewed; then her gowns are magnificent and her acting suffices. She outranks the vehicle provided for her performance, but the handicap is not fatal.

A superficial up-to-dateness is given the story of an adventuress concerned in governmental intrigues by introducing the hero as the man destined to supply the United States with a superior navy, whereas the villain of the piece—the inevitable foreign diplomat—is determined to secure the plans for the enlarged fleet. Lila's partner in swindling operations in Europe, having disappointed her by petty thefts beneath her dignity, is left to his fate while she plays the game alone in America, or rather with the aid of the foreign diplomat, who finances her career. She hoodwinks the naval expert, steals him from his ingenue sweetheart and then, owing to the redeeming influence of love, repents of her misdeeds. A conventionally moral, if not a happy ending, is reserved for the last few hundred feet of the picture that bring the death of all the malefactors, including Lila. For a final thrill an automobile is hurled over a precipice.

Scene from "As In a Looking Glass" (World Film).

To say that this story escapes the pitfalls of sentimentality and forced melodrama would be going too far, nonetheless it has redeeming virtues in the appearance of Miss Gordon, as already suggested, and in the playing of F. Lumsden Hare, Frank Goldsmith and Teddy Sampson, who deserves a bigger part than that of the maid, Felice. Miss Sampson has a piquant charm that never fails to register, he the opportunity ever so small.

"The Witch"

Fox Five-Reel Picture from Sardou's "Sorceress"—Bustle and Excitement A-plenty Makes Good in Spite of Weak Story.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

WITH Nance O'Neil in the leading role, the Fox five-reel offering, "The Witch," suggested by Sardou's "The Sorceress," makes good on its bustle, hurry and general excitement. The staging is excellent; the acting is melodramatic rather than artistic and the story is far from being convincing, except that for the time it keeps one from criticism by its lack of all pretenses.

For instance, in the opening scenes, the bass drum and the big noise are as important as anything else. A war is on between two Mexican generals. We are shown regiments rushing along madly as in a dream and these scenes are mixed in with firing and cannonading which often blasts the bowels of the earth till the rocks and stones are flung up all over the screen, and great trees are shattered and fall with a crash. This is very exciting stuff; the rest of the picture is not so convincing nor so exciting; but none of it is dull and none of it drags.

The "witch" is the daughter of the general who is beaten and she has got the name by the fact that she understands the use of simple herbs and has hypnotic powers which she has used to aid the poor around her. The victorious general has condemned beforehand every man or woman who as much as helps her. The hero of the story is a lieutenant in the victor's army and he is to marry the daughter of the civil governor. The lieutenant has met and fallen in love with the "witch" and she, a passionate creature, reciprocates with interest. The climax comes on the wedding day of the lieutenant and girl. The "witch" has hypnotized the girl and she will never wake unless at the call of her power. Meanwhile, one of the "witch's" followers has betrayed her and she is captured. After showing herself a noble character she is condemned to be burnt at the stake. The civil governor has melodramatic difficulties in getting her freedom in exchange for the life of the sleeping girl.

"The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary"

Popular Stage Comedy Is Brought to the Screen in Three-Part Biograph Adaptation.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

FOR a number of years May Robson toured the country in "The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary," a farce-comedy of amusing situations and bright dialogue which exactly suited the personality of the engaging comedienne. Many playgoers must retain pleasant recollections of Miss Robson's performance and it is reasonable to suppose that they will be interested in seeing how Aunt Mary is rejuvenated in the three-reel photoplay produced by the Biograph Company, under the direction of Dell Henderson. Then, too, it is not unlikely that they will be a bit disappointed, for the picture lacks something of the humor of its stage prototype.

Perhaps it is best not to draw comparisons, but to take the screen comedy entirely on its own merits. This time Kate Toncray plays the straight-laced, Aunt Mary, who reveals an unexpected zest for youthful pleasures when she visits her nephew and "the boys" in the city; tops off a champagne dinner with a joy ride through the festive white way, and takes her first lesson in the latest dancing steps. If the comedy situations brought about by Aunt Mary's initiation are somewhat elementary they, at least, may amuse an audience that likes its entertainment in a simple and easily understood form. Scenes in a dance hall are gay enough to please even the more sophisticated.

Gertrude Bambrick presents a chic appearance as Betty, the young woman in whose honor a birthday party has been arranged on the evening of Aunt Mary's unexpected visitation. During most of the picture Betty is disguised as a maid, who completely wins the elderly spinster's heart and is accepted as Jack's fiancee after the annoying girl from Kalamazoo has withdrawn her claim. Others in the cast are Reggie Morris, Jack Mulhall and Florence Lee. The picture is well staged.

"Little Mary Sunshine"

Marie Osborne, Talented Child Actress, Featured in Pathe Gold Rooster Play.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IT may be well to draw attention to the fact that in the accompanying cut little Marie Osborne, the star of the picture, occupies the center of the bath tub. And it may also be said truthfully that this little miss of three summers succeeds in keeping in the limelight throughout the five reels of film composing the picture, without undue effort.

Henry King, Marguerite Nichols, Andrew Arbuckle, and other well-known players figure in the cast of "Little Mary Sunshine," which is destined to be one of the most popular of the Pathe Gold Rooster Plays. It is a production that is capable of presentation before children or adults, and will be especially pleasing to children.

The story of the play, which, by the way, is not remarkable as stories go, treats of how a little child left motherless wanders into the street and climbs into the automobile of a young man whose sweetheart has just broken off with him because of his addiction to alcohol. The child exhibits fear of him because his breath smells of whiskey, and, awakening to a realization that adherence to intemperance must mean his downfall, he resolves to turn over a new leaf. The business of the play, especially in the scenes between the child and her foster father, is unusually attractive. For a child so young little Marie Osborne exhibits unusual talent. One of the pleasing episodes of the picture is contained in a dream which the baby girl has, in which a big black bear follows her into the house, is treated by her to a bottle of cream, and incidentally a bath in her own bath tub. The production is well directed, tastefully set, and clearly photographed.

"The Flight of the Duchess."

Five-Reel Thanhouser Fantastic Comedy from the Poem by Robert Browning.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

IT REMAINED for Thanhouser to seize upon this quaint poem for visualization, the story of a youth overwhelmed by the importance of his ancestors, who seeks to revive their importance rather than achieve on his own account. Browning may have striven to show that the seed of character-death lies in this clinging to outworn customs and traditions, just as it would be death for moving pictures to depend wholly upon the past instead of participating in a world improvement which is only a part of our general evolution. The stupid Duke, who dressed himself and his servants in ancestral costumes, who sought to revive methods no longer interesting to the people, represents a sort of ignoble stupidity which now prevents our moving picture audiences from enjoying stories of red-blooded theme and vital action.

Into the castle of this feeble egotist, too weakened to understand that the world is subject to never-ceasing growth, comes a veritable flower of a girl, the symbol of youth, vigor and progress. She would laugh to scorn the Duke's revival of the antique, but she is in a cramped environment, unable to assert her beauty and charm. In attempting to find some natural outlet for the love and sweetness that is in her, she makes a daring escape from the castle and elopes with a man of no rank, of no standing, save that which nature gave. She may even represent the New Art in its escape from what is crushing its youth and beauty to what will save it in the end.

The Thanhouser craftsmanship makes this visualization a thing of value and of charm. The usual aesthetic taste and care exercised in Thanhouser productions is a source of satisfaction, and the illusion is not broken by inappropriate scenic effects. The surroundings are so well selected that they are in close harmony with the mood of the story. But, after all, when all effects have been weighed and measured, the one which remains is impressed by the charm and intelligence of little Gladys Hulette. Burnett Parker is admirable in his role, and the others are more than satisfying, but little Hulette has a way all her own of fastening and holding attention. She did it from the first in the Edison photoplays, carrying some of them over by force of her own personality.

Scene from "The Flight of the Duchess" (Thanhouser).

This is due to sane living and self-control. She cherishes her natural endowments and is ambitious enough to seek improvement whenever she is given opportunity. She is quite capable of measuring up to finer opportunity, role requiring more exquisite revelation of mind and heart. Her future success as a star is assured if she holds to her methods, those which brought her into prominence.

Bluebird Photoplay Gives Vivid Description of the Condition of the Mexican Indian—Hobart Bosworth Featured.

ESPECIALLY apropos of the times is the five-reel production which claims to turn the limelight of truth on the condition of the Yaqui Indian, who has been not alone dispossessed of his lands but maltreated by the wealthy Mexican landowner. Just whether the treatment accorded this down-trodden race has been as brutal as depicted in the picture or not, we do not know. The possibilities are, however, on the affirmative side; and in any case the film adaptation of Dane Coolidge's novel "The Land of the Broken Promise" awakens a larger interest in what is going on across our southern border line.

fine impersonation of the character of the stalwart Indian who, becoming the butt of a conspiracy headed by an influential Mexican officer, is bereft of his wife and child through the cruelties of Martinez and his associates. The story contains an excellent characterization which has been well carried out in the film version. The original atmosphere has also been well maintained, some of the scenes having been taken in Mexico, and some at Tempe, Arizona. In the supporting cast are Golda Caldwell, playing effectively the role of Tambor's wife; Dorothy Clark, as Tambor's child; Charles Hickman, Gretchen Lederer, Yona Landowska, Jack Curtis, Louis A. Valderna and Emory Johnson, all of whom do meritorious work.

The production is a well constructed one and will be enjoyed for its sincerity and artistic qualities.

"Sins of the Father," a Drama of Italian Make—"Denise," a French Production—Both in Four Reels.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

"SINS OF THE FATHER," made in Italy by the Ambrosio Company, with Hamilton Revelle in the leading role, supported by Italian actors, is a fair sample of the photoplay workmanship of a great European producing organization. Needless to say, the picture is finely staged and there are many charming exteriors revealed by clear photography. But if the film profits by certain artistic qualities, it is equally true that the story, judged by American standards, lacks the fast, incisive action to which audiences in this country have become accustomed. Rather too frequently scenes are unduly protracted, such dramatic aids as the flash-back are never used and there are times when the story drags.

The title of the picture and the opening scenes suggest a study in eugenics and heredity, but after the fact of a young man's inherited disease has been established—also the doctor's decree that he shall not marry—the story advances into quite conventional drama. An audience is not told the nature of the malady which drives Alexander away from the girl he loves and causes him to join an exploration party in Africa.

The production is at its best in the presentation of the suffering of men lost in the desert. In an impressive display of self-sacrificing friendship between two men dramatic scenes are acted with much intensity by Mr. Revelle and those in his support. Possibly the good points of the picture will offset the shortcomings in the story as constructed to fill four reels.

Coming to the four-part adaptation of Alexander Dumas' "Denise" we find a French picture of uneven merit. Many of the exteriors representing the beautifully kept grounds of a French estate are excellently photographed and tinted, whereas in other parts of the picture—notably the interiors—there is some surprisingly poor printing. Occasionally the faces are expressionless in a blaze of light while the background for the scene is almost lost in darkness. Of course, it is possible that the blemishes are not in the negative and subsequent copies may be of better quality.

The adaptation of the Dumas work is open to criticism on several scores, all of which contribute to the same unfortunate result—a photoplay that does not carry conviction. When the story reaches its strongest climax, with Denise's confession of her relations with Fernan, reliance is placed on lengthy subtitles rather than screen action. An audience should not be expected to follow so many wordy conversations, unnecessary for a clear development of the plot. The players assembled for the chief roles are adequate, and, as previously mentioned, the production is not lacking in scenes that gratify the eye.

Elsie MacLeod, a charming comedienne of the Vim Comedies, began her career as a child actress. From her stage work she turned to the screen, and has taken many varied roles, from the most serious as in Carmen by Fox company, to the extreme in comedy.

"The Mischief of Musty Suffer"

Numbers 4, 5, 6 and 7 of Harry Watson's Side-Splitting Whirls—Produced by George Kleine, Directed by Louis Myll.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

SOBER writing about any one of the Harry Watson whirls is just as impossible as it is to view any one of them on the screen and keep a sober face. Suffering from rheumatic pains in the small of my back as I viewed Nos. 4, 5, 6 and 7, of the "Musty Suffer" series of 10, I had the unhappy experience of learning what commingled laughter and pain meant; for to watch the merry antics of Watson and his aids forced laughter that I tried to restrain, and always it ended in something that had the echo of a groan. I would, therefore, enjoin all persons so afflicted from seeing any of these brimming laugh-makers until they are well, so that their joy may be full.

"Going Up" is the title of No. 4, and it is just as fanciful, so far as relevancy goes, as are the action and the situations that follow. In it Harry Watson is associated with Rosie Gore, in the character of Dippy Mary; George Bickel as bandmaster of a barnstorming band; Alma Hanlon as the dream girl, and several nameless funmakers.

Walking on a dusty road in summer time is dry work, and Musty Suffer shows that it is by quenching his thirst from the juice tank of an auto. Thrown from the trunk rack of another fast moving auto, on which he is stealing a ride—and sleep, Musty makes a bed in the middle of the highway and continues his slumbers, not, however, before throwing the large rock that jolted him off, on the much-bandaged foot of a pilgrim on crutches. Then follow his adventures in the house of which Dippy Mary is caretaker, ending in love's young dream, the sad awakening from which causes him to dive out of a second story window, then roll backwards, in cart wheel fashion, and alight with ease, in sitting posture, on a passing auto, going at the rate of about 50 per. Watching George Bickel and his band of noise makers playing "Awake Little Sleeper" in front of a deaf and dumb asylum is the affecting sight—oh, yes! And so are numerous other things in No. 4.

In No. 5 Willie Work (George Bickel), Mme. Gayenne (Cissie Fitzgerald) and M. Gayenne (H. H. McCollum) are in the cast with Musty. Be prepared to scream outright at some of the grotesque, farcical exploits in this number. When you have laughed yourself tired of the experiences of Musty and Willie Work in the home of the jealously guarded Mme. Gayenne, you will be compelled to begin all over again when Musty enters a cheap lodging house for a much-needed night's rest. He had a hard time of it the night before, when he slept suspended from one of the window sills in the Gayenne home; hanging, mind you, by his two arms, which had become so stiff that Willie Work was put to unwonted physical exercise in bending them to their normal position. Alas! for poor Musty in the lodging house. He had to sleep standing up, in line with an unwashed herd of human cattle, a taut rope in front holding the said line from toppling over. On complaining to the clerk that he can't sleep, he is assisted by a blow on the head that brings oblivion for a time. In the morning he takes a shower bath in a room where standing room for one is at a premium, and on signaling the attendant that he is through with his ablutions, that worthy opens the door and swiftly closes it, releasing mechanism that transports Musty down a chute with lightning swiftness to the outer air, where he strikes a stooping workman in the seating region with his extended feet, butting him headlong into the liquid mortar that he is mixing. "Look Out Below," the title of No. 5, is evidently intended as a warning to the workman, who is seen floundering in his own mix-up as the scene fades.

Numbers 6 and 7, while each is a complete episode by itself, form a story and its sequel. No. 6 is entitled "The Lightning Bell-Hop," and No. 7 "Bells and Belles." If anything, these two whirls, and more especially No. 7, condense more hearty fun and merriment in their 1,000 feet each than I have ever discovered before in any presentation, at any time. And I mean clean, wholesome farce comedy that no one need fear to take the whole family to see, the same opinion applying to the entire series.

As a bell-hop in the Outside Inn, of which Dan Crimmins, rubicund of face and jovial in manner and habits, is the proprietor, Musty Suffer has one perpetual round of new experiences and unroarious stunts. The elevator in the Outside Inn is a creation that will rank with the best in the field of farce Comedy. It fails to take up a fat man of ponderous weight; but it brings down a horse, who has just vacated his room for the tragedian (H. H. McCollum). The old sliding stairs stunt, so overused about 30 years ago, is provocative of great laughter for young and old. The ingenuity displayed by Musty in providing a chair for Flossie Footlight's (Della Connor's) bedroom will provoke guffaws from all quarters. He simply paints one on the wall of her room, at the proper height above the floor, and we see that young lady sitting on it with satisfied ease. A gaslight is furnished in the same manner, and its reality is clearly demonstrated by watching the dimming of the light by Musty and by seeing the tragedian lighting his cigar at it. The manner of warming this worthy's room and of furnishing him with liquid refreshments ordered up there are such fun-making novelties that they deserve a patent.

The spectator will notice that Musty gets tired walking up stairs or going up in the elevator—he slides up on the bannister! But, with all his ingenuity, he fails to purloin a certain letter from the hotel postal box, though the postman, when he calls for the mail, does not unlock it—he simply lifts up the lid, the hinges of which are unfastened! When the gas is leaking in a certain room, Musty hangs up a basin under the light, and he provides the long thin man in the narrow bed with a balancing pole, so that he may not fall out while sleeping!

When Musty Suffer mistakes the rehearsal carried on in Flossie Footlight's room for a cry of fire, he calls out the entire fire department, the police department and the whole hospital corps of the town, creating a scene that would do credit to bedlam aroused. This scene closes whirl No. 7.

"Autumn"

Five-Reel Red Feather Production Features Violet Mersereau and Lieutenant Percy Richards in Northwest Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

BESIDES picturesque scenery and a capable cast, A. O. C. Lund, writer and producer of this number, has provided a plot of substantial interest. The production is, in fact, built from the first scene to last without resort to padding or stretching of incidents beyond their legitimate length.

Violet Mersereau duplicates her former success as a girl born and raised in the wilds. Her story, in the part of Autumn, is an absorbing one, and she gets her effects without affectation or straining. This offering also introduces to the screen for the first time Lieut. Percy Richards, who passed his early days in New York walking the streets, minus hat or coat, making a vain search for work. He makes a stalwart, picturesque screen figure and is well suited to the part of mounted police officer, which he has in this production.

The story begins with a Chinaman named Hop Lee relating at police headquarters events which happened eighteen years previously. Scenes are shown, dating back to that time, showing the way in which George Arden started with his wife to see a doctor, how he was forced to leave her in an abandoned cabin where her child was born, and how he suffered an in jury which clouded his memory. The child then fell into the care of Joe La Farge, who raised the girl to young womanhood.

This leads up to the search of the hero to find some trace of the Ardens. He meets the girl, Autumn, knowing nothing of her birth, but has opportunity to save her from a wretched fate at the hands of a designing gambler. Exciting scenes occur here, in which the gambler is shot and killed. Autumn and the gambler's sweetheart are both charged with the murder, and a double hanging is threatened. This is intercepted by the hero and his fellow officers. In later scenes the father's reason is restored and the history of the girl is made clear.

"To Have and to Hold"

A Five-Reel Lasky Production in Which Mae Murray Makes Her Screen Debut.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THIS filmed version of a popular novel scarcely comes up to the general high standard of Lasky features; whatever charms the novel may possess it does not abound in dramatic material such as we usually see worked out in Lasky plays. There is much that is obvious and commonplace in the plot. Mae Murray makes her first appearance on the screen. A first effort is always entitled to indulgence and in this case something like a plenary indulgence is needed. The part of the "Kimp Ward" has possibilities. A gifted and experienced screen actress with the necessary personality might have made a good deal out of the part.

Evidently much money was spent on some of the exteriors,

Scene from "To Have and to Hold" (Lasky).

In the selection of beautiful backgrounds the play lives up to Lasky standards. Some of the water scenes I thought were exceedingly pretty. The effort to create and preserve the historic atmosphere of the story was creditable and on the whole successful. The scenes showing the "Doves," some scores of pretty maidens sent to the new world to become the wives of Virginia colonists, were all charming.

The support of the star was fair, Wallace Reid and Tom Forman both doing their best.

In the development of the plot there were few strong moments, though the adventures of the false "Kirby" were romantic and diverting enough. Were it not for the general superior Lasky workmanship this feature must be indeed under M, and M stands in this case for mediocre.

It is needless to praise the Lasky photography—that is a delight always.

"The Soul Market."

EVEN when the story is not inspiring, Mme. Olga Petrova may be relied upon to make a picture interesting. She is such a thorough actress and her screen personality is so unusual that attention may be drawn from the shortcomings of the subject matter and centered upon the manner of its presentation. Probably in the Metro Corporation's long list of stars there is none better qualified to give vitality to the Popular Plays and Players' production of "The Soul Market" than Mme. Petrova, in the role of a musical comedy star of a somewhat different type—a type that has small sympathy for the mercenary amours of theatrical backers and managers.

The argument of this five-reel drama may be guessed from the title. It is, in effect, that twentieth century Broadway resembles ancient Babylon in the buying and selling of women, and the methods used in modern civilization appear almost as crude as those practiced in an earlier period. Primarily, it is a story of the musical comedy stage, for here, one gathers, the soul market flourishes most successfully. Elaine Elton is presented as a coolly virtuous person, who not only protects herself, but assumes a kindly interest in chorus girls who are threatened. Back-stage scenes and those in Miss Elton's luxurious apartment are made convincing. In fact, the plot does not obviously part with social procedure until a wealthy young man, who of necessity has admired the prima donna from a distance, becomes her chauffeur and constant companion.

For the sake of the romance the meeting of these two was demanded, and there is no fault to be found with the millionaire's impersonation of a chauffeur; but one wonders at the discipline that permits him to wander so freely about the house and make love to the actress. At the very close of the picture an audience discovers that several sensational episodes in the life of Miss Elton were only a dream, and she is still free to marry the faithful millionaire. Wilmuth Merkyl plays opposite Mme. Petrova, while others in her support are Arthur Hoops, Fraunie Fraunholz and Fritz De Lint. Francis J. Grandon directed.

"A Corner in Cotton."

The Quality Pictures Corporation, with Marguerite Snow as the star, under the direction of Fred J. Balshofer, went to the southern cotton fields for the locale of this five-part photoplay and designated the period as that in which the boll weevil wrought great damage to the crops, causing the ruination of many plantation owners. While the picture realizes some of its best moments in the presentation of southern scenes, rich in atmosphere and interesting in showing the operations in a cotton mill, there is enough plot and action to assure a safe dramatic offering.

Miss Snow has a congenial part in the character of Peggy Ainslee, a society girl with a decided bent for charitable work. She drops her fashionable friends that she may alleviate the suffering in the slums, and when she hears of the bad conditions in the south, leaves home in order to become a mill hand, thus gaining a closer knowledge of the lives of the poor. Later, by jeopardizing her fortune, she is the means of saving the property of the Carters, which in due time she will share, as the wife of Carter, Jr.

After the first reel, largely devoted to exposition and pretty scenes showing Miss Snow entertaining her stylishly gowned friends, the action steadily increases in speed and brings at least three situations in which the element of suspense is large—Miss Snow in her struggle to escape from the foreman of the mills, a race between an automobile and a train, and the fight on the exchange to acquire a corner in cotton. All of these episodes are carefully handled and the acting of Miss Snow, Wilfred Roger, Lester Cuneo, Frank Bacon, and others is nicely judged.

"The Price of Malice."

Winter scenes on land and aboard a yacht give a truly picturesque quality to "The Price of Malice," made by Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., O. A. C. Lund directing. Hamilton Revelle and Barbara Tennant are the featured players in a tale constructed around the theft of valuable papers from the English diplomatic office—a theft that contains no mystery for the audience, whose concern is aroused in the manner of the thief's undoing by the man he has wronged.

The figures of James Clifford, played by Mr. Revelle and Capt. Mills, presented by William Davidson, are accurately drawn to give a character background to the story. In early scenes we learn how and why Mills becomes jealous of Clifford, his official subordinate, and understand his motive in taking the papers from the safe under conditions that will place the blame on his rival. From the time of the robbery, attention is focused upon the methods used by the junior officer in tracing the missing documents.

Both men, as it happens, fall under the spell of a wealthy young woman, who entertains at a house party and later takes her guests—Mills among them—for a cruise on her steam yacht. Clifford sails as a stowaway. When the boat is wrecked he rescues Grace and together they experience privations on a snow-covered, desert island. With their return to civilization the nefarious Mills is exposed and the picture closes on a conventionally sentimental note. Miss Tennant, acting Grace in her best manner, is given sympathetic support. Most of the scenes are so natural and effective that the artificial picturing of the sinking yacht appears crude by comparison and might well be eliminated.

"A Chip Off the Old Block"

First Release of the Juvenile Film Co. Burlesques "The Divine Charlie."

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

PAUL CROMELIN has decided to help along the children's program idea, and under the cloak of the Juvenile Co., with James A. Fitzpatrick directing a small company of talented children, has succeeded in getting together, up-to-date, four of the "Chip" comedies and burlesques. These comedies are soon to be released on a plan which has not altogether shaped itself at the present writing "A Chip off the Old Block" features Janethel and Joseph Monahan, and is a clever burlesque on the children's comedy favorite Charlie Chaplin. Janethel is sweet and coquetish as a little girl can be, and quaint in her grownup gowns, while Joseph presents the same questionable heroism exhibited by the popular comedian, walking off with the girl after having floored his adversary with a single blow.

As the story runs, a ragged little newsboy at his stand in front of a moving picture theater stands gazing sadly at a life size poster of Charlie Chaplin, when a pretty little girl and her brother happen by. The little girl, out of pity, gives him a generous tip, thereby installing herself in the very middle of the newsboy's heart. When she has disappeared from before his longing eyes, he lies down and falls asleep only to dream of his pretty benefactor. In his dream he becomes a facsimile of "the divine Charlie," in appearance, in word and most of all in deed. In his wonderful dream he woos and wins the beautiful maiden, is pursued by a villian who steals away his lady love, and awakens to find himself being shaken up by the theater manager before whose theater he has taken his nap.

This series of films will be welcome to the exhibitor and to the children, and range from 980 to 1700 feet in length.

Triangle Program

"The Moral Fabric," Five-Reel Kay-Bee, and "Wife and Automobile Trouble," Two-Reel Keystone.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

"THE MORAL FABRIC" is a problem play, not for minds primitive, and it is all the better for that—there are more than enough screen portrayals for those who can only read words of one syllable—but Mr. Gardiner might as well do a little editing of his subtitles as well as shorten many scenes that merely portray people sitting at the table and philosophizing on the subject matter. It is no longer in good form for the characters of a novel to give wordy reasons for action—it is not so considered by publishers—and it is apt to make a photoplay drag in the development. More care in details might also eliminate such an amusing error as the announcement made by a lady in Monte Carlo that "our villa is outside of the CITY." The entire principality of Monaco is only about three miles long and one mile wide, with a small-town population. It would have been just as easy to have said "Our villa is nearby," or "in Nice," the nearest city, to which the tiny principality is a sort of suburb.

There is a great deal that is artistic in the picturing, but here again is revelation of carelessness. The exterior cafe scenes looking out over the water are admirably chosen in all but the camera point of view, which takes in a long and unsightly pier, such as never happened at any beauty spot in the French Riviera. A slight change of camera position would have left it entirely out of the otherwise beautiful scene. When pains have been taken throughout to preserve a foreign atmosphere and thus help the illusion there is need of sharp editing. In addressing minds not primitive it becomes incumbent on author and director to avoid what is primitive in both screen imprint and camera position. The story is superior in many respects to the average five-reel production, and the visualization is particularly so in its idealizations and in the magnificent interpretation of his role given by Mr. Frank Mills. One of the most effective scenes shown is a close-up of his self-struggle after giving up his wife that she might be punished by marrying a man theoretically opposed to the institution of marriage. The theme is strong, and the treatment generally good, but the play is marred by many flaws and does not measure up to other screen portrayals from the same source.

"Wife and Automobile Trouble" is an amusing account of marital infidelity, the old one of married man and girl in his office, with rejuvenated Willie Collier very decidedly in the lead, a veritable screen artist not yet utilized in situations where he would undoubtedly appear to greater advantage. He is doing "as well as could be expected" under the circumstances, and even better. Some of the subtitles are very bright, quite as effective as the action. The release is amusing and generally good.

Both couples meet at the station and, in the words that are usually employed upon such an occasion, "happiness reigns supreme." "Ben Blair"

Dustin Farnum the Star of a Five-Reel Pallas Picture Released on the Paramount Program.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

"BEN BLAIR," in its original form, was a western romance written by Will Lillibridge. The five-reel photoplay version, produced by the Pallas Pictures Company, is a work of even merit. The opening incidents, showing the boyhood of the hero, are novel, human and woven together with strong dramatic effect. The mother of Ben Blair deserted John Rankin, her husband, and went to live with a worthless fellow named Tom Blair, and took the boy with her. He was known as Ben Blair. After his mother had been killed by his supposed father, Ben was raised by Rankin, a well-to-do ranch owner. Eventually, Blair kills the man he wronged, and Ben goes after him and keeps doggedly on his trail until the murderer is brought to justice. This motive of the drama is consistently and impressively brought to a conclusion. The love interest has an excellent start. The Winthrops, a wealthy New York family, move to the west for the benefit of Mr. Winthrop's health. The daughter, Florence, becomes Ben's little sweetheart, the boy's regard growing steadily with his physical growth. Florence is fond of Ben, but when she reaches the dignity of long frocks, she finds that the call of the East, with its social advantages, will not be denied. She returns to New York with her parents, giving Ben a half promise. He remains out beyond the Great Divide until he learns that Florence has agreed to marry a man in her own class. Whereupon he gets inside of his best suit of clothes, tucks his revolver in his pocket and takes the first train east. Finding that the girl's fiance is a moral bankrupt, Ben gives her the choice of accepting him or learning that his rival has been put out of the affair by a bullet from the Westerner's trusty six-shooter. Ben wins.

Up to the time that Ben lands in New York, the events surrounding his love story are convincing and agreeable, but both the author and his leading character are out of their element in the big city, and the picture does not then make as favorable an impression as in the earlier scenes.

Dustin Farnum found the character of Ben Blair easily within his grasp. He was a dashing western hero, but his playing lacked somewhat the sincerity that made his performance of the Virginian so fine an achievement. Winnifred Kingston was wholly admirable as Florence Winthrop, and Herbert Standing, Lamar Johnstone, Frank A. Bonn and F. Burns were members of a high grade cast. A meed of unstinted praise should go to young Gordon Griffith, who played Ben in his youthful days. The lad was called upon to express the deepest feelings of the heart, and revealed remarkable emotional powers and equally meritorious acting ability. The producer and camaraman are to be congratulated upon the results of their endeavors.

"A Strange Confession" is the title of a one-reel animal drama which Jay Hunt is staging at the Universal City arena. Rex Rosselli, Colin Chase, Mrs. Jay Hunt and Golda Colwell appear in the leading roles.

with a keen eye to its dramatic value, Clay M. Greene has taken the two daughters of a worthy pastor dwelling in a small village for his leading characters. Endowing them with sharply contrasting natures—one, gentle and obedient; the other, wayward and longing for the gayety of city life—the playwright has placed the two girls in a number of situations that furnish an interesting clash of character, and permit Joan, the elder, to save Mary, her wayward sister, from moral death.

Mary is loved by Basil Forde, a hunchback, but she despises him, and runs away from home with another man. They are married, separate quickly, and Mary goes on the stage. She becomes a leader of the Fast Set on "The Great-White Way," but she and her husband are reconciled through the efforts of Joan and the hunchback. Joan follows her sister to the city, and pretends to have succumbed to its temptations. This has the desired effect upon Mary. She is horrified that the force of her example, as she imagines, has started her sister on the downward path, and is eager to help set matters right.

The play plods along in the beaten track of middle class melodrama, and will not add materially to the reputation of its creator. It has been fairly well directed, but the work of the cast is uneven. June Daye is an earnest and capable Joan, but Helen Greene as Mary lacks variety in her method of expressing the character. She also employs the same tricks of manner that she used to denote the girl of the underworld in "The Uplift." Clarence Jay Elmer's performance, also, is not an unqualified success. Because a man's backbone is crooked it need not be made of putty. Mr. Elmer's interpretation of the hunchback is entirely too lacrimose and too given to cringing. George Clarke and Francis Joyner are satisfactory in their respective roles.

These will stir to a degree, although the subject as a whole depends more upon its average interest than for unusual dramatic quality. Miss Clark has the role of a Swiss Alpine maid who reads and writes English fluently. The backgrounds of snow and hills and great waterfalls were all picturesque, but they were not convincing as Alpine heights. There were trees, even forests.

Miss Clark has the role of Elsie, a mountain girl living alone under the protection of a monk and a guide. She falls in love with young Van Rennselaer—as it is spelled on the screen—a London sport, who goes to the Alps to get away from the combination of wine, woman and song. If with her it is a case of love at first sight, with the jaded young man it is no deeper an affair than desire. Things happen to prevent the young man carrying out his plans to lure Elsie to London with him. Among these are an avalanche—and it contains a thrill, too—and a fight between the Londoner and the big guide in which the former singularly enough is the victor. Everything comes out all right in the end, though. The Londoner comes back to the hills and marries Elsie, thereby preventing her "little" heart from breaking—a bit of titular pathos hardly adult stuff.

Elsie is a role of which Miss Clark makes much—it is finely acted. J. W. Johnston is a rugged convincing Rudolph, the guide. Albert Gran looks and acts the part of Father Benedict. William Courtleigh, Jr., is not always at his best as a libertine. Kitty Brown as Cleo, the young woman with a past, who accepts a dare to join the Englishman in marriage and begin a new life, stands out in a small part. One cannot avoid a feeling of regret that this fine team dropped out of the story so suddenly; nor fail to express a wish to see the two in a subject of their own. There seemed a splendid beginning for "another story," an independent one, just as they passed out of the tale.

The picture is well staged by J. Searle Dawley from the script of William H. Clifford.

BLEECKER HALL SECURES NEW WAR FILMS.

New film angles on the great European war are presented in a new collection of film which Bleecker Hall, the cameraman, brought back from Liverpool recently. Some of these were taken by Mr. Hall himself, and others are from negative taken by the official photographers on the Eastern front, the exclusive rights to which have been secured by the Hippodrome Film Company, 110 West 40th street, New York, which will present them to the exhibitor under the title "At the Front with the Allies."

Mr. Hall's pictures give emphasis to the fact that the art of making war has not materially changed since the invention of gunpowder, the antebellum opinion of easy chair strategists to the contrary notwithstanding. Despite the modern death-machines, hand-to-hand conflict still looms large in any offensive. Flinging hand grenades at close range; cutting barbed wire entanglements under fire; firing shrapnel from mortars, and combating asphyxiating gases by the use of respirators and goggles are among some of the interesting activities shown in the Hall pictures.

The films from the Russian front show a thrilling battle in midair between the opposing aeroplanes, with the destruction of the German machine by an explosive bomb; the Russian bombardment and conquest of a Turkish Black Sea port; and a spectacular surrender to the Russians of a corps of German infantry. The grim reality of the slaughter that the war entails is furnished by a scene in Russian Poland, wherein scores of dead-laden droshkies are shown winding across the steppes, and with an army of moujiks interring thousands of butchered soldiers in the frozen ground.

BEYFUSS PLEASED WITH STATE RIGHTS PLAN.

Alexander Beyfuss, general manager of the California Motion Picture Corporation, who is directing the sale of states rights on "The Unwritten Law," with Beatriz Michelena, from the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, New York City, is more than satisfied with the progress which he is making. Inquiries for the picture have been numerous, particularly since its trade showing was held at Wurlitzer Hall some days ago, and, according to Mr. Beyfuss, the California company's campaign to date has already proven that there is a splendid market for high class features to be handled on the states rights basis, provided the pictures themselves are really high class and are offered with complete equipment as regards advertising matter.

Mr. Beyfuss is particularly proud of the line of posters which has been created for "The Unwritten Law" by the Schmidt Lithographing Company, a western concern whose aid was enlisted in turning out paper suited to advertise a "Better-Than-Program" picture. The work of turning out the paper was begun almost as soon as was the making of the picture and, because there has been nothing hurried in its production, the finished product compares quite favorably with anything which has ever been done for any amusement proposition devised for the $2 theaters.

General Film Company.

AT THE DOOR OF DOOM (Lubin), Feb. 28.—Robert E. Rinehart, the author of this one-reel drama, has introduced a novel means of bringing about the big situation in his picture. The hero is imprisoned in a huge steel syphon and is saved by a cleverly-arranged telegraphing scene. The reel contains excellent melodrama and is played by a competent cast, consisting of L. C. Shumway, Velma Whitman, R. M. Wells, J. A. Morley and Melvin Mayo. Leon D. Kent is the producer.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 17, 1916 (Selig), Feb. 28.—"Yankees" leave New York for Macon, Ga.; Washington's Birthday parade, Chicago; shipping mules at Galveston, Tex.; eagle presented to President Wilson by people of Colorado; Woman's Signal Corps, Leicester, Eng.; flood, San Diego, Cal.; military training in schools, Tokio, Japan; President Wilson and wife at Washington's Birthday exercises, Washington; U. S. armored autos, San Francisco; native head dresses, Tahiti (feature picture); U. S. Regulars at drill, Laredo, Tex.

HER BAD QUARTER OF AN HOUR (Vitagraph), Feb. 28.—This one-reel drama has no cutbacks. The action is always progressive and hinges upon the natural mistake made by the heroine in regard to the faithfulness of her lover. The picture is entertaining and is smoothly acted by Lillian Walker, Evart Overton, Lillian Burns, Bobby Connelly and Helen Connelly. Anne Maxwell wrote the scenario.

WINNING THE WIDOW (Kalem), Feb. 29.—Lloyd V. Hamilton and Bud Duncan are the principal funmakers in this one-reel comedy. The title aptly indicates the plot. A review of the picture was printed in the issue of Feb. 28, page 1315.

VERNON HOWE BAILEY'S SKETCH BOOK OF LONDON (Essanay), March 1.—Many of the points of interest in London are shown in the first five hundred feet of this reel. Mr. Bailey's drawings have much merit. The remaining five hundred feet are devoted to interesting views of winter sports at Quebec.

A RIDDLE IN RASCALS (Kalem), March 1.—Ethel Teare, Jack MacDermott and Victor Rottman carry the weight of the acting in this one-reel comedy. The picture was written and produced by Wm. Baudine. It was reviewed in the issue of Feb. 26, page 1315.

SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 18 ,1916 (Selig), March 2.—Polo match, Del Monte, Cal.; Sir John French reviewing regiment, Newcastle, Eng.; New Haven R. R. wreck near Milford, Conn.; Citrus Fair, Cloverdale, Cal.; Wm. M. Hughes, Australian Premier, at Ottawa, Can.; Washington's Birthday Celebration, Laredo, Cal.; Ambassador Morgenthau landing at New York; Westminster Kennel Club show at Madison Square Garden, New York; Geisha dance, Japan (feature picture); inspection of Canadian regiment, Ottawa, Can.

THE SERENADE (Vim), March 2.—A little German band, of which Plump and Runt are members, supply the serenade. It furnishes more fun than melody, and the execution that Plump does on his bass horn knocks out his hearers in more ways than one. An amusing knockabout farce.

THE GIRL TELEGRAPHER'S NERVE (Kalem), March 4.—Anna Nillson, Hal Clements, Guy Combs and Henry Hallam appear in this one-reel railroad drama. As the girl telegrapher, Miss Nillson, mounts the footboard of an engine and chases after a crook who is trying to escape on another locomotive. The picture holds the interest and has a real thrill at the finish.

HAMLET MADE OVER (Lubin), March 4.—When it is understood that Billie Reeves is cast for the part of the Melancholy Dane the reason for making over Shakespeare's masterpiece is apparent. Mark Swan is the gentleman who has had the hardihood to attempt to improve the Immortal Bard, and he must be credited with bringing him up to date. He has written a very good burlesque, and Billie Reeves' conception of the prince is in the proper mood. William H. Turner, Carrie Reynolds and Clarence Jay Elmer also shy a few bricks at the Immortal One's great work.

THE UNCUT DIAMONDS (Selig), March 4.—Fritzi Brunette, Lillian Clark, Edward J. Piel and Frank Clark have the leading roles in this one-reel comedy written by Emma Bell, and produced by Wm. Robert Daly. It opens without losing one foot of film, and carries its story along with undiminished interest. Although a "crook" drama, it deals but partly with the under world, and the finish is sufficiently novel to be a surprise to many persons.

General Film Company Specials.

WHAT HAPPENED TO PEGGY (Biograph), Feb. 29.—Claire Macdowell, Jose Ruben and Vola Smith are the principal players in this two-part production made by Walter Coyle. The rather conventional plot is capably handled. Not an unusual offering, but an acceptable one.

THE STRANGE CASE OF MARY PAGE (No. 6, "The Depths") (Essanay), Feb. 28.—The sixth episode of the Essanay serial brings out the fact that Dr. Foster and Philip Langdon prevented Pollock from having Mary Page confined in an asylum for the insane. Daniels, the theater manager, is next called to the stand and interesting evidence is secured about the note Langdon found in Daniels' office, and also about Mary's father. The acting of the entire cast is still maintained on the same level of excellence as in the preceding instalments.

THE HOUSE OF SURPRISE (Essanay), Feb. 29.—John Junior and Elizabeth Burbridge have the leading roles in this two-reel drama, written by John A. Roach. Hero and heroine are both rich. Heroine goes to country home to escape fortune hunters; hero turns up as a house breaker; wins heroine; everybody happy. A diverting bit of romance, with quite a lot of comedy thrown in. The entire cast and production are equal to all demands.

THE INDIAN (Biograph), March 1.—Spectacular scenes of Indian warfare are shown in an elaborate manner in this meritorious three-part picture. The story is of minor importance in a production rich in the presentation of thrilling conflicts. Locations and photography are of the best.

HER WAYWARD SISTER (Lubin), March 2.—Clay M. Greene is the author and producer of this three-reel drama, in which Helen Greene, June Daye, George Clarke, Francis Joyner and Clarence Jay Elmer have the leading roles. A review of the picture appears in another part of this publication.

THE GRINNING SKULL (Selig), Feb. 28.—W. E. Wing has written a three-reel photoplay with a well thought out plot that deals with real issues of life. The San Francisco earthquake plays an important part in the development of the story, and the excellent cast is made up of Lewis Cody, Fred Hearne, Leo Pierson, Richard Morris, Eugenie Besserer, Virginia Kirtley and Marion Warner. Geo. O. Nichols directed the picture.

THE MASTER SMILES (Knickerbocker Star Feature), March 3.—The Master referred to is the Ruler of the Lower Regions. The author of this three-reel photoplay is evidently a believer in a personal devil, as we are shown His Satanic Majesty indulging in a mocking grin at the opening of the picture. The story relates the history of a young girl, the child of wealthy parents, who neglect her and follow their selfish pleasures. She comes to a bad end. The first two reels are superior to the last one. Howard Estabrook and Emmy Wehlen are members of a competent cast.

TUBBY TURNS THE TABLES (Vitagraph), March 3.—Hughie Mack and a vacuum cleaner create most of the fun in this one-reel comedy. The idea is novel and has been cleverly produced by Lawrence Semon, who is also one of the authors of the picture. Adele De Garde, Bert Binns, George Binns and Billy Whitney are in the cast. "Odd Acquaintances," an entertaining little bird and cat picture, is on the same reel.

BEYOND THE LAW (Essanay), March 4.—There are life, vigor and a brave showing of primitive passions in this three-reel drama, made by Henry Oyen from a well-known novel of the Northwest. The Snowburner, the principal character in the story, and his fight with Shanty Moir for the possession of old man MacGreggor and his gold, are worth while. The scenes in the North, with the real dog sleds and the ice and snow, are full of local color. E. H. Calvert, Jack Meredith, Hugh E. Thompson and Marguerite Clayton are capital in their several roles.

LA PALOMA (Vitagraph), March 4.—This Broadway Star Feature, in three reels, was written by Daisy Eloise Smith, and produced by William Wolbert. Its story is dramatic, strongly emotional, and skilfully put together. Its heroine is a young Spanish girl who came to this country with her father, and almost becomes the victim of a man of wealth. The production and the acting of the cast, in which Mary Anderson, George Stanley, Corinne Griffith, Otto Lederer and Jack Sherman have the leading parts, are both well done.

Bluebird Photoplay.

THE STRENGTH OF THE WEAK (Bluebird), March 12.—The personality and acting of Mary Fuller lend sympathy to the central character in this picture, a girl who is betrayed by the man who pretends to befriend her. The strong sex element in the story is skilfully handled by William Addison Lathrop, author of the scenario, and by Director Lucius Henderson. A well handled production likely to be popular.

Fox Film Corporation.

THE WITCH (March 26).—A five-reel offering suggested by "The Sorceress," by Victorien Sardou. The story is not in itself convincing; but there is so much stir and bustle and thunder in it that it will satisfy most spectators. Nance O'Neil plays the leading titular role. A longer review will be found elsewhere in this issue.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

A CORNER IN COTTON (Quality), Feb. 21.—A story of southern cotton mills and an attempt to corner the market, which is checked by a young woman much given to charitable works. Marguerite Snow, supplying a first rate performance in the leading role, is ably supported. The picture is reasonably dramatic and has plenty of atmosphere.

THE PRICE OF MALICE (Rolfe), Feb. 21.—Fine snow scenes are a conspicious feature of this five-part drama, featuring Hamilton Revelle and Barbara Tennant. The plot, based upon the theft of valuable papers, holds the attention, and the cast is efficient throughout. There are some picturesque effects in lighting and staging.

THE SOUL MARKET (Popular Plays and Players), Feb. 28.—Mme. Olga Petrova, playing a musical comedy prima donna, is of great value to this drama, which reveals the darker side of stage life. A few turns in the plot are unconvincing, but they may be overlooked in view of the generally interesting character of the production.

Mutual Film Corporation.

MUTUAL WEEKLY, NO. 61 (Gaumont), March 2.—Views of Canadian cavalry in review, a French battleship in practice work, and a diversified collection of American scenes are included in this entertaining number.

ALL BALLED UP (Vogue), March 2.—Rather an original sort of farce comedy in which much of the action takes place in a bowling alley. One of the funny incidents in the play occurs where Madge, the sweetheart of one of the principal characters, walks in her sleep, takes a bomb that has been placed under her bed and carries it to the bowling alley where it explodes, hurling a group of bandits and their leader into the clouds from whence they never return.

THE DESPERATE CHANCE (Cub), March 3.—This is distinctly funny farce comedy featuring George Ovey. The comedy is without anything of the objectionable sort and is capable of exhibition before any audience. Jerry escaping from behind the bars takes advantage of an old automobile and takes flight in it. At the roadside he is held up by a bandit known as "Parson Jones," who strips Jerry of his clothing and forces him to attire himself in his castoffs. What happens following this incident is exceedingly funny.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 25 (Gaumont), March 5.—Presenting views of Tampa, Florida, its parks, driveways, municipal buildings, hotels, etc. The cigar industry, which furnishes a living for a large portion of Tampa's population, is also thoroughly explained and illustrated. On the same reel with "Our National Vaudeville."

OUR NATIONAL VAUDEVILLE (Gaumont), March 4.—An amusing comic cartoon from the pen of Harry Palmer. The basic idea is found in a subtitle that introduces many of the national characters of prominence, such as Wilson, Bryan and Roosevelt. "They're After Me!" is the subtitle. The Trusts and the Common Men are also represented.

THE GAY BLADE'S LAST SCRAPE (Beauty), March 8.—A farcical number, featuring John Sheehan, Carol Halloway and others. The scenes are short and the interest shifts between the various characters too constantly to get the best effect. Some good comedy material in this, but the development is not strong.

AMBITIOUS AWKWARD ANDY (Falstaff), March 9.—This, a clean, amusing comedy, in which Andy, a colored office attendant, ambitious to better his position, tries all sorts of vocations with usually disastrous effects. His last offense before returning to his former job, is the accidental exploding of several sticks of dynamite. Very funny.

LOVE, DYNAMITE AND BASEBALLS (Vogue), March 9.—A slapstick comedy that is rather amusing. It presents considerable bomb slinging. A supposed count about to marry the young woman of his choice is outdone by a baseball player who demonstrates that he is by all odds the better man. The count is denounced as a fakir and the girl turns to the baseball hero.

PERSISTENT PERCIVAL (Beauty), March 12.—Orral Humphrey and Billy Frawley appear in this quietly humorous offering. The young man employs the old fellow to act as his guardian and the latter saves him from many difficulties, including a match with a widow who has five children. This is fairly strong.

PLOTTERS AND PAPERS (Beauty), March 15.—John Sheehan and Carol Halloway appear in this burlesque comedy. The new reporter, Adolph, rescues the mysterious Madame Z after some startling adventures. The continuity is good in this and some of the situations quite funny. It makes a fairly strong offering.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

THE HEART OF TARA (Mutual Masterpicture de luxe Centaur), March 4.—An Oriental drama of five parts made at the David Horsley studios. Marble Spencer plays the leading role opposite William Clifford, while Margaret Gibson plays second feminine lead. Apart from one or two technical errors which occur in the matter of inserts the picture carries a fair amount of merit. The story is moderately interesting and will prove entertaining accordingly.

ACCORDING TO LAW (Mutual Masterpicture de luxe Gaumont, No. 77), March 6.—This is another of these domestic dramas that is better left alone unless given a profitable and professional handling. The story in question has not been properly constructed, and gives the spectator the impression that the last reel is the comencement of the story proper. The first four reels are taken up with incidents in the life of the parents of the young woman who makes in the last act a brief fight for the rights of a home which belongs to her but which is at that time in the hands of a couple of relatives who claim, falsely, that she is an illegitimate child.

THE CRUISE OF FATE (Thanhouser), March 8.—This three-reel production presents a story of moderate interest in which is featured Valkyrien, the beautiful actress from abroad who has been for some time in the employ of the Thanhouser Company. The story treats of how a wife who believed herself to be neglected returned to the arms of her husband after discovering that the man who would come between is cruel and cowardly. The tale has been told in a fantastical manner, and was written by Virginia T. Hudson and Lloyd Lonergan.

THE SUPPRESSED ORDER (American), March 14.—An excellent military production in three reels, which introduces happily an interesting love story. Winnifred Greenwood and Edward Coxen are featured in the picture, with George Field and other capable American players also present. The story, written by Kenneth B. Clark, is a good one, and has been staged artistically. The period is that of 1860 and the story deals with an incident of the Civil War.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PATHE NEWS NO. 16, 1916 (Pathe), Feb. 23.—Some of the interesting items of this issue show the ice boating on the Shrewsbury River, Jaques Suzanne, artist, and Arctic Explorer with his dog teams, Irving Brokaw demonstrating fancy skating, and several views from the battle front.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials.

LITTLE MARY SUNSHINE (Balboa), March 3.—A five-reel Pathe Gold Rooster Play featuring little Marie Osborne, an unusually clever child actress of three years. The production is sweet and wholesome and is destined to be one of the most popular of the Gold Rooster plays. It is especially well suited to child audiences. The story is of how a baby girl, bereft of its mother, climbs into the automobile of a young man who is addicted to alcohol, and incidentally changes the trend of the young man's life. Children will be delighted with the antics of a black bear that figures with the child in the picture. Reviewed on page 1846.

Signal Film Corporation.

THE GIRL AND THE GAME, CHAPTER 11 (Signal).—"The Salting of Superstition Mine" is the title of this episode of the "Girl and the Game" series. It contains a race with a freight train at the end of which Helen and her partner board the train, uncouple the car containing a shipment of ore, and enter into a desperate encoutner with a couple of men on top of the train.

Triangle Film Corp.

PEGGY (Kay-Bee), Feb. 20.—A delightful high comedy, with fascinating Billie Burke in the leading role. Not only an interesting story, but also a keen analysis of character, a play of the best quality.

DON QUIXOTE (Fine Arts), Feb. 27.—A beautiful piece of work, with De Wolf Hopper at his best in the title role. Most attractive to those capable of realizing its fidelity and artistic charm.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.

LOVE SPASMS (Victor), March 12.—A comedy number, featuring Rosemary Theby and Harry C. Myers as a young married couple. The husband thinks his wife is losing her looks and tires of her, but repents when she goes home to mother. The plot is rather trifling, but this is fairly entertaining.

THE DEACON'S WATERLOO (Nestor), March 13.—An Al E. Christie comedy, with Lee Moran, Eddie Lyons and Betty Compson in the cast. The rain scenes are very good and the plot a pleasing one of the light sort. The substitution of a wooden horse for the Deacon's anmial makes a laughable feature.

HER INVISIBLE HUSBAND (Imp), March 14.—A comedy number of considerable originality, by Samuel Greiner, featuring Jane Gail and Matt Moore. The young husband has a dream, after attending a seance, and believes himself to be invisible to others. The result is amusing. The subject is one of fresh interest.

LONESOMENESS (Laemmle), March 15.—A number written by Lynn Reynolds, featuring Myrtle Gonzales, Frederick Church and Val Paul. A cigarstand girl in a hotel sends a young married man back to his wife and child. This has a certain casual quality which does not stir the emotions deeply, but the natural, everyday scenes make the production an entertaining one.

ACROSS THE HALL (Nestor), March 17.—A farce-comedy of a somewhat conventional type, featuring Ray Gallagher, Billie Rhodes and others. Two married couples in the same flat get entangled in a mix-up, a burglar and an intoxicated husband being contributing causes. The action is good and the number quite amusing.

CRY OF ERIN (Rex), March 17.—A typical Irish story, excellently enacted by a large cast, headed by Francis Ford. The hero escapes from the gallows, assisted by the girl and priest. Familiar in plot, but strong in action and atmosphere.

Universal Film Mfg. Company Specials.

THE POOL OF FLAME (Red Feather Photoplay), March 13. -A five-reel production, featuring J. Warren Kerrigan as Terence O'Rourke, soldier of fortune. Lois Wilson, Harry Carter, Maude George and others are also in the cast. The story is a good one of the adventurous type, though many of the situations are of a familiar sort. The photography and settings are attractive throughout and the characters do appealing work. The action centers about a valuable diamond stolen from an Indian idol, which Terence succeeds in restoring after many adventures. The scenes in the closing reel are genuinely exciting. The development up to that point is conventional, but entertaining and enjoyable.

THE IRON RING (Universal—Special Feature), March 13.—No. 14 of the "Graft" series. In this instalment Robert Harding, the young reformer, breaks up the iron trust. The reign of terror at the iron foundry is the strongest feature of this number, which is not as strong in plot as some have been. Stone makes another attack on Dorothy's life, but she is saved when her small brother starts the Victrola.

BORN OF THE PEOPLE (Gold Seal), March 14.—A two-reel number, written by Francis Ford, featuring Grace Cunard, Jack Holt and Neal Hardin. The first reel has a pleasing comedy touch running through it. The second reel departs from this tone and shows the young wife posing in the nude in order to earn money for her sick husband. In the nude scenes the wife reclines on a tiger rug, giving quite an artistic effect. At the same time this feature seems rather dragged in for the purpose of exciting comment. It will probably pass without much criticism. The plot itself is entertaining, but the subtitles need modifying in places.

PATTERSON OF THE NEWS (Imp), March 17.—A two-reel number, featuring King Baggot, Edna Hunter and Howard Crampton. The newspaper reporter saves the girl during a gambling raid, she being a member of a slumming party. These scenes are realistic and well staged throughout. There is some lack of dramatic strength in the second reel, where the hero saves the girl's father from dishonor, but the story as a whole is entertaining and quite strong.

THE IRON TRAILS (Bison), March 18.—A two-reel subject of exceptional strength from the standpoint of outdoor excitement. This is a railroad construction story, picturing warfare between two rival gangs. Marie Walcamp, as the girl, runs away with an engine, to save the gang at the bridge. The suspense and general excitement are all that could be desired. E. A. Wallick, Jack Curtis and Herbert Barrington are also in the cast. A gripping railroad story.

V-L-S-E, Inc.

HEARST-VITAGRAPH NEWS PICTORIAL (Vitagraph), March 3.—"One Year After Day" at the Panama-Pacific Exposition; pork farm, Staten Island; motor boat race, Miami, Fla.; What to Wear; Anti-Knockers Parade, San Francisco; Motor Speedway Race, Chicago; school children meet James W. Riley, Miami, Fla.; polo match, Del Monte; Chicago society girls in classic dances; French fleet landing army stores in Greece; Krazy Kat and Ignatz Mouse cartoon.

World Equitable.

THE DEVIL'S TOY (Premo), March 6.—This five-part Premo production may be recommended because of the well constructed, forcefully acted story it contains. Adele Blood, Montague Love and Edwin Stevens are the three central figures in the cast. The picture is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

AS IN A LOOKING GLASS (Shubert), March 6.—Kitty Gordon, looking very well in costly gowns, is the chief attraction in a melodramatic story of diplomatic intrigue, directed by Frank H. Crane. The famous stage beauty is capably supported by F. Lumsden Hare, Frank Goldsmith and Teddy Sampson. A review may be found on another page of this issue.

Miscellaneous.

THE IMMORTAL FLAME (Ivan), March.—A melodramatic five-part picture, written and produced by Ivan Abramson. Maude Fealy plays the leading role, supported by Paula Shay and James Cooley. The story is not especially convincing, but possesses the emotional qualities characteristic of productions made by Mr. Abramson.

THE MOTHER WHO PAID (Great Northern), March.—Produced with the technical excellence characteristic of Great Northern pictures, this five-part romantic drama has the additional advantages of an able cast and a quite entertaining story. There is plenty of action, all essential to the plot, and the emotional interpretation which Regina Wethergren gives the self-sacrificing mother is effective.

"THE INDIAN" SCORES HEAVY BOOKINGS.

Released March 1, the spectacular Biograph three-reel production, "The Indian," has jumped far ahead of expected bookings, especially in the New England states, where Indian pictures had fallen into disrepute owing to an excess of poor productions. Reports from exchanges indicate that this three-reel feature in the regular service is being ranked by exhibitors in the same class with "The Massacre," "The Battle at Elderbush Gulch" and other famous Biograph spectacles of Indian warfare.

Thanhouser Won't Quit

Will Not Withdraw from Exhibitors' Balls—Thinks the Idea Is Good Publicity.

An authorized announcement of the Thanhouser Film Corporation speaks interestingly of that concern's activities at the recent social functions of motion picturedom. Mr. Thanhouser writes as follows on the subject: "I am sorry to note that any company sees fit to withdraw from these affairs. While they are always for a good cause they have the additional virtue of bringing together the men of a branch of the industry who seldom get the opportunity. Dating back to the affair at Brighton Beach last summer, and covering the Bronx ball, the Boston ball and the most recent ball of the New York exhibitors at Madison Square Garden, I believe that we have all hugely enjoyed the good natured rivalry for publicity honors. While I concede that the Thanhouser company has gone much further in these affairs than a single manufacturing concern generally does go, there is supreme satisfaction with the results achieved. The gala spirit everywhere has helped us spread the Thanhouser slogan broadcast, and from a personal standpoint I would not miss any one of them on a bet. I am only sorry that the necessity of the work here prevents our players from attending these affairs in greater numbers and at greater distances.

"From a publicity standpoint I must admit that the social functions of filmdom offer one of the best opportunities for men with ideas to secure type space. It is unfortunate that in some quarters the results have not been secured in proportion to the money expended, but that is a matter for each publicity man to take care of with his own judgment. In my case the expenditure has been delightfully small in proportion to the benefits derived.

"This statement is issued on the eve of another great ball in Salem, Mass., to which I am escorting a number of our players and where Florence La Badie will sell autographed photographs for the benefit of the Actor's Fund. The Thanhouser company thanks the promoters of the various functions for the opportunities afforded and the benefits derived."

"MADELAINE MOREL" (Biograph).

Famous as the production which brought imperishable fame to Augustin Daly and established his theater on Broadway as the Mecca of the theatrical world, "Madelaine Morel" is now announced for the screen as a three-part Biograph feature in the regular service.

"Madelaine Morel" tells the tragic story of a girl who from childhood was made the sport of fate. Her father became a fugitive and died in poverty rather than submit to arrest for a theft he did not commit. Madelaine's beauty brought her the unwelcome attentions of evil men. At last she sought refuge in death. But she was rescued by the man who was later to ruin her and turn upon her when her chance came to redeem the past. The climax scenes of this intensely moving drama are staged in the great nave of a cathedral, whose spaciousness and noble lines impart to the scene an air of solemn beauty. Indeed, the entire production is notable for extraordinarily fine settings and picturesque locations.

Betty Gray plays the title rôle with tragic intensity. As her seducer, William Russell gives a fine characterization of the proud and passionate aristocrat. Gretchen Hartman inspires the rôle of the fiancee who tears off her wedding veil on learning what manner of man she is about to marry. To the manly, stricken lover of Madelaine, Alan Hale brings his gallant figure and nice sense of dramatic values. In the first reel little Katharine Lee is adorable as the child Madelaine.

"Alias Jimmie Bartin" is the title of the two-reel Biograph scheduled for release on March 28. It is a quick-action drama developing out of an interchange of identities by two men, neither of whom has ever seen the other. Gretchen Hartman, Vola Smith, Jose Ruben and Jack Mulhall are in the cast.

"The Golden Supper," a dramatic version of Lord Tennyson's poem, is the Biograph Reissue directed by D. W. Griffith. Dorothy West, Claire McDowell, Edwin August and Charles H. West have the principal rôles in this moving drama.

WAR PICTURES HELP BREAK HOUSE RECORD.

Samuel Cummins, of 1476 Broadway, manager of the Fatherland Magazine's pictures "Fighting the Allies," has made some unusual and successful moves in the motion picture industry. Recognizing the extraordinary pictures that he had to exploit, he immediately had part of his five reels, booked with the B. F. Keith Circuit as headliner in New York City. This, of course, is the first time in the history of the big time vaudeville that a motion picture should be headliner and featured as such and caused a sensation throughout New York City. It did not take very long for Mr. Murdock and Mr. Albee to make up their minds, and booked them immediately upon a presentation at a private showing. This, of course, was a very successful move on the part of Mr. Cummins, as it was the only German war picture that had pleased the United Booking Office officials since the war had started, in that it contains real action and had authentic backing—The Fatherland Magazine, and knew the history and sources from where the pictures came from.

Two Thrills in "Hazard"

Helen Gibson Doubles Up on Hazardous Performances in "The Detective's Peril," Coming One-Reeler.

Not one thrill, but two—each of the sort that would suffice to give the "punch" to many a release—are provided in "The Detective's Peril" a forthcoming "Hazard of Helen," scheduled for release on Saturday, March 25th. In both of the thrills Helen throws fear to the winds and takes her life in her hands and it is difficult to decide which is the most exciting or daring.

A railroad detective has been bound to a rope hanging over the track on a trestle and seems certain of being plunged to death when the oncoming train severs the rope. Helen reaches the bridge just as the engine tears forward within a few feet of the detective. Quickly grasping the other end of the rope Helen swings out over the river and by her weight succeeds in holding the detective suspended in air after the train has cut the rope and until it passes beyond.

Helen and the detective then speedily commandeer a gasoline handcar and speed after the freight which is manned by the men for whom the detective was seeking when captured and placed in his perilous position. When they overtake the freight Helen switches the handcar to a parallel track and then, with the handcar going at terrifying speed to keep pace with the freight, she swings a lasso over the brake-beam of the freight and crawls hand over hand to the top of the box car.

It is but a matter of a few moments when the culprits are covered by her revolver and the train brought to a stop.

"A MAN'S WORK" (Essanay).

This is a play of quick action and thrilling situations throughout. Its three reels are crammed with incident after incident following in logical sequence to a strong climax. It is an unusually well balanced play and with John Junior and Elizabeth Burbridge in the lead carries conviction and sustains the interest throughout. While the situations are drastic the parts are not overacted at any time. The plot involves the attempt to blackmail a wealthy man who two years before had escaped from prison. A girl, the sister of the fiancee of the son of the wealthy man, is used as the dupe by the ex-convict in his attempt to blackmail. The son hears the girl threatening his father. He follows her when she leaves the house. Later the girl is found murdered and the son is accused. The detectives, however, finally unravel a maze of evidence which proves that the blackmailer had killed the girl. The same detective discovers the wealthy man had not been guilty of the crime for which he had been convicted. The father then gives consent for the marriage of his son and the sister of the slain girl.

"THE HIDDEN LAW," NEW HORSLEY FEATURE.

David Horsley announces as the vehicle for the second co-starring appearance of Margaret Gibson and William Clifford, a five-part dramatic feature entitled "The Hidden Law." It is from the scenario by Theodosia Harris, who has been responsible for many of the stories used in past David Horsley productions, and is scheduled for release March 25 as a Mutual Masterpicture, de luxe edition.

The theme is based on the hidden law of justice. The author has treated it in a most interesting fashion by placing the characters in familiar spheres and laying the action in colorful environment. The earlier part of the action takes place in theatrical surroundings while the latter half is unfolded in the remote wilds of the western mountains.

The story revolves around John Carlton, a literary genius, and a "princess of the mountains." Carlton writes a successful play, but is fleeced out of his just reward. He attempts to obtain by force what he feels belongs to him and is arrested, sentenced, and thrown into prison. When his term expires he finds his genius has died meanwhile. Embittered toward mankind and man laws he seeks to mountain fastnesses, there commanding a living by operating as a highway robber.

The "princess of the mountains" enters his life and he guards her against intruders. She, however, meets a young hunter from the East and Carlton's past life is brought to light. In time he learns that he must bow to the law of reckoning and returns East, where at last he attains happiness.

Mr. Clifford is cast for the role of Carlton while Miss Gibson appears in the part of the "princess of the mountains." Their supporting cast includes Frederick Montague, Robert Kenyon, Mae Adams, Doris Baker, Marie Gavette, John Oaker and Pauline Williams.

"THE OLD VIOLINIST" ARTISTIC PRODUCTION.

George W. Cochrane's second picture, like his first, is a real winner. That is the verdict of the Universal officials who witnessed its initial showing in the projection theater at Universal City this week.

It is a two-reel production entitled "The Old Violinist," in which Thomas Jefferson, favorite of the legitimate stage and son of Joseph Jefferson of "Rip Van Winkle" fame, is featured with little Zoe Bech, the Universal Company's celebrated child actress.

Jefferson's enactment of the role of the broken-down violinist whose troubles are manifold is superb and the child wonder playing opposite him gives a performance that really is most striking.

Director Cochrane is being warmly congratulated upon the success of his production, which all agree should be classed with the most artistic photoplays that have been made recently at the big picture city.

CONSTANCE COLLIER IN ANOTHER MOROSCO SUBJECT.

In a powerful role that allows her talent greater opportunities than even her initial photoplay characterization in "The Tongues of Men," Constance Collier, the noted English actress, will shortly be seen in another Morosco-Paramount release, "The Code of Marcia Gray." The second motion picture vehicle for Miss Collier presents an engrossing drama of modern fashionable life and finance in which this talented artist offers some of the best work of her notable career, as the wife of a wealthy financier brought face to face with sudden disgrace. A story of modern times, this subject presents an unusually stirring theme, replete with fine dramatic incidents and powerful situations which are brought out most effectively by the star and her supporting cast. Henry DeVere appears opposite Miss Collier in a characterization that calls for great histrionic ability. Forrest Stanley, as the lawyer of the financier who has remained a bachelor as a result of his great love for Gray's wife, is seen in a sympathetic part for which he is well suited. Other exceptional players such as Herbert Standing, Howard Davies and Helen Jerome Eddy, appear in the supporting cast.

"FARMER ALFALFA INVENTS A NEW KITE" (Paramount).

The Paramount-Bray cartoon release for March 16 is one of the cleverest bits of work that has ever come from the pen of Paul Terry, who has been one of the foremost cartoonists in the motion picture industry since the inception of the motion picture cartoon. The story of the release is as follows:

Farmer Alfalfa is feeding his hen. A baldheaded buzzard sees the pair from a treetop, and the psychology of the thing causes him to crave for food, and he decides that chicken shall be his dish. Like a regular buzzard, he flies far into the sky and circles around waiting for the opportune moment to swoop down upon his prey.

The farmer sees Mr. Buzzard and goes for his gun, but when he returns the buzzard has turned the trick. The old fox of a farmer then builds an airship so that he may pursue the buzzard and reclaim his lost pet. The body of the airship is a kite, the power is furnished by a duck tied to the kite, and the incentive for the duck to pull his burden is a can of worms on the end of a fishing rod. One would hardly believe that such a contrivance would work, but it does and the film will prove it.

In the meantime the buzzard has carried the chicken to his secret slaughtering grounds. He flies with his spoil behind some rocks, and great clouds of noise instill in the reviewer's mind that the hen has passed to another world.

The farmer trails the bird to this pile of rocks, drops off the airship and pulls his gun in a manner which has made westerners famous. He cautiously approaches the rocks, and looking over the top faints with pure joy, for the buzzard is kicking his last kick, and the hen is mounted on the buzzard's breast in a manner that made Napoleon famous.

"TIPS," OR THE EXTENDED PALM.

In these days of the high cost of living, the cost of "tipping" is a matter of moment worthy the consideration of the legislative bodies of the country.

In the one-reel American "Beauty" comedy entitled "Tips" no one overlooks the innocent old bachelor who pays a visit to the city in search of an inheritance, only to discover when all of his money has gone for tips, that he is the wrong man and some one else comes into the estate.

This entertaining, laugh-creating comedy, in which Orral Humphrey has the leading role, is to be released on the Mutual program March 19.

"WIFE AND AUTO TROUBLE" (Keystone).

William Collier is the star of a current Triangle-Keystone release, "Wife and Auto Trouble," which he made at odd moments during his filming of a five-reel comedy, "The No-Good Guy," for Thomas H. Ince. The Keystone introduces one of Mack Sennett's discoveries, Blanche Payson, who was a policewoman on the Zone at the Panama-Pacific Exposition. She was first assigned to station her six feet, four inches and 234 pounds on guard at the Keystone dressing rooms, but she was too good to last on that job. Sennett quickly promoted her and she has been active in Collier's initiation into the mysteries of Keystone comedy.

Miss Payson was delegated to confer the Order of the Bath, which is one of the earlier scenes in "Wife and Auto Trouble." This she did by overwhelming her sleepy spouse, weary after a hard night, lifting him bodily from his couch and throwing him into the tub. This is the beginning of a busy day for the comedian. He finds that the tender breakfast morsels are going to his brother-in-law and in disgust he seeks solace at the office with his stenographer. The auto trouble develops when he promises to buy one for the stenographer. They are about to start for a trial run when wife and mother-in-law appear. Taking the line of least resistance, Collier gives the machine to them and goes to a cafe with the stenographer. Of course the members of his family follow and Collier finally yields to the persuasion of his weighty wife.

KNICKERBOCKER STAR FEATURES ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"The Witch of the Mountains" is the title of a three-act feature to be released March 24 in the General Film Service. A drama of mystery and startling adventure in a trail of treachery. In this drama Marguerite Nichols, a charming screen star, will be featured. In support of this popular favorite will be a strong cast including Richard Johnson, Corenne Grant, Frank Erlanger, Bruce Randall, Bert Francis and Ruth Lackaye.

The Knickerbocker Star Feature release for March 31 is "The Home-Breakers," a three-act drama featuring Margaret Landis.

Large circulars in two colors fully illustrated are now being published monthly for the use of exhibitors. The growing demand for these advertising mediums has required a large increase in the quantity of the March number.

Among the representatives of the Knickerbocker Star Features now traveling throughout the United States are: Jacques Earl Abrams, who is visiting the Middle West, including Chicago, Milwaukee, Kansas City, St. Louis, Cincinnati and other cities. Earl Shaw, whose district centers about Syracuse, Rochester and Buffalo; B. J. Abrams, who will visit the South with extended calls at Atlanta, New Orleans and the studios at Jacksonville; F. G. Snodgrass, who will visit Boston and adjacent territory.

"THE REGENERATION OF JIM HALSEY" (Selig).

"The Regeneration of Jim Halsey," written and produced by Colin Campbell and released on Monday, March 13, through General Film Service, is a three-reel Diamond Special of unusual worth, featuring Thomas Santschi and Bessie Eyton, supported by Guy Oliver and others.

It is a story presenting the lower strata of life, and is also a story of the sea. How Jim Halsey, a cruel and uncouth seaman, is finally brought to a realization of the meaning of true and unselfish love, is the plot germ upon which this spectacular production swings. There is a desperate fight between the mutinous crew on board, which is exciting in the extreme. Beautiful photography, quick and decisive action and talented acting all contribute to make "The Regeneration of Jim Halsey" a most worthy production.

SIR HERBERT'S "MACBETH."

H. E. Aitken, president of the Triangle Film Corporation, now in California on one of his periodical trips of inspection, sends word that while he is very much gratified by the results so far obtained on pictures at present in course of production, he is particularly impressed with the Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree's production of "Macbeth." He will review a number of forthcoming releases before returning to New York.

"Each rehearsal confirmed the opinion that 'Macbeth' contains a wealth of picturization material," says Mr. Aitken, "and indications are that it will create a sensation as a film production. The supporting cast was selected with the most careful consideration and no expense was spared to obtain the appropriate backgrounds and costumes. Sir Herbert and his director, John Emerson, have given a great deal of study to the production so that the film 'Macbeth' will live long in the minds of those who witness the spectacle.

"By the way, Sir Herbert and Emerson found that the mere problem of securing historical accuracy for the photoplay was an extraordinary task. The period in which 'Macbeth' was laid is one of the most obscure in history and the setting of a modern stage version is child's play compared with the planning and execution of the film version."

"JERRY'S BIG GAME" (Cub).

Director Milton Fahrney has provided an unusually bright vehicle for George Ovey in the comedy creation entitled "Jerry's Big Game," which in picturized form is scheduled for release March 10 through the Mutual exchanges as a Cub Comedy. The story centers around Jerry, the character played by Ovey, who, chased by the police for playing one of his practical jokes, takes refuge in the musty home of an organ-grinder.

There are some very fine trick photographic effects of Jerry climbing up and jumping down the side of a wall, as well as some big scenes of the Rajah's harem which, with the fun provided by the story and Ovey's characterization, makes this farce an unusually good one. Supporting Ovey in the cast are Bessie Clark, the new leading woman in Cub Comedies; George George, Jefferson Osborne, Louis FitzRoy, Louise Horner and Janet Sully.

CHANGE OF PLAY FOR GERTRUDE McCOY.

When Miss Gertrude McCoy was signed two weeks ago by the Gaumont company to star in its five-reel features released as Mutual Masterpictures, de Luxe Edition, it was announced that her first photoplay would be "The Quality of Faith." No sooner had this announcement been made, however, than F. G. Bradford, general manager of the Gaumont company, received from Paul M. Bryan an original manuscript which he recognized at once would make a remarkable vehicle for Gaumont's new star.

Mr. Bradford immediately wired the Gaumont winter studios at Jacksonville, Fla., to hold Miss McCoy for the new photoplay. This five-reel feature, called "The Isle of Love," is a dramatic story of a stage favorite, played by Miss McCoy, who is courted by all New York. Yet by a strange accident the light opera queen finds herself at last on an island in the South Seas married by force to a sea captain whom she had once spurned. The opportunities afforded the star are so unusual that the photodrama serves admirably to introduce Miss McCoy as a Gaumont player.

Paul M. Bryan, author of "The Isle of Love," has written a great many Gaumont successes, among them "The Idol of the Stage," "Lessons in Love" and, in conjunction with Joseph H. Trant, Gaumont's latest five-reel offering, "According to Law." "The Isle of Love" is being directed by Edwin Middleton. Prominent in Miss McCoy's support are Earl O. Schenck, as leading man, and Miss Iva Shepard.

"DEFENSE OR TRIBUTE?" (Public Service).

"Defense or Tribute" had a phenomenally successful run at the Park Theater, Columbus Circle, New York City; was shown at the Great Security League meetings at Carnegie Hall and the Century Theater on Tuesday, February 29, and is being rapidly booked by exhibitors throughout New York City and State and New Jersey. This timely screen sermon on the burning question of the hour, preparedness, is going, as the popular phrase runs, like hot cakes.

Marjorie Sterrett, a small public school girl, induced the New York Tribune to start a dime fund for the purpose of building a battleship. For several weeks the Tribune has waged its campaign and has met with wonderful success. It has called in all available resources to its aid and the fund is growing by leaps and bounds.

Now comes "Defence or Tribute?" one of the most forceful arguments in favor of preparedness, to co-operate with the Tribune in its patriotic crusade. By an arrangement entered into between the Public Service Film Company, which controls the world's rights of this great production, and the New York Tribune the latter journal has started a publicity campaign, on behalf of the picture, among thousands of newspapers in the country. The contract provides that a proportion of the money paid by the public to see the picture, "Defense or Tribute?" will pass into the Tribune's battleship fund.

NEW PLAY FOR MARGUERITE COURTOT.

So successful has Miss Marguerite Courtot been in "The Dead Alive," written by her director, Henry J. Vernot, that Gaumont will soon put in work another five-reel feature from the pen of Mr. Vernot. "Feathertop" will soon be completed, and then the little star will begin at once on the new photoplay. Sydney Mason has been featured in Miss Courtot's support in both "The Dead Alive" and "Feathertop." In the new photoplay, as yet unnamed, the strongest male role will go to Henry W. Pemberton, since he is the ideal type for the unusually strong part which is the foil for Miss Courtot's own role. Because of the fact that certain features of the plot are new to the screen, no announcement of the story in its entirety is being made at this time by the Gaumont company.

IRENE HUNT IN "THE SILENT CALL."

Irene Hunt, formerly a Griffith protege, and who did some exceptionally fine work with the Mutual, has joined the ranks of the Universal. She played the leading role in "The Silent Call" with Ben Wilson and has been since transferred to Hobart Henley's company, where she will be leading lady of the company. In "The Silent Call" she did some excellent work which will serve as a very good introduction of herself to Universal audiences. "The Silent Call" was written by Scene from "The Silent Call" (Universal).

J. Grubb Alexander, the well-known writer, and produced by Ben Wilson. The cast is well chosen, Ben Wilson playing Dr. Robert Durant, Miss Hunt plays the role of Charlotte Durant, his wife; Frederick Kirkwood is acted by Charles Ogle, while Edna Pendleton plays Margaret Hamlin.

Throughout the play Miss Hunt's excellent work is pleasing, and there is little question but what she will soon become as popular as the older favorites under the Universal banner.

LASKY COMPANY'S "BLACKLIST" ENTHUSIASTICALLY INDORSED.

Wherever the Lasky company's production of Blanche Sweet in "The Blacklist," a photoplay treating seriously with the subject of capital and labor and said to have been founded upon the coal strikes in Colorado a year ago, has been shown, it has called forth unqualified indorsement from labor leaders and those interested in social and industrial problems. During the week's engagement of this picture at the Strand, New York, a great many who saw the production were persons of prominence in labor circles. The socialist papers and some of the labor publications gave considerable prominence to editorial discussion of this photoplay. Immediately after the first performance at the Strand theater, Carl Beck, head of the Labor Forum of New York, called at the offices of the Lasky company and declared that the Labor Forum, and to his knowledge many labor leaders, were already indorsing "The Blacklist."

"The Blacklist" strikes at the vitals of this great problem. The story was written by William C. De Mille and Marion Fairfax and was produced by William C. De Mille. Its moral is that education and a willingness to co-operate toward justice rather than injustice, will eventually solve industrial confusion.

REMBUSCH SCREENS.

F. J. Rembusch, who has been manufacturing and making projection screens for over twelve years, has had so many imitators of the word "Mirror Screen," in which the word "Mirror" is twisted and added to, until the exhibitors often are confused between the real glass screen and an imitation that hereafter the Mirror Screen Company's line of screens will be known as Rembusch screens.

This is furthermore desirable because this company is manufacturing, besides the glass mirror screen, glass transparent screens for rear projection, "mirrorcloth," "silverfibre" in three grades, "crystal fibre," "goldenfibre," "glory light" and "white opaque." During the last twelve years Mr. Rembusch says there have been thirty-four companies that brought out a screen with the word "mirror" in it in some way, shape or form.

Mr. Rembusch has invented a new machine for coating curtains, which gives perfect results in clearness and evenness, and his new screen, the "Glory Light," is particularly adapted for very wide and large houses. Every screen is made to fit the conditions of the house, and price depends on the quality of the goods.

The Mirror Screen Company has never had better prospects and the factory at Shelbyville, Indiana, is running overtime in order to keep up a large stock for immediate shipment.

CLEO MADISON PRODUCES "A HEART'S CRUCIBLE."

"A heart's Crucible" is the title of an unusually interesting drama which has just been completed by Cleo Madison. In addition to directing this drama, which consists of five reels, Miss Madison herself plays the leading feminine role, a role that tries all her emotions. Miss Madison's portrayal of the exacting part is so well done that her thousands of admirers may be assured that when "A Heart's Crucible" is released they will enjoy a real screen treat. The play is filled with action and there are numerous startling situations in it, all presented with a realism that is certain to impress the spectators. "A Heart's Crucible" is elaborately staged and the settings and lighting effects indicate how thoroughly Miss Madison understands the art of stage management as well as how to "hold the mirror up to nature." William Mong, Edward Hearn and Margaret Whistler are in the supporting cast and enact their respective roles in a most capable manner.

PRESENTING THE ENTENTE SIDE OF THE WAR.

The motion picture has justified its early promise of becoming the conservator of history by the large part it has played in recording the great events of the present war in Europe. The mobilization of the troops of the various belligerents, epochal events in which the heads of government and the war lords have addressed their people and scenes of devastation in the pillaged countries have all been presented. Occasionally a real scene of battle or a trench skirmish has been filmed, but this has usually been in the interest of the propaganda of the Central Empires.

A series of thrilling pictures presenting the Entente side of the struggle has been collected by the Hippodrome Film Company of New York through the agency of Cameraman Bleecker Hall, and these have now been released to the exhibitor under the title: "At the Front With the Allies." The new series show some phases of the war that are unique. Handgrenade, mortar and gas-fighting in the trenches, aeroplane battles in midair, bombardment of Turkish coast cities by the Russian fleet, and the disposal of the Russian slain in Galicia, are among the extraordinary spectacles.

"TANGLED HEARTS" (Bluebird).

LOUISE LOVELY, newest, and some say prettiest of photoplay stars, again heads a Bluebird company in the release for April 2. Ida May Park furnished the scenario, Joseph De Grasse directed and "Tangled Hearts" is the title. "Tangled Hearts" is a problem play, forceful and direct in its purpose and engaging a decision that in real life must be faced by married couples, more than might ordinarily be presumed. The wife has miscalculated the qualities of manliness in the first love of her life; deceived and betrayed, her child lives to be provided for. Subsequently she marries and after a lapse of several years the nurse who has cared for the unwelcome child has died.

There is a man in the circle of good society where the principals in photoplay move whose mission in life seems to be extricating people from their troubles. The wife comes to this man and confesses. He in turn goes to the husband and prevails upon him to adopt the child. Right there, as may be surmised, complications begin and on through to the end of the play there are "tangled hearts," lives and purposes to an extreme extent.

In working out the happy termination of the complication, Lon Chaney and Hayward Mack play strong roles, and the women who support Louise Lovely are Agnes Vernon and Marjorie Ellison, as principals. In other roles little Georgia French, Jay Belasco and Bud Chase give valuable aid in interpreting an intensely interesting story.

"THE HOME-BREAKERS" (Knickerbocker).

"The Home-Breakers," a three-act Knickerbocker Star Feature to be released March 31, in the General Film Service, promises to be a good drawing number. The drama moves along with rapid and strong action, centering around the home life of a young couple well on their way to success. Two social vultures prey upon the young people, until the tie between them is about to snap, when the gallantry of the young man and the sincere devotion of the wife save the day, bringing the "Home-Breakers" to their deserved end. The drama is of everyday life, in the atmosphere of commercial prosperity and domestic happiness. Margaret Landis is featured in "The Home-Breakers," and is well supported by Fred Whitman, and a strong supporting cast, including Charles Dudley, Madeline Pardee, Daniel Gilfether, and others.

Scene from "The Home Breakers" (Knickerbocker).

"CITY OF ILLUSION" NEW IVAN PRODUCTION.

The next Ivan feature to be made by the Ivan Film Productions will be "The City of Illusion," a six reel drama which has been written especially for the screen by the celebrated playwright, Ivan Abramson, the author of former Ivan successes. Heading the cast are Mignon Anderson, the dainty star who formerly graced the screen under the Thanhouser banner; Paula Shay, an Ivan favorite; and Bradley Barker, who is best remembered as leading man with Mme. Olga Petrova. Joseph Burke and Willard Case also are cast for especially strong roles in the new production, which will be directed by Ivan Abramson.

"TOLL OF THE JUNGLE" (Selig).

"Toll of the Jungle" is a Selig Jungle-Zoo drama, produced by Thomas Santschi and featuring Edith Johnson, supported by an all-star cast. This will be released through General Film Co. on March 18th.

In the jungle, Ida's horse goes lame. An unscrupulous animal trainer endeavors to make love to her. She climbs into a tree supplied with some torches, while the animal trainer is overcome by a ferocious lion. In the night time Ida signals for help with her torches. The light is seen from afar by Fred Hartley, a hunter. Signals are exchanged and finally Hartley traces Ida to her place of safety. There is a strong love interest in the story, and the struggle between the animal trainer and the lion is realistic in the extreme. An accomplished lion trainer is utilized in this scene, which is bona fide. The lighting and scenic effects are most unusual.

KLEINE'S NEW YORK BRANCH TO MOVE.

It has been decided to remove the George Kleine New York branch office from the Candler Building to the new Godfrey Building, 49th street and 7th avenue. The change will be made about March 15 to 20.

This will place the Kleine branch office right in the heart of filmdom, the Godfrey Building having been constructed especially for this class of tenants. It is only a half block to the subway, and Broadway, Amsterdam, Columbus, Sixth and Seventh avenue cars pass within a few feet of its doors. The "L" road station is only a block away.

The suite selected for the George Kleine office was laid out with a view of catering to the especial needs and on a scale commensurate with the big volume of business handled by the Kleine downtown office. All the departments, sales, film and posters will be connected with each other on the same floor. The matter of a projecting room is still in abeyance.

Spacious fireproof vaults for films, naturally lighted rooms for posters, will enable exhibitors to make a comprehensive selection, and splendidly equipped reception quarters, accounting departments and roomy private offices will give Manager Raynor offices surpassed by none in the film world.

CAST ANNOUNCED FOR GAUMONT'S "THE QUALITY OF FAITH."

Having finished "According to Law," the Gaumont Mutual Masterpiece released March 6. Supervising Director Richard Garrick has selected "The Quality of Faith" as the next five-reel Gaumont feature which he will himself direct. It was announced that Miss Gertrude McCoy would star in this production, but a better vehicle was secured for her in "The Isle of Love." In order to give "The Quality of Faith" a typical Gaumont cast, Mr. Garrick has selected as his leading players Alexander Gaden and Miss Gertrude Robinson. The photoplay was written by Charles T. Gardner.

KENT BUYS "RACE SUICIDE" RIGHTS.

Willis Kent, former manager of Western offices for the General Film Co. and later directing the distributing in the Middle West for the Bluebird pictures, has contracted with Jos. W. Farnham for the territorial rights of the big six-part attraction "Race Suicide" for the territory of Colorado, Utah, Wyoming and New Mexico.

GOLD KING SCREEN BUSINESS GOOD.

E. W. Green, Kansas state representative for the "Gold King" Screen Company of Altus, Okla., reports that the outlook for the screen business the coming season is very encouraging. He states that the exhibitors on whom he has called are very enthusiastic over the demonstrations he made of this screen. Mr. Green has just installed a "Gold King" screen in the Crawford theater, Wichita, Kan.

FARNHAM TO HANDLE PIKE'S PEAK SUBJECT.

With dainty little Gertrude Bondhill, whose work in "The Awakening of Bess Morton" and "Sins That Ye Sin," has created country-wide comment, again featured in the leading role, the Pike's Peak Photo-Play Company are hard at work on the completion of the third five-reel production to be released by that company through the distributing offices of Jos. W. Farnham at 220 West 42nd street, New York City.

"APRIL" COMPLETED.

Director Donald Macdonald of the American Producing corps has practically completed production of "April," a five-reel picture featuring Helene Rosson, the appealing little actress who in a few short months has attained a high place in the film world. "April" is a story of the southwestern mountains. It was written by Clifford Howard. "April" will be released as a Mutual Masterpicture, De Luxe edition.

SOL LESSER IN CHICAGO.

Sol L. Lesser, who recently closed a big deal with the V-L-S-E for the handling of his ten-reel picture, "The Ne'er-Do-Well," throughout the United States, left for Chicago on Saturday, for a conference with Colonel W. N. Selig. This trip will result in a big deal which Mr. Lesser is negotiating, but which cannot be made public at this time.

Joseph De Grasse is at work on the production of a five-reel feature by Ida May Park entitled "The Full Cup." Louise Lovely and Lon Chaney appear in the leading roles. Lule Warrenton, Marjorie Ellison, Hayward Mack and Jay Belasco appear in the supporting cast.

"The One-Eyed God" is the name of the first picture to be completed by Lois Meredith, at the Balboa studio. It is a bizzarre story of the influence of the Far East, in five reels. Featured with Miss Meredith in the production is William Conklin. Harry Harvey directed it.

Love, intrigue, diplomacy and American grit compromise the chief elements of the plot in the Mutual Masterpicture De Luxe Edition, "True Nobility," a five-act modern drama of the West. This is an unusual photoplay with an exceptional cast which includes E. Forrest Taylor, Helene Rosson, Eugenia Forde and other well-known film favorites.

Notes of the Trade

ROY CLEMENTS is staging at Universal City another of his one-reel Joker comedies, featuring Victor Potel. The story will be released in one-reel and the supporting cast will be composed of Jane Bernoudy, Eileen Sedgwick and Ed. Sedgwick. The film is to be released under the title "Lily White and Centerville."

Henry King, the Balboa Star, has just finished a screen version of "The Strugglers." This was originally a play produced by H. M. Horkheimer, on the stage, with considerable success, several years ago. Its atmosphere is western.

Under the direction of Lloyd Carleton, Hobart Bosworth is rapidly drawing near the final scene in the production of F. McGrew Willis' film version of Clyde Fitch's well-known drama of the legitimate stage, "The Way of the World." Gretchen Lederer, Dorothy Davenport and Orin Johnson appear in the supporting cast.

Hearing On Film Bills

Massachusetts Legislative Committee on Mechanical Affairs Holds Public Hearing on the "Thirty Minute" Bill and "Twenty-Five Minute" Bill—Both Sides Discuss Matter With Some Warmth.

By William M. Flynn, Boston Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

BOSTON, Mass.—The long expected clash between the vaudeville and moving picture interests of Massachusetts over the "thirty" and "twenty-five" minute moving picture bills took place on Tuesday, Feb. 29, before the legislative committee on mercantile affairs at the State House.

The hearing room was jammed with exchange managers, film salesmen, exhibitors, operators and others connected with the various departments of the moving picture industry to say nothing of a host of small time vaudeville performers, booking agents and stage hands augmented by state police officials, representatives of the Fire Prevention Commissioner and a sprinkling of the general public and press.

In point of numbers it was one of the largest hearings of the year on Beacon Hill and the spirit displayed by the film men and the performers towards each other was about as friendly as that of the Germans and the Allies. However, nobody threw a chair or attempted to lend force to his argument by physical violence and the hearing passed off with nothing more demonstrative than a few jeers from the vaudeville side of the room in answer to some of the remarks of the counsel for the moving picture interests.

The Two Bills.

Rep. Charles "Sandy" Chapman of Cambridge, the father of the "thirty" minute bill and the hope of the vaudeville interests, conducted the proponents' side of the case. Rep. Chapman was garbed in a tuxedo and after firing the opening gun in favor of the bill introduced the other speakers. On account of the similarity of the bills both measures were taken up by the committee together and the same arguments delivered for or against one bill were also directed at the other.

The Chapman bill provides that moving pictures shall not be shown for more than thirty consecutive minutes without an intermission of at least ten minutes during which time some other form of entertainment may be furnished. The other bill prohibits the exhibition of moving pictures for more than twenty-five minutes without an intermission of at least eight minutes. The assumed purpose of both bills is to supply more opportunities to work to the small time vaudeville turns who claim their avenues of revenue have been materially decreased since the advent of the big five and six reel feature film productions.

"I introduced this bill in the interests of the physical, moral and financial welfare of the community," declared Rep. Chapman in opening the fight in favor of the "thirty" minute petition. "There have been cases where the optic nerves have been shattered by the continuous exhibition of moving picture films for long periods of time and it is the theory of the acclesiasts that darkened theaters during these long intervals do not have a tendency to improve morals.

The Film Men's Side.

The film men's side of the case was presented by Attorneys Harry W. James and Hiram E. Miller, counsel for the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of Massachusetts, Inc., both of whom presented a convincing argument against each of the bills. Although the room contained scores of men directly connected with the moving picture business none of them were called upon to testify. Rep. George E. Curran of Boston, however spoke in opposition to the proposed legislation and Reps. Joseph M. Levenson and Robert J. Ware were also listed among the opponents.

The two attorneys sent several verbal shots into the ranks of the proponents in reference to the motives that actuated the bills and in return were greeted with outbursts of derisive laughter from the vaudevillians from time to time during the course of the hearing.

Attorney James told the members of the committee he was representing the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League with a membership of 130 to 140 proprietors of motion picture houses in Massachusetts who were unanimously opposed to the bills before the committee. The attorney said that there has got to be some policy pursued in the matter of legislation that is fair to the persons who invest their time and money as well as it is to the cause of labor.

It's an Old Story.

"Every year there is a petition brought in here providing for an intermission in the exhibition of moving pictures anywhere from five to thirty minutes," he declared. But nobody has ever been brought here to say that his eyesight has been destroyed by looking at films or that he was disgusted by their length."

Attorney Miller followed his other counsel and refuted many of the arguments advanced by the proponents and at the same time gave the members of the committee an insight on the trials of those connected with the moving picture industry and the conditions with which they have to contend.

"No other state in the Union has a law such as is proposed by these petitions," he said. "Massachusetts had one from 1908 until 1914 when it was repealed. The moving picture industry has outgrown it and any such legislation would seriously interfere with its advancement. The manufacturers do not make films for one state. They are made to be used throughout the country without any reference to intermissions and if this petition should be enacted into law it will mean the practical destruction of the industry in Massachusetts.

"The exhibitors would be compelled to show their films in relays. They would have to chop off a reel probably in the most exciting part of a scene and it would be difficult for the patrons to pick up the thread of the story when the photo-play was resumed. National legislation would be less mischievous. A national law would place the whole country on the same basis but there is no general demand for this legislation and it is unnecessary.

Demand for Vaudeville Has Increased.

"In spite of what has been told you the demand for vaudeville has increased in the last six or eight years. There is plenty of work for good acts and this labor talk is foolish. The drivers of the old time stage coaches might just as well protest against the advance of the railroads or a delegation of messenger boys would have just as much ground for coming up here and ask for legislation to do away with the telephone.

"I presume it would be possible to reduce the 'Birth of a Nation' or the 'Battle Cry of Peace' into 2,000 feet of film but to do so would be to destroy an artistic production. If the vaudeville people have lost the patronage of the public it is something they have inflicted upon themselves."

Rep. Levenson said that what the moving picture industry may have taken away from some occupations it has more than made up in others.

WANT SPECIAL SHOWS.

In Augusta, Maine, a Committee Is Preparing Program for Children.

By J. P. Flanagan, Maine (Bangor) Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

AUGUSTA, ME.—The Parent-Teacher Association of Augusta has been conferring with managers of Augusta moving picture houses with a view to securing shows that will be suitable for children.

The association says that many of the film dramas of the present are not adapted to the child either in plot or length, and others, though classic, are such that a thoughtful parent would hesitate before taking his boy or girl to see them.

A committee has been appointed to arrange for Saturday morning moving picture performances, four of which have been given, and none have been satisfactory to either manager or committee as a film program for children. This has not been the fault of any party concerned. Films such as are desired are hard to get on short notice and films such as are used in other cities for the purpose cost about $20 rental for a performance, which is too high.

However, it is hoped to secure a program that will prove mutually satisfactory to both parents and managers.

Bangor, Me.—Walter J. J. W. Allen of the Mount Vernon house, Mount Vernon, has arranged for Universal service at his house, which is to be open one night a week.

TRIANGLE'S NEW OFFICES.

Buffalo Branch Under Manager George A. Hickey in New Quarters.

By Billy Bison, Buffalo Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Manager George A. Hickey joined the forces of the Triangle last August and opened the Triangle exchange in Buffalo at 86-88 Exchange street. He can be found there any day up to 5.30 in the evening. The exchange controls the whole building, which, by the way, is said to surpass in harmonious blending and neatness many of the best film exchanges in the country.

Mr. Hickey's private office is elaborately fitted up with rugs and mahogany fixtures. Large photographs of Triangle stars adorn the walls. The general offices for his staff are spacious, well lighted and well ventilated. At the rear are roomy quarters for his shipping, poster and film departments. William E. Wisten is the Triangle road man and George L. Allmart has charge of the office work. "Quick service is what we feature," said Mr. Hickey, "and our location right across the street from all the express offices and the Exchange Street railway station, is one of our biggest advantages.

Mr. Hickey is only thirty-five. He started at the bottom in order to learn the business from all angles. He has been operator, manager, owner; has sold film on the road, and finally landed his present position with the Triangle. He began as an actor; but invested in a house in Rutland, Vt. Some of the houses which Mr. Hinkey has leased or managed are the Richardson, at Oswego, N. Y.; Lowville opera house, at Lowville, N. Y.; Carthage opera house, at Carthage, N. Y.; Gardner opera house, at Gardner, Mass.; Academy of Music, at Haverhill, Mass.; and the Hippodrome at Syracuse, N. Y.

After spending several years learning the picture business from the owner and manager angle, Mr. Hickey accepted a position with the Warner Feature Film Company and took over their Portland, Me., office. He then went to the World Film in Boston and from there to the Masterpicture department of the Mutual. His excellent showing in that office led to an offer from the Triangle company.

Daniel Savage Goes to Paramount.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Daniel J. Savage has resigned as manager of the General Film in the Buffalo territory, to take immediate charge of the Paramount Service in Buffalo and Syracuse. The location of his headquarters in this city and the names of the members of his staff will be announced later. He has been manager of the General Film here for the past two years, and previously occupied the same position with the Mutual in this city.

In point of service Mr. Savage is the oldest film man in Buffalo. He handled Licensed pictures here long before the formation of the General Co. He is an energetic worker, a thorough business man, and has the confidence of every exhibitor in this territory.

A United Film Conference.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Fred B. Murphy, president of the United Film Service, recently visited his Buffalo branch.

"I have just returned from a conference which I had in Albany with all my branch managers and road solicitors," said Mr. Murphy. "The following were present: William M. White, manager Bangor, Me., branch; Samuel Moscow, manager Boston branch; William O'Brien, manager Springfield, Mass., branch; William H. Lawrence, manager Albany branch; Charles H. Barolet, manager Syracuse branch; H. E. Hughes, manager Buffalo branch; Joseph Kessel, district manager; E. B. Connelly, Maurice Lobel, William H. Nolan, special representatives. The purpose of the conference was to decide on our policy for the coming year. We have the only independent exchanges that release one, two and three-reel films in New York and New England. We have made a special department of children and educational pictures."

Mr. Murphy was made an honorary member of the Buffalo Screen Club.

Christoffers Got Busy.

Buffalo exhibitors "sat up and took notice" when it was officially announced by G. H. Christoffers, manager of the Buffalo branch of the Mutual, that Charlie Chaplin had signed a contract for his exclusive appearance in the Mutual releases. On receipt of official word regarding the contract Mr. Christoffers had the telegram containing the news reproduced on his letter-heads. These he sent to hundreds of exhibitors in this territory and in response to his quick action he received many replies from those greately interested in the proposition.

Reports on Sunday Shows

New Jersey Senate Committee Reports Unfavorably on Egan Sunday Legislation Bills—J. M. Binder of the Motion Picture Board of Trade Presents 30,000 Name Petition—Others Make Pleas for Sabbath Pictures.

By Jacob J. Ralter, Newark Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

TRENTON, N. J.—The Senate Committee reported adversely Tuesday, Feb. 29, on the bills introduced by Senator Egan, of Hudson, for the legalization of Sunday picture shows and other amusements. The action created little surprise, as it was generally known after the hearing that there was scarcely any chance for the passage of the two bills, Senate 185 and 186.

Jacob M. Binder, of the Motion Picture Board of Trade, presented a petition which he claimed contained the signatures of over 30,000 film fans throughout the state, favoring the bills. He pointed out the necessity of changing the present blue laws, which were antique and almost obsolete. He further pointed out the edueational value of the screen, and said that clergymen everywhere were using the screen in conjunction with their church work.

Recorder W. Eugene Turton, of Irvington, N. J., declared that there was nothing in the legalizing of Sunday shows to prevent the going to church of any individual. The proposed laws, he pointed out, would permit the working man to enjoy the amusements on Sunday, in many cases the sole day free from work. The Recorder went on to argue that the opening of shows on Sunday would remedy the present high intemperance. He said Sunday sports, theaters and picture shows would have a good effect on the liquor traffic.

Director of Safety Arrowsmith, of Long Branch, ridiculed the present blue laws, as there arose much confusion over the question. He said that in one city it was legitimate to have Sunday amusements, while in another city the same amusements would be illegal. He stated further that Newark had Sunday baseball, cycling, and moving picture shows. Another speaker who spoke along the lines of Mr. Arrowsmith was Henry F. Hilfers, of Newark, representing the laboring classes. The need of Sunday amusements for working men was emphasized by Mr. Hilfers.

The adverse report has not dampened the spirits of the Jersey exhibitors, who will make the Sunday question an issue again next year. Dr. C. H. Hespe, president of the Hudson County Exhibitors' Association, said after the report had been made known, "We shall start right in now to renew our campaign for next year. We are going to extend our organization and we hope to be a power at the next election.

"Nation" Film Passed.

Morristown, N. J.—In accordance with his decision in other cases, Vice-Chancellor Howell on March 1 restrained the town officials of this place from interfering with Griffith's "Birth of a Nation," advertised to be shown here at the Park theater, March 2, 3 and 4. The Town Council had previously served notice on James J. Lyons, owner of the theater, that the film would not be permitted to be exhibited here. If the pictures were shown, Mr Lyons was warned that the license for his theater would be taken away, and he would have to close down.

Irving Theater Sold.

Irvington, N. J.—The Irving theater, Springfield avenue, Irvington, has been taken over by Samuel Singer. Several changes in the policy of managing it have been made in the theater.

Lad Causes Panic.

West Hoboken, N. J.—Because Freddie Raffo, 14 years old, did not have the price of admission to go into a picture show, he decided to have a little private performance all his own. So, with all the power of his lungs Freddie shouted "Fire!" Immediately a wild stampede of the 500 men, women and children in the Spring theater, 409 Spring street, started, and, notwithstanding the reassuring tone of Manager Nicoletti, who mounted the stage and tried to assure the struggling mass of humanity that surged through the exits that there was no fire, several of the people were painfully bruised. The boy was arrested and paroled in the custody of his parents.

Tuberculosis Film Success.

Newark, N. J.—"The Lone Game," an educational film produced by the Edison studio from the book by Thomas Galbreath for the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, made a decided hit when shown at Newark theaters during the week of Feb. 28 to March 4. The film was shown at the Goodwin theater, Strand theater and Paramount theater. It was shown under the auspices of the Newark Anti-Tuberculosis Association. Besides its educational value, the book has all the interests of a gripping motion picture drama.

Many Special Programs

North Carolina Exhibitors Responding to Recent Suggestions of Delegates to Convention of Federation of Women's Clubs in Shelby—Many Theaters Working with Local Clubs for Children's Shows.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CHARLOTTE, N. C.—There is a movement all over the State for the presentation of films on Saturday mornings of a nature suitable for children only. This campaign was started by the delegates to the recent council of the State Federation of Women's Clubs, held at Shelby.

The theater managers were quick to take up the plan as proposed by the ladies. In Asheville, H. G. McFarland, assistant booking manager for the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, is working with the several clubs in that city; in Charlotte, Otto Haas, manager of the Ottoway theater, and N. P. Morrow, of the Broadway, are working with a committee the chairman of which was appointed at a public meeting held recently in that place, in Greensboro, Manager Pryor, of the Elm theater, and Manager Schofield, of the Bijou, have agreed to run such shows, and in other places throughout the State similar action has been taken by up-to-date theater managers.

HOWARD-WELLS CORPORATION.

Amusement Firm Takes Over Academy of Music—Incorporates.

Wilmington, N. C.—Howard & Wells have recently secured the control of the Academy of Music in Wilmington, taking over the sub-lease under which that theater was operated by S. A. Lynch, of Asheville. The theater was originally leased by Mrs. S. A. Schloss, whose title thereto expires in 1919. This places all of Wilmington's amusement houses in their control as they recently leased the Grand and Victoria for a period of fifteen years from J. M. Solky and are the owners of the Bijou and Royal theaters.

Closely following this announcement comes the news that a certificate of incorporation of the Howard-Wells Amusement Company has been forwarded to the Secretary of State of North Carolina. This company is to take over the Royal, Grand, Victoria and Bijou theaters and the Academy of Music. Its maximum capital stock is placed at $100,000 and the company starts with a paid in capital of $10,000 divided into ten shares of a par value of $1,000. The incorporators are James Howard, Percy W. Wells, W. F. Jones, A. O. Schuster and Carl B. Rehder.

Messrs Howard and Wells have been in the theatrical business in Wilmington for the past ten years, during which time they have acquired an enviable reputation, and their success has been most remarkable. The start was made at the Bijou in a modest sort of way, now, as previously stated, they control the entire amusement business of Wilmington.

George W. Bailey, who for the past five years has been manager of the Academy of Music, will retain that position under the new lessees and will also look after the Victoria theater which is to run vaudeville. Mr. Bailey is well liked and the fact that he is to remain at the house is a matter of satisfaction to his friends.

NEW HOUSE FOR GOLDSBORO.

Goldsboro, N. C.—R. A. Mason, of the Acme theater, in Goldsboro, has caused work to be started on the construction of a new house in that place which will have a seating capacity of slightly more than seven hundred people. While Mr. Mason was in Greensboro attending the convention of the Exhibitors' League of North Carolina recently he entered into arrangements for the furnishing of a modern ventilating system, for the installation of an up-to-date musical instrument, and for the decorating of the house. Mr. Mason is an old-time film man and was formerly manager of the Atlanta branch office of the World Film Corporation.

AARONSON & BROWN TO BUILD.

Raleigh, N. C.—Aaronson & Brown, pioneers in the film business of North Carolina have commenced work on the erection of a new theater on the site of the Crystal, which was burned down at the time of the destruction of the big newspaper plant operated in Raleigh by Secretary of the Navy Daniels. According to the plans prepared for the construction, this house is to be one of the real show places of the State. It is to be modern in every respect and will be of a size that will comfortably seat more than seven hundred people.

Not only are they pioneers but they are really magnates for they now own the Alamo, where feature motion picture exhibitions are given; the Grand which runs musical comedies, and they control the Academy where road shows are presented.

FILMS SCORE AGAIN.

Rocky Mount, N. C.—The Grand theater at Rocky Mount has discontinued vaudeville and tabloid shows and now presents a very excellent program of feature productions at an admission charge of fifteen cents. Airington Bros., who operate this house report that the two weeks' trial of pictures has proven very satisfactory. They are live wires, believe in plenty of advertising and good pictures, and they cannot go far wrong. They also operate the Alamo where serials and regular service films are shown.

REMODELING WELDON THEATER

Weldon, N. C.—Batchelor Bros., are remodeling the Opera House at Weldon. They have bought new projection machines and have installed a motor generator so as to have direct current. A beautiful electric sign of the flasher type has been secured and will be placed in front of the theater.

WASHINGTON NEWS LETTER.

Herbert M. Osborn Moves to Philadelphia.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Herbert M. Osborn, manager of the local exchange of Pathe, Inc., has gone to Philadelphia to assume charge of the Pathe exchange in that city. Motion picture exhibitors and exchangemen alike, while wishing every success are expressing their regrets at parting company with a man who has won their esteem and friendship.

Mr. Osborn, in point of years, is one of the youngest men among the exchange managers. He entered the employ of the General Film Company as bookkeeper and cashier on May 15, 1912. He made good from the start and when S. J. Mayer assumed the management of the General Film office, Mr. Osborn became his assistant. In May, 1914, he joined C. L. Worthington as assistant manager of the Eclectic film exchange which the former was opening and when, six months later, Mr. Worthington severed his connection with this concern, Mr. Osborn took his position. Later Pathe, Inc., took over this branch and Mr. Osborn has been on the job ever since.

There were many who thought Mr. Osborn too young to hold down a manager's job. However, he had a pleasing personality, a determination to "get by" and soon brought forcibly to the attention of all who came in contact with him that he stood for square dealing, and was always willing to meet the other fellow a little bit more than half way. Thus it was that his reputation soon became a very enviable one; the business of the Washington office began to grow and it soon passed over other offices of the country which had a better territory, and when E. H. Atwood, who was manager of the Philadelphia office, resigned on account of ill health, the Pathe company showed its appreciation of Mr. Osborn's good work by appointing him as Mr. Atwood's successor.

Mr. Osborn is succeeded as manager of the local office by D. F. O'Donnell, who comes highly recommended from the New York office. Mr. O'Donnell has been connected with Pathe-Freres for nearly three years. He has served in various executive positions and has had some little experience in road work.

A. Dresner Heads Local Nest.

Washington exhibitors and exchangemen recently had the opportunity of welcoming back into the fold their old friend, Abe Dresner, who returns to the Capital City to handle the Blue Bird features. As president of the Washington Screen Club, Mr. Dresner acquitted himself with honor. Remembering this, it is to be expected that he will join in the efforts to revive organization work in the District of Columbia. Mr. Dresner is a live wire and has a large following of friends here.

Guy Barrett in Lynchburg.

Guy Barrett, who was formerly asistant to Harry M. Crandall, of this city, and who is now manager of the Belvedere theater, in Lynchburg, Va., is making good, according to reports received from that place. His latest move has been to require the ushers of the theater to attire themselves in tuxedos when on duty.

Marx S. Nathan with V-L-S-E.

Marx S. Nathan, formerly a traveling representative of the Kleine-Edison Feature Service, and at one time manger of the Schloss theater interests in North Carolina, has joined the local forces of the V-L-S-E. Mr. Nathan is to cover Washington. S. J. Mayer, who is also with this concern, will now be able to devote more time to the city of Baltimore and to the business throughout the State of Maryland. Frank B. Spurrier, manager of the local office, reports business up to the top notch mark so far this year and that he is highly gratified at the number of new contracts that he is receiving.

World Film Hustlers.

When a man smiles continually throughout his waking hours, there must be something in the wind. C. W. Bunn, manager of the World Film office here, seems to have good cause to smile. Henry E. Friedman is boosting things in the North Carolina territory; E. R. Haas is making good in Virginia and along comes Ben Abrams, who was formerly a traveling representative out of the home office of the Fox Film Corporation in New York, and who is now similarly employed by the World Film, and Mr. Abrams is sending in a number of good contracts. Business must be increasing with the local office for Mr. Bunn has increased his office force and the express men are kept just a little bit more busy than they were a couple of months ago.

Up-to-Date Program Book.

The Savoy theater, Fourteenth street, near Columbia road, recently started to issue a very attractive program giving the names of the features scheduled for the coming week. The front contains the name and address of the theater in fairly large type at the top, and occupying a similar space at the bottom is an oblong space for the date. The center is utilized for the showing of a cut showing a scene from the best of that week's productions. The program has eight pages, about half of which is devoted to the advertising of commercial firms.

In the last issue of the program, the management states "We feature our orchestra; an orchestra composed of members of the world's most famous band renders all of the latest and most popular music nightly.

We wish to impress upon our patrons that we have enlarged our orchestra at much additional expense in order to play a more elaborate program, and will gladly receive any suggestions as to new numbers at the box office as it is our wish to play the music you desire."

As far as the management is concerned, the name of the theater also spells courtesy, and under the heading "What a visit to the Savoy Means," it states "An hour or more of unceasing delight in the realms of the mimic and silent drama."

VIRGINIA NEWS LETTER.

New Theater Opens in Norfolk.

Norfolk, Va.—The Granby theater, opened recently in Norfolk by George Karanicholas, is one of the handsomest theaters in the State. It is reported that at the initial showing of pictures there were 6,121 paid admissions and so great was the crowd that it was necessary to secure the aid of the police to keep things in order. The theater has a seating capacity of 1,500.

The foyer is richly carpeted in red, bordered by shadow box portraits of moving picture stars, and potted plants. The interior color scheme is carried out in old rose and subdued smoke. The chairs are dark green. The screen is 18 feet by 22 feet, is in the center of an attractive proscenium made and painted by a New York firm of scenic artists, and is said to be the largest in the section.

An indirect system of lighting is used and the ventilating system is one of the best. A seven-piece orchestra is employed and the music is excellent. Every convenience for patrons is furnished. There is a very attractively furnished retiring room for the ladies and a handsome fountain has been installed in the lobby. A more complete description of this theater will appear in a succeeding issue of the Moving Picture World.

PHILADELPHIA METRO APPEALS

Manager Clark Claims Injustice in Recent Censor Fine.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

HARRISBURG, PA.—Asserting that a $300 fine imposed upon him by Magistrate Hogg was unwarranted and illegal, John D. Clark, manager of the Metro-Film Exchange, located on Vine street, near Broad, recently appealed from the action and the case of Clark's alleged violation of orders given by the State Board of Censors was reviewed by Judge Davis, in Quarter Sessions Court.

Clark was accused by an inspector in the employ of the censors of showing, at the Victoria theater, Harrisburg, Pa., the film entitled "Tillie's Punctured Romance," without making certain eliminations ordered by the board. About three weeks ago he was brought before Magistrate Hogg and fined $300, he alleges, without being given an opportunity to show the film in question. He contended that, had the Magistrate viewed the picture, it would have been seen that instructions as to eliminations had been carried out in full.

In the proceedings of the appeal before Judge Davis, the question of eliminations seemed to be a matter of veracity, one side asserting that the scenes opposed by the board had been cut out, and the other taking the stand that the picture as shown at Harrisburg had not been changed. Clark's testimony argued that the order of the Board of Censors was ambiguous, and that the manager of the film had drawn a reasonable inference in correcting the picture as he did.

Judge Davis held the matter under advisement.

FOREIGN FILM CORP. FAILS.

The Foreign Film Corporation, 251 North 13th street, Philadelphia, recently filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy in the United States District Court. Included in the assets, which are fixed at $3,652.50, is an item that $3,200 is represented in a negative of a film entitled "Back of the Waves," a four-reel production.

No Policemen in Uniform Can Attend.

SCREEN CLUB AND THE FUND.

Pittsburgh Organization Has Big Plans for Actors' Fund.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—The Pittsburgh Screen Club has taken further important steps to aid in furthering the campaign for the Actors' Fund of America. A committee—Al. W. Cross, chairman, William More Patch, P. Antonoplos, John McAleer, A. H. McClelland and M. Feitler—was appointed to formulate plans for the work.

Mr. Patch, manager of the Pitt theater, offered to the club the use of his theater, with its symphony orchestra of twenty-two pieces, for a Sunday concert. A surprise in the way of a first-release picture may also be a feature of the affair. The entire proceeds will be contributed to the fund.

In discussing the campaign Al. W. Cross, vice-president of the Club and chairman of the committee, said: "All of the theaters in western Pennsylvania, as well as exchanges and others, are expected to assist and co-operate with the committee in making the showing of this district second to none in the country. At present ways and means are being devised to work hand in hand with the exhibitors, and we would be pleased to hear from them direct as to the methods they intend to pursue. Most of the exchangemen have signified a willingness to furnish a feature without charge to exhibitors who agree to give at least 50 per cent of their receipts to the fund. Several of the exhibitors have agreed to give anywhere from 5 to 25 per cent of their gross receipts, believing that the campaign worked for this occasion will greatly increase their receipts on the particular days set aside for this fund.

"The committee will furnish exhibitors with cards, slides and other advertising matter and will also advertise the names of all theaters participating in the campaign. For other reasons it is up to the exhibitors, exchangemen and all others interested in the film industry in general to show the strength of their organization, so universal and united action is earnestly invited by the committee."

Passes "Iron Claw."

Pittsburgh, Pa.—After rejecting the first episode of Pathe's new serial, "The Iron Claw," which was scheduled for release on February 28, the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors has again viewed the picture and finally decided to pass it. Much indignation was felt over the holding up of the serial, as it is being shown in nearly every other state in the Union.

Anti-Censorship Grows.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The movement launched by the Pittsburgh Screen Club recently against the present censorship laws in Pennsylvania is rapidly gaining momentum. The ways and means committee, which last week laid plans for effective work, has been discharged and a secret committee has been appointed in its stead. The fight is to be carried on vigorously, particularly in connection with the coming political campaign for the state legislature, as the question of censorship comes before the state law-making bodies early next year. An attorney who is experienced in legal matters pertaining to the moving picture industry has been secured.

Grand Theater Sold.

McKees Rocks, Pa.—The Grand theater, on Helen street, McKees Rocks, has been sold by Stephen Salomon, to Horace C. Miller, of Wilkinsburg, Pa. The Grand is located in an important manufacturing section and does a thriving business. This house, as well as others in the neighborhood of the big iron and steel mills, is getting a fine share in the industrial prosperity of the Pittsburgh district.

Reformer Again Fails

Atlanta Sunday Shows Bring More Arrests Through Efforts of Busy Rerformer —Six Operators Arrested When Georgian, Lyric and Victoria Open With Shows for Charity—Cases Quickly Dismissed.

By A. M. Beatty, Atlanta Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ATLANTA, GA.—More than 15,000 persons visited the Georgian, Lyric and Victoria, the three moving picture theaters that operated Sunday afternoon and night, despite the legal steps that have been taken against them.

The Georgian was operated by officers of the King's Daughters, a charitable organization; the Lyric for the Belgian Relief association, under the direction of Dr. F. E. May, the French consul, and the Victoria for Camp Walker, of the United Confederate Veterans.

John A. Manget has sought for the last month to abolish Sunday pictures. First he proceeded against the management of the theaters who were operating on Sunday, with the result of dismissal in municipal court. Other procedure failing, he last Saturday swore out warrants against six motion picture operators of the Victoria, Lyric and Georgian theaters.

The cases against all six were dismissed by Judge John F. McClelland in municipal court Monday, Feb. 28. At the close of the trials Mr. Manget announced that he had no intention of dropping the fight, but would next move against the owners of the theaters that operated on Sunday.

The testimony given by Mrs. G. W. Small, of 125 Chapel street, who has been operating the Victoria for Camp Walker, of the United Confederate Veterans, brought out the interesting item that, although hundreds attended the performances on Sunday, the proceeds seldom reached higher than $25.00. Only pennies and nickels and a few dimes, she said, were dropped into the contribution boxes.

MANAGER BRANDON WEDS.

The announcement of the marriage of Miss Madge Horne and Mr. W. C. Brandon, in New York, on the 22nd, comes as an agreeable surprise to Mr. Brandon's many friends, not only in Atlanta, where both young people are well known and popular, but over the entire Southland.

The bride is the only daughter of Mr. C. A. Horne, one of Atlanta's most prominent and substantial citizens. Pretty and winsome, she has enjoyed the advantage since her school days of study and travel abroad, as well as in her own country, and is one of the most attractive young women in the social life of Atlanta.

Mr. Brandon's home was formerly New York, but Atlanta now claims him, as one of her own. He is manager of the V-L-S-E moving picture exchange for the southern states and has established himself in the favor of many friends in business and socially.

Picture Show Deal in Kingston, N. C.

Kingston, N. C.—Plato Collins, owner of the Dixie and Palace moving picture theaters at Kingston, N. C., has acquired a half interest in the Grand there, and will be joint owner with H. F. Stallings, who retains his half interest, and who will continue to manage the theater. The Dixie will close its doors. The Palace will continue to run.

Atlanta, Ga.—The Vaudette theater gave as their regular Triangle program Tuesday, "Peggy," featuring Bille Burke. All day great crowds attended. By special arrangement the picture was secured for the balance of the week.

A new screen is being put in the Strand theater and was first used when the show started Monday morning, Feb. 28.

Claude Buchanan, of the Metro company, who has been dubbed the "Sovereign of Film Row," by the other hustlers thereon, is preparing to book a new feature with Francis X. Bushman in the leading part. It is thought to be the feature now being made at Savannah, Ga.

DEATH OF LICENSE BILL.

Cleveland Turns Down New Ordinance.

By Hubert Persons, Cleveland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—Motion picture exhibitors of Cleveland are rejoicing because of the success of their efforts to kill Councilman Meyers' ordinance placing a license of $3 a year for every hundred of seating capacity on moving picture houses. The ordinance was tabled by the city council at a meeting Feb. 28, without a dissenting vote. This action followed an adverse report on the measure, submitted by the Council Committee on Licenses. Councilmen Krueger, Smith and Stannard, members of this committee, expressed the opinion that there was no more reason to impose a license fee on moving picture theaters than to tax any other line of business.

Two public hearings were held in the council chamber before the committee agreed to oppose the measure. B. J. Sawyer, president of the Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, and C. E. Megown, special representative, were speakers at these meetings.

"The measure was killed because it was clearly class legislation and would open the way to unlimited taxation of the motion picture business and other things as well," Mr. Sawyer declared.

"All some lawmakers seem to have to do these days," he added, "is to watch moving picture houses and see what laws they can frame up against them."

VOTES FOR MODEL PROGRAM.

The referendum vote arranged by Cleveland exhibitors so members of the Civics and Legislation committee of the Federation of Women's Clubs may select pictures for their model programs, is expected to get under way in the near future.

C. E. Megowan, special representative of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, has had ballots printed and boxes placed in all the theaters where the votes are to be taken. It is expected to have the vote completed and a series of "model programs" arranged for use in April.

These programs will be shown in theaters in residence districts on special nights of each week.

J. B. McCormick Fails.

Wooster, Ohio.—John B. McCormick, who has been operating the Alhambra motion picture theater in Wooster, O., and another picture house in Fredericksburg, O., his home, has just filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy in the United States district court in Cleveland. His liabilities are scheduled at $10,619, with assets of $9,090. In addition to the picture theaters, he is owner of an electric light plant at Fredericksburg.

Local Theater Hits.

Cleveland photoplay houses showed some unusually strong programs during the week from Feb. 27 to March 4. At the Orpheum theater, "Forbidden Fruit," with Paula Shay and Everett Butterfield, attracted capacity crowds all week.

The Alhambra featured "Undine," a Blue Bird play, from Feb. 27 to March 1, and the last three days of the week offered "The Soul Market," with Mme. Petrova in the lead.

At Metropolitan theater, Mary Pickford in "Poor Little Pepina" was shown all week, with daily matinees.

The Knickerbocker theater opened the week of Feb. 27 to March 4 with Marguerite Clark in "Out of the Drifts," and closed the week with Marie Doro in "Diplomacy."

STORES CLOSE IN PROTEST.

Kendallville Business Men Show No Sympathy with Sabbath Closing.

Special to Moving Picture World from Indiana Trade News Service.

KENDALLVILLE, IND.—The situation in this city relative to the opening of the picture houses on Sunday has reached a point unprecedented, it is believed. With the passage and executive approval of an ordinance declaring illegal the operation of picture houses on Sunday, the picture houses closed and every other business house closed in sympathy.

When the ordinance was introduced in the common council business men demanded that it be not passed. They declared that it was placing a restriction on all business not warranted by popular demand and intimated that the ordinance had been introduced for personal reasons. They asserted that the passage of the ordinance closing the picture theaters would mean the voluntary cessation of other business on the Sabbath.

The ordinance was passed and the following Sunday it was impossible to purchase a shoe hook, loaf of bread, ice cream soda or anything else except the Sunday papers which the newsboys sold on the city streets.

The business men say that the public generally is in sympathy with their move. They say the citizenship wants the moving picture theaters open and that they are sticking with the public.

Ralph Rainier, who operates the Boyer theater, started the trouble and the sympathetic strike.

Small Town Stuff.

Shelbyville, Ind.—George Rapp, proprietor of a moving picture theater in Shelbyville, Ind., has asked the assistance of the police in searching out the perpetrator of a practical joke of the small town variety. This joker twice put a skunk sack in the theater after it had been closed for the night. Ralph is a good fellow, but patience ceases to be a virtue after a time.

John H. Hubert Dies.

Indianapolis, Ind.—John M. Hubert, age forty-three, one of the oldest motion picture exhibitors in Indianapolis, was found dead in an automobile in which he had been riding. With a friend Hubert left the Two Johns theater, of which he was part owner, to go to his home. The friend stopped the automobile at the Hubert home and called to Hubert to get out of the car. Hubert failed to answer and investigation disclosed that he had expired during the ride. Apoplexy caused death.

Hubert was vice-president of the Indianapolis Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association during 1915 and this year was treasurer of the association. He was in charge of the arrangements committee for the moving picture ball, during the state convention here, March 2 and 3.

Big Features in Indianapolis.

Indianapolis, Ind.—This city has been well supplied with feature pictures during recent weeks. The so-called big theaters of the city have each been showing pictures to crowded houses. At the Murat, the Shubert playhouse, "The Battle-Cry of Peace" is completing a showing of two weeks at advanced prices. At English's the "Birth of a Nation" is playing a second engagement. The prices range from 25 cents to $2. Both pictures have been drawing well. It so happened that the theaters had no engagements for the two weeks.

Empress Theater Leased.

Indianapolis, Ind.—The Empress theater in Central avenue, Indianapolis, has been leased by H. C. Page from the People's Amusement Company.

Indiana Notes.

The Wonderland theater of Clinton, Ind., has undergone repairs which included the installation of a new curtain.

"Hypocrites" met with opposition after the first showing at Brazil, Ind., but Chief Jackson of the police department said no formal complaint had been lodged in the form of an affidavit and that he would take no action without such an affidavit.

The Star theater of Hartford City has been closed.

Karl J. Flanders has resigned as manager of the Orpheum at Elkhart, Ind.

The new pipe organ for the Strand, Shelbyville, Ind., has been installed. It makes the Strand an up-to-the-minute house.

The Orpheum of Clinton, Ind., will show Triangle Photoplay features hereafter.

With the "Birth of a Nation" as the attraction, the Gennett theater, recently remodeled and redecorated, reopened its doors at Richmond, Ind.

TENNESSEE NEWS LETTER.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Chattanooga Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

"Nation" Film Comes Back.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN. — The Bijou theater, of Chattanooga, Tenn., opened with a three-day return engagement of "The Birth of a Nation," on Monday evening, February 28. Usual "Birth of a Nation" prices of 50c to $2 at night and 25c to $1 for matinees, were charged. The fact that the picture was brought back for a return engagement is evidence that it did not stir up dangerous racial strife in the city. The film was also booked for a three-day return engagement in Knoxville at Straub's theater, starting March 2.

Good Projection Promised.

Nashville, Tenn.—W. H. Wassman, manager of the new Knickerbocker theater, of Nashville, Tenn., which will shortly be opened to the public, has installed two of the new "Edison Super-Kinetoscopes." Especial attention has been given to the projecting room at the Knickerbocker.

Fire in a Projection Booth.

Nashville, Tenn.—A back flash in a projecting machine at the Alhambra theater, of Nashville, Tenn., started a fire which destroyed two machines, several reels and did damage to the theater of about $1,000. At the time of the blaze the Alhambra and the Rex theater, adjoining, were packed with people, but the coolness of the doormen averted any panic, and the people filed out of the Alhambra, while many kept their seats at the Rex in spite of the fact that the street was filled with people and fire apparatus.

Carl Rush, the operator, was slightly burned about the hands and face by the burning. The blaze was confined to the second floor. Manager Harry Sudekum, through quick work, had the theater operating the next day in spite of the fact that the lower floor was somewhat stained by water. The loss was fully covered.

Chattanooga.—The Alhambra theater of Chattanooga, Tenn., recently completed arrangements whereby the big serial, "The Strange Case of Mary Page," made its bow to the moving picture fans of the city.

Lexington's Reform Wave

City's Board of Education Harshly Condemns Certain Pictures as Immoral and Particularizes on "The Serpent"—City Is Passing Through a Wave of Self-Consciousness—Talk of Censorship.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

LEXINGTON, KY.—The Board of Education of Lexington has gone on record as condeming, in no mild terms, the display of immoral moving pictures in the Lexington theaters. According to members of the board considerable attention has been drawn to some of the pictures because of revolting and seeming unnecessary baldness of scenes in some of them.

The Board in its resolutions, declared that it could not understand how the moving picture exhibitors could invite persons of tender age to see such films. Members of the board declared that such pictures as "The Serpent," which was recently shown in a Lexington theater, could arouse nothing but "disgust and indignation in the minds of the mature." Pictures of this type are declared to be degrading and tend to break down the natural barriers of sex. Proprietors of the theaters, citizens and the Board of Commissioners are being called upon to prevent the further showing of objectionable films. Similar agitation has been started in other cities of the Bluegrass district against immoral films.

Lexington has been on the reform list for several months and has just completed a campaign whereby the resorts of Lexington were closed up. A fight has been in progress for months against Sunday moving picture shows, but Mayor James C. Roberts recently refused to take action upon this latter matter and a copy of his letter to the Board of Commissioners was re-printed in the Moving Picture World.

Almost a half page of solid reading matter was recently played up in one of the Lexington papers concerning "lewd moving pictures," and interviews were published with leading citizens, welfare workers, Mayor Rogers, and the managers of leading theaters including L. Zahler, of the Strand; O. Gurnee, of the Ada Meade, and Charles Scott, of the Opera House. There is some talk of censorship, and Mayor Rogers has declared himself ready to revoke the licenses of such houses as show pictures not fit for the public eye.

The exhibitors have pointed out that several of the pictures shown and condemned in the city were approved by the National Board of Censorship and also the Ohio Board. Manager Zahler, of the Strand points out that many of these pictures bring out a strong moral lesson. O. Gurnee, of the Ada Meade, in a statement, said that the National Board was capable of censoring the pictures, and that it was impossible to please everyone, while Charles Scott, of the Opera House, favored the plan of trying to please the majority of the people.

COMMITTEE APPROVES

Lexington Sends Four Leading Citizens to View "Nation" Film.

Manager Charles Scott, of the Lexington Opera House; Ben L. May, Jr., of the Lexington Herald, and Commissioners H. M. Schoonmaker and Frank G. Ott, were members of a committee appointed by the Board of Commissioners of Lexington, Ky., to come to Louisville to view "The Birth of a Nation," shown at Macauley's theater, and make a report to the Commissioners. The committee, after seeing the picture approved heartily, but no action has been taken at Lexington as yet. Prominent negro orators of Louisville have been stirring up a lot of unnecessary trouble in connection with the production of this picture, and the newspapers have been full of editorial and other matter on the subject.

NEW REX OPENS.

The remodeled Novelty theater, of Louisville, under a new title, "The Rex," was re-opened to the public on Sunday, February 26 as an exclusive "Mutual Masterpicture De Luxe" feature house.

The theater has been thoroughly renovated, painted and decorated, and the seats have been covered with white canvas jackets. The house now makes a very attractive appearance, and night admission prices have been advanced to fifteen cents. Manager Koch reports that the advanced price is being tried out, and it is probable that the old price of ten cents will be put back, as there are too many theaters in the district showing at ten cents.

WOULD ATTRACT CONVENTIONS

Louisville, Ky.—The moving picture exhibitors of Louisville are warmly supporting a campaign for the purpose of raising $300,000 with which to build an auditorium in the city. While a big public auditorium would bring some competition to the city, at the same time it would bring many conventions, political meetings, etc., and the exhibitors would gain in the long run. Among the supporters of the movement are the Fourth Avenue Amusement company, the Majestic Amusement company, M. Switow, Dennis H. Long, Fred Dolle, Lee L. Goldberg and L. J. Dittmar.

PASSES ROBERTSON BILL.

Frankfort, Ky.—The State Senate recently passed the bill of Senator Robertson, of Louisville, by a majority of 24 to 5. This bill provides that non-resident children may appear in stage performances, and has been backed by the theatrical people and also the moving picture men, although the theatrical talent was really behind the movement. The bills now in the legislature affecting the moving picture industry have little chance to get through, it is said, as the session is almost over.

Ben Ali Theater to Reopen.

Lexington, Ky.—Charles H. Berryman, manager of the Ben Ali theater, of Lexington, Ky., has announced that the building will be remodeled and ready to open about April 15. The building was partly destroyed by fire in January and the shows were transferred to the Opera house, but will be returned to the theater as soon as the work is completed. According to Manager Berryman the house will be handsomer than ever when completed.

Will Remodel Theater.

Bardstown, Ky.—George Mann, of Bardstown, Ky., is making arrangements to remodel his moving picture theater, so that the shows will be moved to a ground floor location, two matinees given weekly and shows every night.

Louisville Business Notes.

Robert Lieber, manager of the Indianapolis office of the General Film company, was recently in Louisville where he spent a day with Louis J. Dittmar. Manager A. J. Hirshfield, of the General Film, Chicago office, was also in Louisville recently where he ran off the films "Forbidden Fruit," and "The Concealed Truth," before some of the local exhibitors.

Percy L. Smith, Louisville manager for the Mutual Film, is very much pleased with the fruits of his campaign in this district. The Casino theater, on Fourth

Kunsky Ready to Build

Detroit Picture Magnate Signs Final Papers for the Erection of the Madison to Stand at Grand Circus Park and Broadway—Will Have 3,100 Seats—Some of Its Especially Interesting Features.

By Jacob Smith, Detroit (503 Free Press Bldg.), Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DETROIT, Mich.—Final papers have been signed for the erection of the Madison theater by John H. Kunsky. The new house will stand at the southwest corner of Grand Circus Park and Broadway now occupied by store buildings, and a stone's throw from Woodward avenue, on which property a ninety-nine year lease has been obtained.

The theater will seat 3,100 and will have a large stage. The upper floors of the office building surrounding the theater will be taken up entirely by the various Kunsky enterprises. The New Madison marks the greatest effort of Mr. Kunsky's career. All information regarding the probable cost is met with a smile and the statement that it is not a question of money, but of quality, style and comfort.

Novel Lighting System.

The entire building will be illuminated from the street through a novel system of indirect lighting which will throw out into bold relief at night, the entire structure of white glazed terra cotta without the displaying of a single electric bulb. Surmounted by a high electrical sign, the building will be noticeable for miles around. The structure will boast of its own heating and lighting plant, thus being absolutely independent at all times of any mishaps that might occur with the public utility corporations operating in Detroit.

"The Schmied-Sisman Co., of Detroit has been awarded the building contract while Frank Farrington has been appointed by Mr. Kunsky to act as his personal representative in the supervision of the construction work. C. Howard Crane was the architect. To raise the necessary money to build this huge structure, Mr. Kunsky bonded the property.

Geo. W. Trendle Engineered Deal.

No small factor in the successful culmination of this important deal was George W. Trendle, corporation lawyer and legal advisor to Mr. Kunsky, who has been working on the proposition for two years. Mr. Trendle has shown exceptional aptitude for promoting and financing business enterprises. Engaged by Messrs. Caille and Kunsky almost at the outset of their successful operations as their legal representative, Mr. Trendle has grown up with the Kunsky interests and to him is due no small amount of credit for the preparation of the ways and means of financing the various large ventures represented.

Abe E. Siegel, formerly representative of the Fox Film in Michigan, with headquarters in Detroit, has filed suit for $50,000 for alleged libel and slander against the corporation in circuit court, through his attorney Sid. Siegel operated in Michigan for seven months and had many good friends in the trade. He has been connected with motion pictures for eight years. Depositions from many parts of the United States, given by people who received the alleged slanderous letters, will be used in the case, Siegel said.

The Detroit office has charge of the entire state of Michigan and a large portion of northern Ohio. Mr. Bendell has organized a strong sales force and says that every week is showing improvement in business.

The prizes will be $50, $25, $15 and $10, and the judges will be Howard O. Pierce, publicity manager for John H. Kunsky, George Stark moving picture editor, of the Detroit News; Ralph Holmes, moving picture editor, Detroit Journal, Ella Mae Hawthorne, moving picture editor Detroit Times and Leonard G. Brandt, who designed he Deltha, is now receiving construction bids. The estimated cost of this playhouse is $40,000, without furnishings or equipment. The building is to be of steel frame, fireproof construction, with exterior walls of face brick, trimmed with cut stone. It will occupy a ground area of 60 by 100 feet, and will provide seating accommotions for 1,000 persons. There will be a parquette and balcony.

Personal and Business Notes from Detroit.

George W. Trendle, secretary of the John H. Kunsky Enterprises, accompanied by Mrs. Trendle, left Feb. 27 for Cuba to be gone until the first week in April.

The Garden theater, Woodward and Seldon avenues, has been completely redecorated and refurnished. A new stage setting has been installed and the Garden today looks more attractive than it ever has. Manager Smith reports that business is showing improvement every week.

R. A. Adams, formerly with the Detroit Kriterion Film Co., is now special representative for the General Film Co. covering Detroit and Toledo.

Ralph Peckham has severed his connections with the Peerless Film Company, East Jefferson avenue, of which he was general manager.

Peter J. Jeup, of the Luna theater, St. Aubin and Fort streets, says business is the best it has ever been. Similar reports are being made by many other owners and managers of small outskirt theaters, who say that their patronage has picked up considerably during the past few weeks. Quite a number of exhibitors are asking, "How can we increase our business on the second show at night? The second show business is good when there are exceptional features or prominent film stars, but where only an average feature is the attraction there is very little business for the last evening show.

BABY BUGGIES IN LOBBIES.

Can't Park Them to Hinder Egress—Managers Have New Problem.

By Kenneth Crain, Cincinnati Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

NEWPORT, KY.—An order issued last week by the Commissioner of Public Safety of Newport, Ky., is likely to work a considerable hardship either on the public or on exhibitors. The commissioner ordered that the universal practice of "parking" baby carriages and go-carts in the lobbies of picture theaters be discontinued, on the ground that in some instances the number of these vehicles was such as to hinder egress, and therefore constituted a possible element of danger.

Inasmuch as many people are unable to go to the theater in the evening unless they can take their children with them the enforcement of the order obviously means that a good many regular fans will have to stay at home, unless some arrangement of a different nature can be made to take care of the rolling stock. In a few instances in the larger cities rooms are provided for the children, and possibly it will be practicable for exhibitors to provide space where the baby carriages can be kept out of the way and yet convenient for parents.

W. S. Wessling Takes Charge.

The Gold Rooster headquarters in Cincinnati have a new chief who comes from the Pacific Coast, W. S. Wessling, formerly of Portland, Ore., taking charge last week after the departure of former Manager C. E. Holah, who is now with the V-L-S-E organization. Mr. Wessling has been engaged in exchange work in several Coast cities, and is a high-grade man. The organization of the Pathe office in his charge will remain the same as it was under Mr. Holah.

CLIFTON'S SPECIAL SHOWS.

Cincinnati, O.—Manager Charles Hoefle, of the Clifton, on Ludlow avenue, Cincinnati, has the honor of being one of the few exhibitors in the city who have taken the pains to establish a regular children's educational program, although the movement has aroused much interest among exhibitors, and will probably become general before long. Mr. Hoefle has set aside every Friday evening for his educational program, in which historical, travel and natural history subjects are shown, with occasional subjects relating to mythology or fairy tales.

Economy Agreement

Exhibitors of Aurora, Illinois, Have Formed a Pool to Lessen Competition—Will Close Palace Theater and Keep the Aurora and Strand Dark Except on Saturdays and Sundays—Officers of Combination.

By Frank H. Madison, Illinois Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

AURORA, Ill.—A pool to curtail the number of shows here has been arranged. The agreement provides for the closing of the Palace theater wholly and darkening the Aurora and Strand five nights a week. The Fox theater will be a motion picture house during the week and will play vaudeville on Sundays.

Multiple reel subjects will be shown at the Fox theater during the week and at the Aurora and Strand theaters on Saturdays and Sundays. Shorter productions will be shown at the Palm and Star theaters daily where an admission of five cents will be charged at all times.

Frank Thielen is president of the new syndicate with Jules J. Rubens as treasurer and executive chief. W. D. Burford is secretary and will book all pictures for the various show houses in the pool. Stephen Lies is to help in overseeing the different theaters. The Orpheum and "B" theaters may enter the pool.

Looking at Studio Sites.

East St. Louis, Ill.—J. J. Hayes, president, and J. H. Slade, secretary-treasurer of the Pyramid Motion Picture Company of Hartford, Conn., were here to look over probable sites for a motion picture studio. Filming babies is one phase of the company's business.

Discuss Booths in Aurora.

Aurora, Ill.—Aurora moving picture theater men, as well as clergymen who use films, are fighting a "safety first" ordinance which is regarded as unreasonable. One feature required in the original measure is a transparent shutter in the booth. They have succeeded in having changed the requirements for a ventilating flue. At first one 36 inches in diameter was asked. Now it calls for one only sufficiently large to carry off the fumes. Insurance inspectors and the state fire marshal's department have passed the Aurora projection outfits. The managers want a booth standard fixed and not an ordinance making it "subject to the approval of the electrical inspector."

Sunday Referendum in Pontiac.

Pontiac, Ill.—The city council has a petition from voters asking a vote at the April election on the question of permitting Sunday moving picture shows.

Belleville, Ill.—The building committee has decided to go ahead and build a theater along the lines of the Park theater in St. Louis. It will seat 2,000.

St. Louis Optimism

World Man Celebrates Coming of Spring Among Sunlit Exchanges—Finds Blue Birds Flying, Foxes Scurrying, World Bright, Universal Happiness, Mutual Gladness—On Pathe to Success, Joy Paramount—Tinkling Triangles.

By A. H. Giebler, St. Louis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—It don't look very much like spring, but it was the last of February, and we knew it was time to go out in the highways and byways of Filmdom and get a few opinions and prophecies about the future.

There was a little group of managers and road men on the sidewalk under the canopy of the Polar Wave building in earnest conversation. We listened hopefully, but instead of discussing business they were talking about the Ground Hog, and they were not talking about the animal, either; they were—well, that word discussing, with the first three letters left off describes it pretty accurately.

"You'd think the beast didn't know there was any such thing as an airdome, wouldn't you?" growled one of the pessimists.

"The sun shone for two hours yesterday," chirped the only optimist in the crowd, which was ourself.

"Get out," snapped another sorehead. "You are as bad as a ground hog yourself. You never come around except in a snow storm. Why, the last time you were here—" And then a little patch of blue the size of the proverbial Dutchman's breeches popped through the leaden sky, a bunch of sunbeams came tumbling down to earth and began boring holes in a snow drift on the edge of the gutter. Doors flew open, Charles Werner poked his head out of the window of the Metro office and a dusty sparrow on the old dead tree across on the north side of the street broke into a blithesome "peep, peep."

"Did we hear a bird?" everybody asked at once. "You did," remarked S. J. Baker, who came down the street swinging that little cane of his. "You heard a bird, and it was a 'Bluebird.'"

We moved on—as did the others. They to dream of airdomes, and we to search for news.

Joking aside, the film business in St. Louis and surrounding territory looks at least fifty per cent. better than it did this time last year, and the prospects are so far ahead of year before last that comparisons would be odious.

Short Reel Coming Back?

We stopped in at the General Film exchange, and Manager H. P. Wolfberg told us about the fine exhibition room that is just nearing completion. There will be room for a hundred and fifty people to watch the advance exhibition of the films, and every reel released will be shown. Sunday will be devoted to out-of-town visitors, and the show will grind away all day long to give the country managers a chance to see as many films as they want to. Mr. Wolfberg sees big promise for the future and the return of the short reel. "Maybe not tomorrow or the next day," he says, "but they are coming back. The feature wave struck the big cities first. Theaters in the big towns were running five and six reel subjects long before the country exhibitors took them up. Now the wave is passing into the outlying districts.

Demand for Variety.

"A good three-reel feature and a couple of comedies, with a travel picture, will be the program that will be more and more in favor as time goes on. This is evidenced by the fact that the exhibitor who stopped using short stuff and put on big subjects, is now adding two and three reels of short pictures to his program, not so much because he wants to give his patrons eight and nine reels, but to get variety to his program. The people demand variety. That has always been the greatest charm of the moving picture entertainment. A five or six-reel feature does not give this variety, and programs will gravitate naturally to an arrangement where variety can be given in a five or six-reel bill as well as one with nine and ten reels. This will make for improvements in the production of films. Manufacturers are beginning to see the tendency, and are putting better stuff in the short reels. Everybody is going to be benefited."

Big Four Feels Big.

The V-L-S-E was the next stop. The V-L-S-E officials are big boys now, since they have cut away from the apron strings of the K. C. exchange, and they are leading a free and rollicking life and paddling their own canoe. "We feel big," says S. W. Hatch, "and we are sailing along on the open sea with our own chart and compass; and business is good and the prospects are better. The carpenters will be in here right away to fix this place up to be one of the finest branch offices in the country."

Busy Around the Lair.

Next door at the Fox offices, Manager Levy was deep in consultation with an exhibitor, but he stopped long enough to tell us about booking two of the biggest St. Louis houses with Fox features, and we found a perfect mine of information in M. I. Cohn (see print), traveling representative, who had just got in from a three weeks' trip.

M. I. Cohn.

Mr. Cohn has been all up and down the line in filmdom—his territory covers Missouri, Illinois Arkansas, Kentucky and Tennessee—he is one of the most successful road men traveling out of St. Louis. His observations are worth listening to. "Things look good all over," he says, "and particularly so in the south. I have been down in Arkansas, Hot Springs, Newport, Marianna, Batesville, all the big towns, and business is good. Arkansas is prosperous; they have had good crops, and cotton is piled up in the streets of many of the towns. There is a general improvement in the theaters and in the character of managers. The patrons are demanding better stuff, and this, of course, leads to general improvement all along the line. Fine new theater buildings are springing up everywhere, and managers no longer look at the business as a side line, but put their best efforts in the management of their theaters."

United Office Doing Well.

Sam Werner, who presides at the United Program Exchange, voiced the general sentiment. "The spring outlook is good." he said, "and if we have any sort of weather for open air places, the coming season should make money for everybody."

Charles Werner, who says he is only up in the air architecturally speaking, because his office happens to be on the second floor of the Empress theater building, says Metro is going big, and things will look bigger when the grass comes up and airdomes get ripe.

Pleased with World Features.

At the World offices we found E. W. Dustin and Lieut. Tally enthusiastic about World features. Mr. Dustin is one of the oldest, in point of service, not age, film men in the city, and has had a rich and varied experience in all branches of the industry.

He has been an actor on the speaking stage, had produced pictures, and exhibited them. He opened the first big theater in the country to moving pictures when he managed the Hopkins theater in Louisville, Ky., in the early days. "The reason for good business," says Dustin, "is good production. The makers of the pictures are putting better performers, better stories in the pictures, and they are attending to the artistic side of the question, and that is what brings the people out, the better class of people. The picture business has its greatest day before it.

Couldn't Be Better, Says Keller.

We went on down to the Mutual exchange. It is way down town on 13th and Pine. We are going to get all the managers together some day and ask them to have all the exchanges on the same block. It will be so much easier for a correspondent then, and it will only be a matter of a few thousand dollars to move. "How's business?" we asked Fred A. Keller, manager of the Mutual Exchange. "Couldn't be better," said Keller. Mr. Keller is another old-timer in the film industry in St. Louis.

Edwards Breaking Records.

C. S. Edwards, of the Pathe office, said: "We are breaking records with serials out here. We thought we did big business with the 'Who Pays?' and 'Neil of the Navy,' but we went higher with 'The Red Circle,' and now 'The Iron Claw' is showing up in such fine form that it bids fair to smash the other records." Mr. Edwards was called upon to address the Mothers' Club of Ferguson, a suburb of St. Louis, recently, on the subject of "The Motion Picture and its Relation to the Child." "It was a very pleasant experience," said Mr. Edwards. "Those women are deeply in earnest, and when I got through with a 45-minute address, they fired questions at me as fast as I could answer them. All this goes to show the deep interest the public is taking in moving pictures, and the manner in which the pictures have revolutionized the amusement, and even the social conditions of the country. The better class of people are taking a greater interest than ever in the films because they look to them for education as well as entertainment."

Bright for Triangle.

Floyd Lewis, of the Triangle, was enthusiastic over a new bunch of Triangle contracts that has just come in. "We make big pictures," he said, "and the future looks very bright. Business seems better all the time, and spring and summer should fill the tills of all the box offices in the country."

The Universal Buzz.

At the Universal, where Barney Rosenthal is at the helm, things were buzzing along with a highly prosperous look. The irrepressible Lou Bent is with the Universal now, and the conversation developed the fact that Mr. Rosenthal and Mr. Bent are two of the first film salesmen that ever booked a program in this city. Mr. Rosenthal says things never looked better for the Universal. The "Graft" serial is going big, and a new one based on circus life, called "Peg o' the Ring," will be out shortly. Red Feather features are making a hit wherever they are shown, and in fact things just look good all around.

Flying Away with Things.

At the Bluebird headquarters we found S. J. Baker and N. H. Spitzer, special representative of the corporation, who had just come down from Detroit, going over prospects, and planning big things for the future. "Bluebirds are just flying away with things," said Mr. Baker. "Bluebirds, you know, are essentially springtime birds, and they are flying more frequently and making nests in theaters all over the country." Mr. Spitzer, who has toured the country in the interest of his corporation says that business never looked better for the exhibitor who is willing to put on high-class stuff. The people are becoming educated; they demand better stuff, and they must and will have it, and the people who have it to sell will sell it and the theater that shows it will draw the crowds. There is no longer room for inferior pictures, the people know what they want and they want only the best."

"Things Never Looked Better."

The last stop was made at the Monarch exchange in the Gayety theater building, G. W. McKean presides here and dispenses Paramount programs and meets visitors in the most pleasant manner imaginable. Mr. McKean is another old-timer in the business, and has a thousand friends all over the country among exi hibitors and competitors as well. He told us that things never looked better than at the present time. Paramount is always in demand, and the short travel and cartoon subjects are catching on in fine shape. Things look distinctly good at the Monarch.

KANSAS CITY NEWS LETTER.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

J. D. Wineland Puts in Electric Plant.

WEBB CITY, MO.—J. D. Wineland, proprietor of the Mystic and Empress theaters at Webb City, Mo., has completed the installation of equipment to supply direct electrical current for his two houses. The project was undertaken nearly a year ago, after some experimentation is now fulfilled. The plant includes a 50-horsepower gas engine and a 25 kw. generator, located in the rear of the Mystic theater, wires running to the Empress.

Takes Pity on Scribes.

Kansas City, Mo.—The New Empress theater management was the host of a party of newspaper men and selected guests at a recent private exhibition and "feed." Representatives from the Kansas City Star, the Kansas City Post and the Kansas City Journal, with one or two outside publicity men, formed the major portion of the company, which was first entertained at the Empress theater by Hawaiian dancers, who were on the coming week's bill, and the picture showing at the house at that time, "The Wrong Door." After the theater entertainment the party adjourned to the Kupper Hotel, where a private Dutch lunch and further entertainment was enjoyed.

Bulletins Corroboration.

Kansas City, Mo.—On all of the doors in the local Pathe office are posted newspaper clippings, sometimes whole page articles, printed in various country newspapers regarding moving picture houses and releases. Letters of commendation, programs, handbills and similar advertising matter are in turn posted over the office of the Pathe exchange. And the fact that it is a drawing card is attested to by reason of the number of persons who stop to read these comments and programs, all looking for something new.

May Miksicek.

Robert Miksicek, owner and manager of the Maryland theater, 1,860 South 13th street, ran a chapter of the "Ventures of Marguerite" on February 13th, in which his daughter, Miss May Miksicek, took part. Miss Miksicek is well known to her father's patrons, as she occupied the box office at times to help out in a rush. The young lady has played several engagements with the Kalem Company, and has had some parts with other companies since she went east, and although she cannot as yet be numbered among the film stars, she is gaining the experience that will eventually put her in that class, and make her name some day as familiar as are the names of other St. Louisans who have become famous on the screen.

Theaters Lessen Drink.

The motion picture houses of Orange are responsible for a decrease of twenty-five per cent. in the use of booze during the past three years, according to Judge Edward W. Woodman, of Orange.

Notes of Local Exhibitors.

Mrs. R. G. Welborn, wife of R. G. Welborn, of Rose and Welborn, managers of the R. & W. theater, La Cygne, Kas., presented her husband with a son recently. Mr. Welborn was so pleased with the new arrival he passed out complimentary tickets with his advance program, announcing the arrival.

Messrs. Richard and Flynn, local managers of the Wonderland, Subway and Richlyn theater recently returned to Kansas City after a sort of a pleasure tour in the South.

Wilhelm Meyn, proprietor of a picture show at St. Paul and Kansas Ave., Kansas City, Kas., asks $2,500 damages to his amusement place caused by the flow of water, September 7, 1914, from a ditch belonging to the elevator of the Rock Island railroad.

Manhattan, Kas.—Harry P. Wareham, owner and manager of the Wareham theater at Manhattan, has just completed improvements on his house amounting to $15,000. A great deal of the money was spent where it can not be seen, but has been expanded so that the paramount value has been gotten, and for arrangement and convenience, it ranks among the leading in the West. New decorations, including a velvet curtain, containing 727 square feet of the heaviest woven velvet, new fresco and wall decorations, upholstering of the seats, and a new operating room with a ceiling and floor of asbestos, constitute the greater portion of the improvements. There are 700 seats on the first floor and 400 in the balcony, all of which have an unobstructed view of the screen.

Topeka, Kas.—The new $12,000 motion picture house at 506-508 Kansas Avenue, at Topeka, Kas., is being erected very rapidly. The house will have a balcony, very small, as most of the seats will be on the first floor, and will seat 600 people in all. A ventilating system so arranged that air will be sucked in by a vacuum machine and drawn out in ducts through the roof, fireproof rooms for the machine operators, and beautiful drinking fountains in the lobby are some of the more important features. C. A. McGuigan, owner of the theater has named it the Gem.

Films in Prisons

Warden C. S. Reed of State Penitentiary at Stillwater, Minnesota, Talks on the Value of Picture Shows in Prisons—Kind of Films He Chooses—Growth of Use of Films in Institutions.

By Grace E. Polk, Minneapolis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—It is safe to say that the most popular picture show in Minneapolis is that given once a week in the State Penitentiary at Stillwater. Nearly two years ago, following the example set by several other state prisons in the Northwest, pictures for the prisoners were inaugurated at Stillwater, and now every Wednesday, at five P. M., men and women file into the large auditorium, the men taking their seats downstairs and the women occupying the gallery.

The pictures are carefully censored by the warden, C. S. Reed, at a private view. Comedies are the most popular films, and elicit roars of hearty laughter. "And is there any better medicine for a mind diseased," asked the warden, "than laughter?" Men and women prisoners alike watch with tensest interest the vicissitudes of hero and heroine, and applaud vigorously when the villain receives his just deserts. With oh's and ah's of excitement they view scenic pictures, but there can be no doubt that comedy carries off the palm. An excellent orchestra, composed of prisoners, accompanies the pictures, and a prisoner operates the machine.

"All those whose behavior has warranted it are permitted to attend," said Mr. Reed. "One demerit mark during the week means cancellation of the privileges; and it says volumes for the appreciation of the treat that, out of 1,038 prisoners, there have never been more than 25 in one week who have failed to deserve it."

The programs are just such a one as might be seen any day in any high-class picture house, and consist usually of a comedy, a "heart-interest" drama, and travel views. "We eliminate sickly-sentimental stuff, beer-drinking, saloon-brawling, woman-beating, safe-robbing and blood-and-thunder films in general, and in their place substitute wholesome dramas, interesting travel and educational films, and clean comedies. Shakespearean and other costume plays are very popular," says Mr. Reed. To the credit of the sex be it said there are only 25 women in Stillwater at the present time, as compared with 1,013 men; and not one of the women has forfeited her weekly treat. The auditorium in which the pictures are shown is the social center of the institution. There concerts and plays are given by the prisoners from time to time; there the religious services are held; and there meet the members of the Chautauqua Circle.

"One of the first state penitentiaries in the country, I believe," said Mr. Reed, "to introduce the movies was Walla-Walla, in Washington; and othesr rapidly followed suit, until now the practice is general, not only through the Northwest, but, I think I am correct in saying, throughout the country."

"Thre is everything," he continued, with the greatest emphasis, "to be said in favor of the humane treatment of prisoners, and the permission of certain recreations, and nothing—positively nothing—to be said against it. It is wonderful to see how these people strive to deserve the privileges extended to them—the movies, the library, the entertainments, the baseball games. I consider it a most significant fact that almost all the men, after a short stay here, lose their horror of soap and water, and eagerly take advantage of the shower each night, although it is by no means compulsory. And let me tell you that when a man is clean outside it's mighty hard for him to be anything else inside!"

Archie Cox Dies.

Archie Cox, manager of the New Garden theater in Minneapolis, died Wednesday, of ptomaine poisoning. Mr. Cox was one of the best known of the Minneapolis motion picture house managers. He had conducted houses in Sacramento, Salt Lake City and several cities of the Northwest, having come to Minneapolis about four months ago from Madison, Wis., where he was managing a theater for the Universal company.

Twilight Sleep Films in Northwest.

Sam J. Goldberg and H. F. Callanhan have recently acquired the Northwest rights to "The Twilight Sleep" pictures and will show them throughout several states. This marks the entrance into the film field of two more Minneapolis theatrical men. Both are associated with the Shubert theater.

NEW ORLEANS FILM EXCHANGE BUILDING ANNOUNCED.

Modern Fireproof Structure at Baronne and Gravier Streets.

By George Cheney, New Orleans Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—Announcement of a film exchange building for New Orleans, to be patterned along modern fireproof lines, was made by men interested in the proposition this week. This new structure, which New Orleans has long needed, will be at Baronne and Gravier streets, and in the same block with the new Strand theater, construction of which has already been begun by the DeSoto Building Company. Leo Fellman, president of the DeSoto Building Company, is also head of the interests which have the film building plans nearly perfected.

At a meeting of exchange managers last week in the office of K. A. Bugbee, Metro manager, the film building plans were informally presented by Mr. Fellman's representative. It is thought that the plans will stand revision, as they allow room for but eight offices, and there are at least eleven exchanges in New Orleans anxious to make their headquarters in the building.

A fireproof building constructed to take care of exchange requirements is a structure long needed in the Crescent City, and the proposition has received the unqualified endorsement of local film managers. It is a known fact that at least one large company stayed away from New Orleans because they could not find suitable quarters.

Four Theaters Book Triangle.

The Columbia Amusement Company announces that the following four theaters have taken on Triangle service: Auditorium, Magazine and Louisiana; College, 327 St. Charles; Princess, 1820 Felicity; and a new theater being built by the Holy Name Gymnastic Club, Algiers.

New Moss Representative.

M. W. Lawrence has been appointed representative for the B. S. Moss productions in the New Orleans territory. Mr. Lawrence is booking "The Salamander" with great success. "One Day" follows "The Salamander" and a new production every thirty days thereafter.

D. Graham, who formerly handled the Moss productions in New Orleans, has moved his headquarters to Birmingham, Ala., from which city the Moss films are shipped to various southern representatives.

Empire Theater Opens.

The Empire theater, 1008 Canal street, opened on February 26, with "The Whirl of Life" as the attraction. A large portion of the first day's receipts were donated to a local tent of the Maccabees.

New Orleans Notes.

Charles Sheppard will make an announcement shortly about his new theater which he will erect at Cortez and Cleveland streets, New Orleans.

M. Levy is remodelling the Cadiz theater, in St. Peter street, and has already spent several thousand dollars for this purpose. He has put in a Minusa screen and a General service.

"Poor Little Peppina" broke all attendance records at the Crescent theater this week. W. Fred Bossner, the manager, was so gratified with the enthusiastic reception given this picture in New Orleans that he made arrangements to have it stay over an extra day at the Crescent.

Film Louisiana Orange Groves.

The Pickwick Film Company of New Orleans has just finished the filming of a picture which is descriptive of a trip taken by the New Orleans Association of Commerce to a number of Louisiana orange groves. The trip made this week is the first of a series of journeys that the Association of Commerce will make to various points of interest in the state. Arrangements have been made with the Pickwick Company to have each trip filmed, thus giving New Orleans a good deal of desirable publicity throughout the country.

Three Prominent Visitors.

New Orleans was the axis around which three prominent men in the industry moved this week. These were E. J. Farrell, southern division manager of the General Film; C. E. Tandy, manager of the Southern Paramount, and Mr. Willis of the New York office of the Fox Film. All three men spent but a short time in the Crescent City, but their respective missions were important just the same. All three gentlemen are optimistic as to film conditions in the South.

The Washington theater, New Orleans, has been completely overhauled, and a new Gold Fibre screen and Mason & Hamlin organ were installed in time for the opening on February 20.

Through the courtesy of Manager Bossner of the Crescent theater the New Orleans Times-Picayune has arranged a series of treats for the orphans of the city, who are to be admitted free to the matinees. The inmates of the New Orleans Female Orphan's Asylum were the first recipients of this generous courtesy, and the picture was Mary Pickford in "Little Peppina."

BRONCHO BILLY IN THE SOUTH.

G. M. Anderson, Broncho Billy on the film, was entertained royally in New Orleans this week. Mr. Anderson came here from Chicago on Monday, and left for San Francisco Sunday morning. He liked New Orleans immensely, and in company with J. E. Pearce, the South's most prominent amusement magnate, looked over several desirable studio sites. Mr. Anderson stated in all probability Essanay will locate a studio here. "Broncho Billy" appeared at Pearce's Tudor theater in person last Wednesday night, in the film "Humanity," in which he is featured.

DALLAS NEW LETTER.

By S. A. M. Harrison, Dallas Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

World Increases Force.

DALLAS, TEXAS.—Since Max Graf took charge of the World Dallas office business has increased to such an extent that several additions have been necessary in the office. John C. Penn, formerly with the General, has been added to the road men; also W. B. Wesley, previously with the World's Oklahoma force. George Slater has resigned from the Mutual office at Oklahoma City to take the booking desk, and an assistant shipping clerk and two new stenographers have been added.

Ft. Worth Exhibitors Optimistic.

Fort Worth, Texas.—The exhibitors in Fort Worth are very confident of a victory at the Sunday opening election March 8. Several of them were in Dallas recently and expressed themselves to the WORLD representative most optimistically. creased 75 per cent during the first six weeks of 1916.

J. D. Wheelan Film Company was disappointed in getting into their new quarters in February. A small fire broke out among the paint and refuse left by the workmen and so badly scarred up the interior as to make refinishing necessary.

F. J. Murphy, booking clerk for the Big Four, took a half an hour off on February 21 for purposes not told. C. A. Meade accompanied him and upon their return announced that Mr. Murphy had joined the army of benedicts, Miss Goldie Britain being the bride. This is the second "pop" wedding in this office lately, J. E. Huey, traveler for this company, pulling off the same stunt during a lunch time in January.

D. Callihan of the Metro office spent last week of February in New York.

L. S. Glickman, booking clerk in the World office, has resigned and will probably take a state right feature on the road.

Omaha Exhibitors Ask Injunction

During Scarlet Fever Epidemic Children Were Kept From Shows—Claim Now That Authorities Are Partial to Other Gatherings

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

OMAHA, NEB.—Declaring the city officials failed to enforce the rule against all theaters, twenty-one exhibitors in Omaha asked an injunction restraining the officials from enforcing an order that children under twelve should not be admitted to shows during a scarlet fever epidemic. Three managers had been arrested. A. A. Watts, of the Rohlff theater, 2561 Leavenworth street, was fined $25 and costs.

The applications for an injunction allege that they all agreed to a request to bar the children for fifteen days while the scarlet fever epidemic was at high tide, and that they carried out the agreement, despite there being no official order to that effect. They further aver that the officials are now threatening to keep these patrons away longer, and that their business is suffering by reason of the attempted discrimination, as the children are permitted to attend other theaters and places of amusement. It is alleged that neither these officials nor the City Council has any legal right to make such discriminatory regulations, and the court is asked to issue an injunction to prevent it.

Screen Ball in Denver

Rocky Mountain Screen Club's Luncheon a Big Success—Club Now Preparing for a Grand Ball—President Nolan Pleased With Progress—Many Local Film Men Present.

By E. C. Day, Denver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DENVER, COLO.—About the livest social and commercial organization around Denver today is the youngest—the Rocky Mountain Screen Club. Although only a month old it has held its first semi-monthly luncheon and launched plans for a grand ball.

The luncheon, like everything else that has been attempted by the Screen Club, was a huge success. Upwards of 60 men connected with various branches of the moving picture industry broke bread at the same table Friday noon. It is the first time that such a representative group of motion picture men have been gotten together for such an event. In fact, it is the only luncheon ever given by those interested in the photoplay industry except that held in honor of S. L. Rothapfel on the occasion of his recent visit to Denver.

Speeches were made by the officers of the club and several invited guests. Optimism was the keynote of all the talks and the meeting bubbled over with enthusiasm.

Harry T. Nolan, newly elected president of the Screen Club, made his maiden address as head of the organization.

He had been in Chicago attending the National Convention of Moving Picture Supply men when elected to office and the luncheon afforded him his first opportunity to express his appreciation of the honor conferred upon him and to pledge himself to work untiringly for the good of the club and the photoplay industry.

Nolan Pleased with Progress.

"Denver and the Rocky Mountain region are fast coming into their own as important moving picture centers," said President Nolan. "A year ago Denver was a 'joke' so far as the photoplay was concerned. It was known as such all over the country. It was generally referred to as a 'Nickel Town.' By working individually we have done marvels to improve conditions. Everyone knows the advances we have made in twelve months and anyone can readily realize how much more can be done in the next year with the exchange man working with the exhibitor and all working together for the good of the industry.

"We have organized for the purpose of boosting the moving picture game—not one branch, but the entire industry. We don't want anybody to think that we are going to antagonize them. This club was not formed to oppose anybody or anything. But if we have to fight we will fight like h—l."

Other Speakers and Guests.

W. E. Foley, prominent Denver attorney, who is the club's legal representative, followed President Nolan with a talk in which he urged the members of the club to get into a state of "Preparedness." He said that there was no reason why the Screen club could not become more of an influence and power than any daily paper because, he declared each theater is a center in its community and each exhibitor could if he would do much in moulding public opinion, personally and through his screen.

Other speakers were: The Rev. Garrett Burke, H. H. Buckwalter, H. E. Huffman, secretary; W. S. Rand, first vice president, and Harry Quine, treasurer.

Among those who attended the luncheon were: Al Hagan, E. P. Drury, Louis Goldstein, Carl Stern, E. J. Freeman, George A. Killam, J. S. Applegate, F. Duffy, John Rich, W. E. Foley, W. H. Cree, William T. Binford, H. A. Joplin, Frank R. Harris, E. J. Binford, Thomas F. Foley, Charles V. Hall, A. J. Conway, S. C. Parrott, R. O. Battles, W. E. Scott, E. C. Day, Charles R. Gilmour, A. J. Meyerpeter, W. S. Rand, Louis Nathanson. F. Carmichael. S. H. Berger, J. L. Domann, J. J. Milstein, George Greaves, Charlie Jacobs, L H. Lehrberger, E. M. Erwin, Milton Cohn, J. W. Scott and Albert Feeney.

GETS BACK TABOR GRAND.

The Denver Amusement company, controlled by Cincinnati theatrical men, has given up its lease on the Tabor Grand opera house, the oldest theater in Denver which was recently converted into a moving picture house. Peter McCourt reassumes the lease and will continue to run the photoplay. "Fighting for France" was the first attraction staged by McCourt. It had a week's run.

New Studio at Lakeside.

Arthur E. Hoffman, president of the Hoffman Film company, announces that he will break ground within a month for the company's new studio at Lakeside. He expects to begin production in May. S. D. Franz with Pathe.

Sidney Dayton Franz, formerly with the World Film has been added to the staff of road men maintained by the Pathe exchange in this territory. Franz has left for a month's tour through Northern Colorado and Wyoming.

THE CLEMMER ANNIVERSARY.

Manager H. S. Clemmer Has Special Week—House's Birthday.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SPOKANE, WASH.—Manager Howard S. Clemmer began his first anniversary observance in his theater Sunday, February 20, 1916, and for the entire week is running Mary Pickford in "Poor Little Peppina."

Manager Clemmer is an optimistic and aggressive exhibitor and believes a still greater future with an increase in incomes will be the lot of the moving picture men in every branch of the business.

During the first four days of the anniversary presentation the street in front of the theater was crowded to the street car tracks and around the corner of a cross street. Some stood throughout the running of the seven reels to gain admission to the next show and all standing room allowed by fire rules was taken. The house is fireproof.

The year at the Clemmer has been notable for the presentation of several unusual productions, including the "Birth of a Nation," and to the time of this writing the anniversary feature continues to fill the theater. The entire 12 months have been good ones, according to Dr. Clemmer and his optimism is shown by his own words in the following interview:

Clemmer Is Optimistic.

"I have no patience with the theory that the film industry will run out of ideas. Just as long as books and fiction continue to be written, just so long will moving pictures continue to be produced. Pictures will continue to be in vogue as long as there is any imagination in the world.

"It is foolish to suppose that moving pictures have passed their zenith. It has been demonstrated time and again that the film production is so superior to the spoken drama of the stage production as to be beyond all comparison with it.

Made Record With "Nation" Film.

"I am proud of the fact that we established a Spokane record with the Griffith masterpiece. We presented it against the advice of so-called wise showmen, in the hottest August in 26 years, and for three weeks, which the same wise men criticized as being much too long an engagement. Its reception is especially gratifying to us because it has established a precedent. We feel confident that the public now places confidence in our statements regarding the big productions we book that they are worth while or we would not book them. That will continue to be our policy.

"The year was also notable for such films as Geraldine Farrar in "Carmen," George Beban in "The Alien," Pauline Frederick in "The Eternal City," and other plays, Blackton's "The Battle Cry of Peace," "The Cheat," 'The Old Homestead" and, of course, the long list of popular productions in which the Paramount favorites have appeared, including the many vehicles of Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clark, Dustin Farnum, Blanche Sweet, Hazel Dawn and John Barrymore.

The Falling Off for Films.

"Our experience has certainly not been that there is any falling off in interest in moving pictures. On the other hand, interest is increasing. People are studying the lives of the film stars and every newspaper and magazine in the country publishes hundreds of inches of film news weekly and it is eagerly read. I look to see 1916 the biggest year in the business with so many advanced suggestions and new ideas.

"So much for the past. I am grateful to the citizens of Spokane and the Inland Empire for the support they have given the Clemmer theater. We are striving to give the proper service in the proper place. I will let no opportunity pass to secure the best pictures made and I will aim to outdo my past efforts this year. The average moving picture manager works about -6 hours a day. I am willing to make it 18 or 20 hours a day if necessary."

Clemmer's Children's Programs.

During the year the Clemmer established the children's program in Spokane, one hour each Saturday morning being reserved for the kiddies when a special program, shown at no other time, is presented. The Clemmer is claimed to be the third theater in the United States to adopt this feature. Special organ recitals from time to time have also served to give the theater tone as a musical center. Under the manipulation of Jesse Crawford, the big pipe organ is becoming more and more a feature of the Clemmer service.

SCANDINAVIAN FILMS SEEN.

More than 400 Scandinavian citizens, of whom 90 per cent. were Norwegians, attended Odin hall to see the moving pictures of Norway, its scenery, life and industries which were exhibited by the Norwegian government at the San Francisco exposition in charge of Hans Berge. The pictures shown by Mr. Berge included scenes of the fishing industry, the catching, curing and packing of herring and sardines, also of the timber industries.

Pictures were also exhibited of the national sport, skeeing, and the centennial celebrations of the independence of Norway held in Christiania in 1914, together with scenes on the fjords and mountains. The exhibit was under the auspices of the Sons and Daughters of Norway and the Scandinavian Brotherhood of America.

War Pictures Draw Crowds.

Closely following the "German War Pictures" which drew large audiences at the Hippodrome last week comes the presentation of a three-part Pathe film, "The Horrors of War," at the same house, and men, women and children are flocking to see it.

IN CALIFORNIA.

Vernon Moore, formerly with the California Film Exchange at both Los Angeles and San Francisco, has been placed in charge of the single reel and re-booking department of the Progressive exchange, taking the place of Frank E. McCoy. The latter is now on the road for this firm handling the Paramount Picturegrafs and industrial subjects.

New Fire Laws Proposed

San Francisco Fire Department Investigated Conditions in Local Film Exchanges —Assistant Chiefs Russell and Conlon Recommend New Ordinance Setting Special Districts and Fire Proof Buildings for Exchanges.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal.—An exhaustive investigation of conditions prevailing in San Francisco film exchanges has been completed by Assistant Chiefs Russell and Conlon, of the fire department, and a report has just been filed with Chief Murphy. In this report it is recommended that an ordinance be passed to permit moving picture film exchanges to carry on their business only in strictly fireproof buildings and to confine them to a restricted district.

It is conceded by film interests that regulations in regard to the storage of film are lax here, but they state that for some time they have been working to safeguard their property by installing vaults and in otherwise improving their places of business so that it will not be necessary for the authorities to pass drastic measures to insure safety. While the buildings on Golden Gate Avenue, now occupied by a dozen exchanges, are not absolutely fire-proof, they are of slow-burning construction and are occupied almost exclusively by concerns engaged in the film exchange or poster business.

TURNER & DAHNKEN PLANS.

The Turner & Dahnken Circuit, which recently announced its intention of erecting a large moving picture theater at Stockton, Calif., has made a slight change in its plans, but this has only been to secure a more advantageous location. The new site is on Main street, between Hunter and San Joaquin, on the property owned by R. E. Wilhoit, and here will be erected a theater with a seating capacity of about 1800 from the plans of A. W. Cornelius of San Francisco, who designed the fine house of this concern at Berkeley.

The building will be a five-story structure and a portion of the space on the upper floors will be occupied by the Moose Lodge. Work on the plans has been commenced and the theater is to be ready for occupancy within six months. The main floor, exclusive of exits and lobby, will be 75 by 160 feet in size.

The Reno, Nev., house of this concern, representing its first venture outside California, was opened a short time ago and has been doing an exceedingly heavy business ever since. The opening attraction was "The Ne'er-o-Well" and at the opening performances the crowd could not be handled through the main entrance, necessitating the use of the exits. Governor Boyle, Mayor Byington and many men prominent in the political and commercial life of the State were present at the opening and brief speeches were made, the firm of Turner & Dahnken being represented by E. B. Johnson. Later a banquet was tendered by R. L. Fulton, of the Reno Amusement Company to the stockholders of the concern and the honored guests.

This theater is the finest in the state of Nevada and was designed by architect George A. Ferris. It has a seating capacity of more than 1600, about one-third of the seats being in the balcony. Music is furnished by the magnificent organ which attracted so much attention last year in the Palace of Mines at the Exposition at San Francisco. The new house is under the management of R. G. Hunter, formerly of Vacaville, Calif.

LARKIN THEATER TO REOPEN.

The Larkin theater, on Larkin street, near Post, which has been closed for some time, has been taken over by Charles W. Goodwin, formerly secretary and manager of the Novagem Jewel Company which had a concession at the Exposition, and William Goodwin, vice-president and state manager of the Pacific States Electric Company. The house has been remodeled, a new ventilating system installed and will be opened as a first class moving picture house. A ten years' lease has been taken on the property. Charles W. Goodwin will be the active manager and assumes his new duties with a splendid knowledge of the theatrical business, having at one time had charge of the Elite Theater here.

"Fighting Blood" Given Private Showing.

On the morning of Feb. 25 a private showing of the Fox attraction "Fighting Blood," featuring William Farnum, was given at the Empress theater through the courtesy of Sid Grauman, manager of the house, the event being attended by three hundred representative exhibitors from all parts of Northern California, many making the trip to this city especially for the occasion. A five-piece orchestra was on hand to render appropriate music and the production was enthusiastically received.

Sun Photoplay Opens Branch.

The Sun Photoplay Company of New York has opened a branch office on the fifteenth floor of the Hewes Building, under the management of I. A. Rosenthal. This concern is acting as marketing agents of world's rights to photoplays and is handlling the "Whirl of the World," which is booked for presentation at the Cort. Mr. Rosenthal is planning to visit Los Angeles shortly and establish connections there. An exhibition room is to be fitted up adjoining the offices of the concern as soon as it is definitely known what the proposed changes in the film storage regulation will be.

Manager Visits Branches.

Denham Palmer, manager of the Pacific Coast division of the World Film, has left for Seattle and before returning to his headquarters at San Francisco will visit Denver, Salt Lake City and Los Angeles.

Ben Brodsky Visiting the States.

Ben Brodsky, general manager of the China Cinema Company, reached San Francisco a short time ago from the Orient, bringing with him about 20,000 feet of negative of scenes in China, many from spots seldom visited by white men. He will spend some time in this country and while here will arrange for the disposal of the pictures. He was accompanied by R. E. Hasbrook, manager of the Shanghai branch, who left here three years ago to engage in the film business in the Far East.

Schools Want High-Class Subjects.

That the schools of California now using moving pictures are steadily demanding better subjects, and that they are willing to pay a fair price for suitable material, is the interesting report of F. L. Haines, Jr., of the Atlas Educational Film Company. This concern is making many sales of projection machines, late ones being to the Montezuma Ranch school, near Los Gatos, and to the Hawthorne grammar school at Fresno. The Universal camera is also coming in for much attention, a complete outfit having been sold recently to B. Moisant, camera man for the Industrial Moving Picture Company of this city, and who also does work for the Pathe News.

A Cloud In a Clear Sky

Editorial in Portland, Oregon, Paper Causes Comment—With All Censorship Matters Amicably Settled, the Evening Telegram Apparently Seeks to Reopen Issue—Mrs. Colwell Thankful.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

PORTLAND, ORE.—The peaceful and cloudless sky that has for several weeks canopied Portland's censorship situation, was rudely disturbed and mussed on February 24 from a source most unexpected. The Evening Telegram, one of Portland's leading afternoon papers, spread upon its editorial page an article evidently calculated to reopen the Portland censorship issue, recently amicably adjusted. In part the editorial reads:

"Moving picture films need censorship. That is a recognized fact. The Telegram, in common with other papers of the country, is laboring to secure the elimination of subjects and scenes of life that the newspapers themselves eliminate from their columns. . . . Portland's censors have been more than liberal, as any one who sees the pictures exhibited can testify. There would be less agitation against the 'movies' if the censorship were more strict."

Exhibitors and exchange men expressed much surprise that such an editorial should appear at this time, when every effort is being made by film men to cooperate with the city administration and an atmosphere of peace exists. They question whether or not some ulterior motive, for example, lack of advertising patronage by motion picture theaters, was really back of the editorial. Mrs. E. B. Colwell, secretary of the censor board, stated that she was pleased with the attitude of the Telegram.

HIPPODROME FOR PORTLAND.

Ackerman and Harris, controlling a theater circuit in California, will open a Hippodrome theater in the playhouse now occupied by the Orpheum in Portland on May 6. The new theater will show pictures and vaudeville and Jos. H. Muller, former manager of the Orpheum at Spokane, will manage the house.

Photographed Mules on Snow Shoes.

W. A. Van Scoy, cameraman for the Pathe Weekly, with headquarters in Portland, returned recently from a trip through the Siskiyou mountains in southern Oregon and northern California, where he had several thrilling experiences in photographing the methods employed in delivering Uncle Sam's mail in this snow-covered country. Mr. Van Scoy and his party encountered snow so deep that the mules carrying the packs and the mail were equipped with snow shoes to negotiate the drifts for a distance of 25 miles, from Etna Mills to Sawyer's Bar. Photographs of sidehill sleds with one runner higher than the other, the skii-men who carry the mail during stormy weather, and the snowshoe mules were photographed by Mr. Van Scoy.

Local Office in Contest.

George Endert, manager of the World Film Corporation in Seattle, was a recent visitor in Portland and outlined with Fred Locher, local manager, the film selling campaign which is being conducted on a contest basis by the World Film.

Mr. Locher and W. H. Rankin, road man, are working hard to pull down a prize for the local office.

Denham Palmer, western division manager, with headquarters in San Francisco, was another visitor in the local World office. Mr. Palmer was on his periodical tour of inspection and en route to Seattle.

"Mary Page" Booking Well.

The Pickford theater is the Portland house to book the Essanay serial, for first run. The management of the Pickford has arranged with a local department store to decorate a "Mary Page" window, showing the models of gowns worn by Edna Mayo in the serial.

At Eugene, Oregon, A. H. McDonald, manager of the Rex theater, started the serial by joining with the Women's Club of the city in declaring a tag day, admitting purchasers of tags to his theater, half of the proceeds of the tag sale going to the building fund of the Women's Club.

VANCOUVER NEWS LETTER.

By E. C. Thomas, Vancouver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Government Cameraman Talks.

VICTORIA, B. C.—D. J. Dwyer, a Victoria man, and official photographic representative of the Dominion Government, was in Victoria recently, and had many interesting experiences to relate concernig his work since the war began. Some of the most impressive pictures he has secured, however, were taken shortly after the declaration of war, at the time of the departure of the 30th Battalion from Victoria, when he secured fine scenes of the troop-laden ship and the docks crowded with people. These pictures were put out under the Urban trade mark, and have created great enthusiasm throughout the Empire.

After receiving his appointment at Ottawa Mr. Dwyer proceeded to Shorncliffe, and spent many months in the south of England with his camera, paying particular attention to scenes and incidents of interest to Canadians, such as the ceremony at Guildhall when Sir Robert Borden, Premier of Canada, was presented with the freedom of the City of London.

Mr. Dwyer, who now holds the rank of lieutenant, has returned to England, and expects to leave in a short time for the trench country in France. Many of his pictures taken in England will be shown in Western Canada some time in April.

Two Lively Picture Men.

George L. Broy and Sam W. Whitehead, owners of the Canadian rights for the perennial Selig favorite, "The Spoilers," have recently made a successful tour of the entire Dominion, and have now returned to the Eastern provinces, where the feature continues to draw capacity houses. Although both Mr. Broy and Mr. Whitehead consider San Francisco their home, they contemplate a long residence in this country, and have made many friends since their entry into the Canadian field.

Geo. L. Broy.

The one difficulty in the trip now nearing completion was the British Columbia censor's rejection of the big picture, which was reported at length in these columns. As a result of considerable agitation, newspaper and otherwise, the Attorney-General of the province was inducted for the first time to act as a board of appeal, and promptly passed the subject without a cut. The following week "The Spoilers," shown at the Colonial theater in Vancouver, did the biggest week's business in point of numbers, ever done by a feature in Western Canada, and the continued success of the production in British Columbia induced Broy & Whitehead to maintain a booking office in Vancouver for a period of about three months.

S. W. Whitehead.

Andrew P. Keegan Promoted.

Vancouver, B. C.—Andrew P. Keegan, lately manager of the Vancouver office of the Specialty Film Import, Ltd., handling the Pathe output throughout Canada, recently received from General Manager Leon Ouimet notification of his promotion to a position involving the supervision of the Pathe business in all of Western Canada. Mr. Keegan was the first Pathe branch manager in the Dominion, and came to Vancouver only a short time ago from the St. John (N. B.) office, which he opened.

His territory under the new arrangement includes British Columbia, Alberta, Manitoba and Saskatchewan, with offices in Vancouver and Winnipeg. The establishment of a branch in Calgary is now being discussed, but has not been definitely decided upon.

W. E. Allan continues as manager at Winnipeg, while the new manager of the Vancouver office is Charles Barnard, formerly Mr. Keegan's assistant here.

Capacity with Chaplin.

Vancouver, B. C.—That Charlie Chaplin has not lost his drawing power in Vancouver, at least, has been conclusively shown during the past week, when his latest picture, "A Night in the Show," was shown at the Rex and Globe theaters. While the program including this production were on, both houses did capacity business.

W. A. Wilkinson Books Features.

Kamloops, B. C.—Manager W. A. Wilkinson of the Opera House at Kamloops, B. C., accompanied by Mrs. Wilkinson, visited Vancouver recently for the purpose of arranging a feature service for his house, and has since returned to the interior. Many V-L-S-E features will be shown at this theater soon, and "The Goddess" has also been booked. "The Battle Cry of Peace" will also be played at an early date. During a recent week a special feature was made of A. D. Kean's pictures of various B. C. military battalions.

Liked "My Old Dutch."

Vancouver, B. C.—The Universal production, "My Old Dutch," which was shown recently at the Colonial, received probably more favorable comment from patrons than any feature which has been shown in Vancouver for several weeks.

It is stated that the Bluebird Photo-Plays will start at the Colonial about the middle of March.

Business Notes.

Edmonton, B. C.—Manager Allen of the Monarch theater, Edmonton, announces a Pauline Frederick week, during which several productions featuring the popular star will be run.

Winnipeg, Man.—"Mr. Grex of Monte Carlo" (Lasky) proved so popular at the Province theater in Winnipeg that Manager J. A. Schuberg immediately booked it for a run at his other local house, the Bijou.

Vancouver, B. C.—The Orpheum is the only house in Vancouver which changes its feature three times a day. Manager James Pilling had a hard time one day recently in getting a suitable picture, but kept the third one (Kalem's "The Pitfall") for the usual half week run.

A Three-Province Censor Board?

Winnipeg, Manitoba—It is reported from Winnipeg that negotiations are now under way to have Alberta combine with Manitoba and Saskatchewan in the establishment of a provincial censorship board, to control the film output in all three provinces. It seems assured that the censoring of moving pictures will be transferred from the city of Winnipeg to the jurisdiction of the provincial government, under the bill introduced by Hon. Edward Brown, provincial treasurer, but if the two boards combine it will mean a decided change in the standards to be established in Alberta, or else in the other two provinces, as Alberta has consistently been much more liberal in its rulings.

Gives Birthday Party to Kiddies.

Kamloops, B. C.—Manager Brown of the Empress theater in Kamloops, B. C., recently celebrated his birthday by inviting all children under 18 years of age to a free matinee.

A Brighter Pantages Theater.

Vancouver, B. C.—The Pantages theater in Vancouver has recently been thoroughly renovated and re-decorated in a pleasing combination of pale blue, gold and cream, appropriate and striking designs being used for the mural effects. These changes are the result of the recent visit to Vancouver of Alexander Pantages, at the head of the circuit.

Rex Donates 1,000 Tickets.

Regina, Sask.—H. L. Gage manager of the Rex at Regina, Sask., has presented one thousand admission tickets to the Forget Chapter, I. O. D. E. These tickets are good at any time from now until September 1, and the Daughters of the Empire are to keep all the money received from the sale of the tickets, for their patriotic work.

New Exchange Tax Coming.

Winnipeg, Manitoba—A bill will be brought in during the present session of the Manitoba legislature providing for a tax to be levied on all public amusements. Its ramifications, as at present outlined, include a tax payable by film exchanges, which will probably be taxed a certain amount per reel rented or on the shelves. The bill is not in shape as yet.

W. P. Dewees in Alberta Cities.

W. P. Dewees of the Rex was in Seattle this week in connection with the deal, and it is announced that he will shortly leave for Alberta cities, where contracts will be closed with exhibitors for exclusive showing of the various productions handled by the National Film Service. It is expected that the distribution of Triangles will begin in the near future.

The V. L. S. E. features are meeting with considerable success in this territory, and the Rex this week is doing exceptionally good business with Lubin's "The Great Divide." The big Vitagraph special, "The Battle Cry of Peace," comes to the Rex for its first Canadian showing on Feb. 28.

Fined for False Ad.

Toronto Exhibitor Had News Weekly From Which Censors Had Cut a Scene—Poster Had Not Been Changed to Conform and Manager Has to Pay $26.00 in a Police Court for Advertising Pictures Not Shown.

By W. M. Gladish, Toronto Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

TORONTO, ONT.—One line printed on a poster outside of his moving picture theater cost W. A. Manson the sum of $26 when he was found guilty in the Toronto police court of advertising a picture which was not shown on the screen in his house. The picture in question was a portion of a news pictorial released by the Selig company and was entitled "Von Hindenburg Plans Drive on Greece." Because of the present international situation, the nature of the subject made it rather hard for Manager Manson and his explanation for the absence of the scenes went for naught.

Censor Had Condemned the Scenes.

It was brought out in his evidence that the Ontario Board of Censors had condemned the portion of the reel and it had been cut entirely out of the film. After the picture had been received by the exchange from the censors it had been sent hurriedly to the theater in order to be in time for the evening's show and the accompanying poster had not been corrected.

Following this explanation on the part of Mr. Manson, a new angle was introduced into the case by the declaration by Staff Sergeant McKinney of the Toronto Police Department that the poster should have been submitted to the police for censoring and the Magistrate concurred in this view. A sentence of $20 and costs was then imposed, although the charge against the theater manager did not refer to the censoring of the poster.

Mr. L. Heyd, lawyer for the defence, thought it very unfair that the manager had been brought to court for not showing a picture which the law had taken from him. He complained that the film censors were frequently very slow and sometimes pictures were received back barely in time for an evening's performance.

The charge was laid against Manager Manson by Mr. Otto Elliott, assistant provincial inspector of moving pictures, who went into the theater to see the views of the German army after reading the poster outside.

OFFICIAL REFUSES PERMIT.

City Architect Won't Let House Be Enlarged—Gives Reason.

Toronto, Ont.—A great stir has been caused in civic government circles of Toronto through the action of City Architect Pearse in refusing to carry out the instructions of the city council to grant a permit to Mrs. Ellen Woolson to allow her to enlarge her picture house, the Gem, 1184 Queen street, East, to accommodate 300 more people. The city architect has refused on the ground that a civic by-law calls for absolute fireproof construction of all theaters with a seating capacity of over 500. In the present instance, however, the members of the city council deemed that the existing theater could be enlarged because of its location and the fact that it has an unusual number of emergency exits and is otherwise safeguarded against fire.

The present building now accommodates 471 people and, accordingly, does not come within the scope of the by-law. Increasing the seating capacity to 771 means, according to the city architect, that the house must be reconstructed throughout without exposed wood and also to conform to certain plans and specifications. It has been pointed out to Architect Pearse that the proposed change is really beneficial because the enlargement of the floor space would necessitate the removal of a wooden partition and the two side walls would then be solid brick.

The city architect claims that the special concession secured by Mrs. Woolson does not change the by-law and he does not intend to swerve from the strict letter of the law, he declares, even though the city council requests him to do so. He claims to have the final say in the matter and has announced definitely that he will not issue the alteration permit.

NEW CANADIAN MANAGER.

Toronto, Ont.—The Fox Film Corporation has announced the appointment of a new manager to look after the Fox interests in Canada, to succeed Harry F. Campbell of Boston, who has resigned from the Canadian post on account of ill health. The new divisional director is L. T. Rogers, manager of the New York exchange of the Fox. Mr. Rogers recently spent three days in Toronto and two days in Montreal to investigate the Canadian possibilities.

Ben Rogers, associated with Mr. Campbell at the Fox branch in Boston, has been assigned to the Fox sales force at Toronto and Mr. C. Crawford of Boston has also made a permanent transfer to Toronto.

Mitchell Granby opened the Toronto branch of the Fox corporation about December 1st and so far has secured a very fair amount of business. Fifteen Fox features have been released in Ontario so far.

Film Men to Be Soldiers.

Toronto, Ont.—Eight members of the staff of the Toronto branch of the General Film have left the employ of the company to enlist with Canada's overseas army. They are: W. Carling, W. Limage, J. Brooker, G. Brewster, W. Taylor, F. F. Bromley, J. Pollard and V. Belward.

Other exchanges in Toronto have also made considerable contributions to Canada's fighting force, but the General branch heads the list.

Family Theater Opens.

Chatham, Ont.—The Family theater, formerly the Classic, has been reopened under new management. Mr. J. Hutchinson now directs the affairs of the house. He has arranged to change the program twice each week. He is running "The Broken Coin" as one of his present features.

Toronto, Ont.—After an absence of only two weeks, Metro features are again being seen on the screen at Shea's Hippodrome, Toronto, one of the largest picture houses in Canada. During the layoff two fine Blue-Bird features were seen at this theater.

Another evidence of the fine quality of David Horsley productions comes in the shape of an unsolicited congratulatory letter from J. Celler, manager of the Decatur Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., to Mr. Horsley. Mr. Celler says:

"Wish to compliment you and Mr. Crane Wilbur on the fine showing of the Mutual Masterpicture, de luxe edition, "Vengeance is Mine!" This photoplay was not only good in the story, acting and original ideas, but started off with the story without wasting a whole reel in the introduction of characters, etc., as in the majority of features. Our patrons enjoyed every moment of the play up to the last minute.

"Hoping that all your future productions will be as good as this one, I remain,

Very sincerely yours,

(Signed) J. CELLER."

Future David Horsley productions will be as good, if not better, than "Vengeance is Mine"

Among them are: "The Hidden Law," featuring Margaret Gibson and William Clifford, released March 25; and "The Love Liar," featuring Crane Wilbur, released March 27. Each is in five reels and is distributed as a Mutual Masterpicture, de luxe edition.

Attention is also called to the popular Cub Comedies with George Ovey, one of which is released every Friday.

Mason goes to the place and sees Helen delivering a package, which he finds to contain opium. His duty demands that he must arrest her. Vorec realizes it will be discovered that he is a criminal and ruin Helen's happiness. Before he can see Helen to confess she is arrested by Mason. She defends her father, taking the full blame herself. Mason resigns from the force.

DARE DEVIL BILL (March 18).—The cast: Billy Dawson (Billie Reeves); His Sweetheart (Margaret Adair); His rival (Clarence Jay Elmer). Written by Clay M. Greene. Produced by Earl Metcalfe.

Billy Dawson has money enough to entertain the pleasure lovers of his acquaintance. This has made him the envy of one or two suitors of Betta Mann and Notta Mann, the most desirable young women of the town. While promenading with Betta Mann, a loafer accosts her, and Billy has not the courage to resent the insult. This is done for him by Tom Hale, his prominent rival, and Billy is kidded to such an extent by the townsmen for his cowardice that he resolves to go out into the woolly West, so that he may learn to be brave and thereby eventually win Betta. Billy cannot accustom himself to the rough stuff of the Westerners. His particular aversion is Joe Hale, known as "Rattlesnake Joe," who is a brother of his rival Tom Hale.

Billy keeps away from the cowpunchers, but his letters to Betta and the other Eastern townspeople are bristling with narratives of reckless heroism. Tom Hale's letters from his brother, Joe, however, do not bear out the truth of these narratives, and when Billy comes home to prove that he is a man, Tom resolves to unmask him. Billy arrives in his home town garbed in the get up of a western desperado. The Mann girls and their mother decide to give him a dinner in celebration of the event. At the dinner Billy relates a series of blood-curdling adventures.

Billy's narratives creat much admiration among his hearers. But, as he ends the last one, Rattlesnake Joe, who has been sent for, stands before him and he is struck with terror. There is some gun play; Billy pleads for mercy, acknowledges he has been lying, and is chased out of the house by the men.

He tells her that he and a pal have just broken into and robbed a bank, and, being pursued by the police, separated to throw them off the trail. The burglar decides to leave the loot in her possession until he calls for it the next day.

Slick, returning to his room, finds it empty. Red has been wounded and taken to the police station, where, at this moment, he is confessing the crime. The police make their way to Slick's room, but through a clever trick he manages to make good his escape.

The next morning Kate is still in possession of the money left in her charge, when the landlady appears and demands that she either pay what she owes, or get out at once. It is sheer desperation that prompts her to take a bill from the satchel—stating to the landlady that she had received a remittance. After six weeks have elapsed, Kate leaves the city, taking the money with her.

Six months later Kate is employed as a stenographer in a wealthy stock broker's office. The son of her employer has grown very fond of Kate, and she of him, but the thougnt of her charge forces her to mildly but firmly reject his proffered attentions. One day her employer receives a letter containing a hundred dollar bill, stating that it was conscience money which a dishonest employe begged to return as restitution for what he had taken. This gives her an idea, and she asks her employer whether should a business house or a bank be robbed of a sum and that sum returned intact there would be an investigation. Her employer states that the bank would be very glad and consider itself lucky to get the money. She goes to the express office and ships the money to the bank president. The only receipt she gets is a notice in the newspaper to the effect that the money had been returned from an unknown source. Her mind now free of torment, she accepts her employer's son when he next proposes, and they are married.

Some time later, while on a shopping tour, she is recognized by Slick Freeman, who secures the license number of the machine. Armed with this, he goes up to the Automobile License Bureau and gets the name and address of the owner. The next day he calls on her to get the money he left in her keeping. He does not believe her story of its return, until she shows him proof published in the newspaper, which she had retained. At the dinner table her husband reads an article to the effect that Slick Freeman, the noted bank robber, was wounded in a saloon brawl and had confessed to his part of the robbery, stating that he had given the money in charge of a woman, but dying before he mentioned her name.

Aunt Mary arrives and her rejuvenation begins. Betty dresses her hair in the latest Parisian style, and lends her one of her evening gowns. Aunt Mary, who has been led to believe that the party is in her honor, enters into the spirit of the occasion and has a glorious time. Their boss makes a big haul from Nevada Gold Stock and Grant is seized with the desire to take a flyer in it. He learns that Willetts, conscience-stricken, has sent Nan and Dick each $5,000 with a conciliatory letter, and plans to secure Nan's share. When Dick invests in Nevada stock and becomes rich Grant induces Nan to let him have her $5,000. With the money he, too, makes a big haul, but two sharpers induce him to join them in a fraudulent mining proposition. The worthless stock is boomed so cleverly that Dick and his fellow clerks invest all they have in it.

THEIR WEDDING DAY (March 10).—To find proper husbands for two marriageable daughters is a hard proposition to confront any father. But when one of them happens to be extremely fat, then indeed, it is a very serious task. Yet such was the dilemma that Judge Findem had to face, for his elder daughter, Tiny, the fat duckling, always found herself to be amongst those also present.

Ethel, the younger daughter, was Tiny's exact antithesis and had the local swains all out of breath in pursuing her. To settle Tiny's future, the Judge finally inserts a personal advertisement in the local papers, offering to settle a substantial dowry to any one who would marry her. This ad. attracts the attention of Jabbs, the town sport, who is in financial distress, and also of Pokes, the village loafer, who must find a wife before he can secure employment. Both Pokes and Jabbs call upon Tiny at different times, only to desert her once they happen to see the pretty sister Ethel.

Unknown to each other, Pokes and Jabbs scheme to kidnap Ethel and engage two different pairs of thugs to carry out their instructions. However, as the thugs have never seen Ethel, the plans miscarry, Jabbs' thugs carrying off the mother. While Pokes' pair abduct Tiny. The thugs carry their respective victims to the Judge's office, where Pokes and Jabbs are anxiously awaiting the girl. Great is their consternation when instead of the girl of their dreams, they find Tiny and her irate mother confronting them when the thugs remove the coverings. The Judge determined, however, to force somebody to marry Tiny, now that he has a chance, tries to force either Pokes or Jabbs to become her husband. Pokes and Jabbs, however, manage to escape and the desperate father succeeds only in marrying Tiny to one of the thugs who kidnapped her. Pokes and Jabbs make haste back to the Judge's residence to capture Ethel, but after their hard run, arrive on the scene in time to find Ethel content in the arms of her sweetheart, Roy.

NERVE AND GASOLINE (March 16).—When Runt is sent by his wife to seek employment, he takes great care to avoid all places where he may find work. Even the "Help Wanted" columns of the paper are distasteful to him as the only part of the paper in which he is interested is the Sporting Page.

Plump on the other hand is so industrious that he could sleep at any position he ever held. Plump succeeds in rescuing Florence, the stenographer, at the garage from rough treatment at the hands of some striking employees, for which act he is rewarded by the position of mechanic. While Runt is enjoying himself in the park, Mrs. Runt's brother, whom Runt has never met, arrives at the Runt home and takes his sister out for a ride in a taxi.

During their ride the car becomes stalled in the park near where Runt is reading, and the chauffeur is induced by the delegate of strikers to quit the job, so he deserts the car. When the garage receives the hurry call for help from Mrs. Runt's brother, Plump is sent out with his little "Flivver" to aid them.

As Plump knows less about an auto than he does about the North Pole, his efforts to drive through the streets are laughable in the extreme. Runt seeing the antics of Plump and the little "Flivver" follows the big fellow to the spot where Mrs. Runt and her brother are anxiously awaiting help.

When Runt sees his wife in the arms of an unknown man his anger knows no bounds and in his rage he starts to make a general "clean-up" of the entire crowd. In the melee that follows, Plump's auto explodes blowing Plump back to the garage while Mrs. Runt succeeds in

A PAIR OF SKINS (March 17).—Up to the time that Prof. Chasebugs received a letter announcing the arrival of Jabbs, the four-flush hunter, Pokes had been the accepted suitor for Ethel's hand.

However, once her father, the Professor, hears Jabbs describe the manner in which he killed the ferocious man-eating tiger in the jungles of India, he resolves that Ethel shall belong to no other man. As the Professor is interested in the study of bugs of various kinds, it is only natural that he should fall a victim to Jabbs' stories of his skill as a hunter, so he naturally succumbs to Jabbs' proposition to go hunting. Pokes in the meantime has been practicing up in his efficiency as a marksman much to the discomfort of his two friends who volunteer to hold the target for Pokes, forgets all about the target and shoots his friends instead. When Jabbs, Ethel, the Professor and his wife arrive at the hunting grounds, Jabbs proceeds to give a demonstration of his skill as a marksman and all is well until a bear creeps out from the underbrush and chases the Professor and his family from the place.

Jabbs calmly proceeds with his demonstration unmindful of the hurried departure of the Chasebug family until a friendly bug notifies him of the presence of the bear. Once he becomes cognizant of the bear's presence, Jabbs proceeds to break all speed records back to the Chasebug bungalow passing the Chasebug family en route.

Arriving at the bungalow, the once mighty hunter rushes up to the roof, where he locks the skylight and peers down upon the family frantically trying to force their way up from the attic in a vain attempt to escape from the pursuing bear. Great, however, is his chagrin when on looking down again he finds Ethel lying contently in the arms of the bear and to his horror the supposed bear is none other than his despised rival, Pokes.

Father and mother are determined, no matter what the cost, that their daughter shall wed a title. Having made an appointment for His Lorship, the Honorable Cheesetowers Cranberry, with their beautiful daughter, Betty, that afternoon they await anxiously for the English nobleman's arrival.

His Lordship arrives in good time, but meets with a frosty reception from Betty, although her father and mother remind her that if she marries Lord Cranberry she will be able to call herself "Lady Cranberry" and flaunt her position before all her dear girl friends.

Eddie, a traveling salesman for the Gold Dust Soup Company, doesn't take kindly to His Nobs and when he reads in the local newspaper that Betty's engagement is to be announced to Lord Cranberry he registers great rage with both sides of his face.

While His Nobs is having his hair dressed by Gus, his valet, Eddie calls on Betty. Betty has taken a violent fancy to Eddie and breaks her dinner engagement with His Nobs to go out with the charming young salesman. That night Eddie hears two crooks talking of the Betty Van Cliff-Lord Cranberry engagement.

"As the husband of Miss Van Cliff," one crook points out to the other, "they will never suspect Lord Cranberry of being 'Dirty Jim, the counterfeiter.'"

That's enough for Eddie. A squadron of detectives are harnessed up and with Eddie leading the way, the party nab "Dirty Jim," alias Lord Cranberry, just as he is slipping an engagement ring on Betty's finger. When "Dirty Jim" is carted off to jail things come easier for Eddie as far as Betty is concerned.

The deacon drives up to the girl's home in a buggy, and leaves the horse tied outside. Eddie and his friends secure a wooden horse used as an advertisement for a livery stable, and exchange horses with the deacon's. Then they send word to the deacon that he is wanted at the church. The deacon is compelled to leave without deciding his fate.

Hurriedly jumping into his buggy he tries in vain to start the horse. He does not realize the trick that has been played on him until the livery stable owner has missed the horse and comes with an officer. The deacon is arrested for horse stealing and taken to the lockup. Betty has observed the trick played upon her suitor and is enjoying the fun, unseen by the deacon.

Eddie returns to the house and tells of the trick. As father has expected someone to ask for the daughter's hand, it is not such a difficult job for Eddie to win his consent and the two laugh over the deacon's Waterloo.

WARRIORS OF THE AIR (March 9).—On the same reel with "A Romance of Toyland," published on page 1707, issue of March 11, released March 9.

"Warriors of the Air" is a series of pictures of the air craft of the Allies. We are shown several varieties of machines, monoplanes and biplanes and the new type which carries several passengers. Very remarkable views taken from a machine in flight are seen. We look down from our own craft upon smaller machines executing all sorts of maneuvers below us.

From this great height the earth looks like a patchwork quilt, and the roads like white scratches on the negative. We fly through actual clouds, and mount above them. They look like films of mist, but thicken until they nearly obscure the ground below.

SAFETY FIRST (March 16).—(By courtesy of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit System and the Brooklyn Institute for Safety.)

Children are cautioned against the danger of catching hitches by a graphic demonstration of the result of doing so. The injured child is shown suffering the consequences of his carelessness. Boys have been repeatedly warned by the car conductors not to jump on the back of the cars, but they persist in doing so, and an accident is the result. The danger of playing in the streets is also illustrated. A boy is run over by a trolley car, but his life is saved by the wheelguard, a device which has saved many lives. Then the boys decide to play in the vacant lot where there is no danger of being killed.

The right and wrong ways of getting on and off a street car are illustrated in graphic fashion, and the new type of car cannot move when the doors are open is shown. The necessity of observing the near-side stop for street cars is demonstrated. The different results of the carelessness and careful driving of automobiles closes the film.

SAMMY JOHNSON—STRONG MAN (On same reel as foregoing—Cartoon Comedy by Pat Sullivan).

Sammy's mother was washing clothes and she called her son to carry home the basket. He was lost in contemplation of the advertisement of "Bullo," which makes men strong as bulls. He came, took the basket on his head and went back to rapt study of the fascinating poster. Then he began to dream. He drank a bottle of "Bullo" and the effect was immediate. Sammy is in the desert and he sees a giraffe enjoying a bunch of bananas hanging from a high tree. A little way off there is a bear who just cannot reach a bunch of the fruit. The doughty Sammy catches him by the neck and stretches it to the desired length.

Sammy comes to the hut of a cannibal, who is asleep under a tree, while his little daughter plays outside. A deep ditch separates Sammy from his charmer, but he pulls up a palm tree and makes a bridge on which to cross to her. The cannibal wakes and chases Sammy away, shooting after him with his bow and arrows. Sammy pulls them out, counting "He loves me, he loves me not." A hungry lion enters the hut and cries for help are heard. Sammy flies to the rescue, drives off the lion and claims the maiden. Just as he is about to enjoy the fruits of his daring he wakes to find his mother and the neglected basket of washing.

THE DOLL DOCTOR (Two Parts—March 10).—The cast: Harry Belden (Harry Benham); Violet Talmadge (Violet Mersereau); Little Violet (Melissa Fahrbach); The Doll Doctor (Jack Lewis). Written by Helmer Bergman. Produced by John Harvey.

While driving through the slums, Harry Belden accidentally runs over a doll that is dropped by a child. He takes the child to the old doll doctor to have it repaired. There he meets Violet Talmadge, who is buying a large quantity of dolls to give out on Christmas eve to the children of the poor. Belden assists her home with them and obtains permission to call the following night to help her deliver them.

The next night he calls with a sleigh and two horses, and his arms are filled with toys. They start out to deliver them. In a slum bed-room two little children are bemoaning the fact that they do not think Santa Claus will call on them this year. Just then they hear the tinkle of Belden's sleigh-bells outside and dive into bed, thinking it is Santa Claus. Belden and Violet deliver all their presents and drive home.

The years pass. Belden goes to the doll shop and buys a large doll for his daughter's birthday. Upon arriving home he places the doll in the arms of his sleeping daughter. Later Belden notices the attention his wife receives from a young physician and resents it. Matters finally culminate when his wife comes home late one night in the doctor's car, after having sat up with a little sick child in the slums. Belden misconstrues the situation and orders her to go back to her lover. Violet takes her child and passes from his life.

As time passes Belden is haunted by visions of his wife and daughter in want. He is unable to eat, as he thinks of this and at last in desperation he wanders out. He walks along with no idea as to where he is going, and when he looks up, he finds himself in front of the old doll doctor's shop. With nothing else to do, he goes in and is welcomed by the old man. Then he wanders aimlessly around, looking at the different toys. Presently his attention is centered on a doll with its head off. The old doll doctor remembers his work and takes up the doll to fix it.

Belden asks him who the doll belongs to. The doll doctor reveals the name of the owners, and says that he expects them to call for it in a few moments. Belden hides behind some toys and watches his wife and daughter when they come in. The daughter is given her doll and wanders over to where Belden is hidden. When Violet looks around for her child, she finds her in the arms of her husband. She reaches out to take the child away from him, but the child's arms only cling tighter to her father. Belden asks Violet to forgive him. Right or wrong, he wants her back. He stretches out his arms and encompasses his wife, the child and the doll.

The next day he visits Delilah and requests her for a keepsake. The malicious sorceress presents him with a ring that renders him invisible without his knowing it. Strange things come to pass. People walk all over him, mistaking him for air. They step on his corns and sit down on him, considering chairs he occupies as vacant.

His supposed absence alarms his wife. She telephones to police headquarters and is promptly informed that a suicide tallying with her husband's description is in the morgue. Soon Harry has the pleasure of witnessing his own funeral from a window of his own home. He beholds his wife mourn for him, then forget him and then fall in love with somebody else. Things reach a crisis when he witnesses the wedding ceremony and sees the couple retire behind locked doors.

It is high time for him to find out if he isn't really a ghost. He decides to shoot himself. If he is really dead a bullet more or less couldn't hurt. The crash awakens him. PATTERSON OF THE NEWS (Two Parts—March 17).—The cast: Jack Patterson (King Baggot); Daniel Brennon (Howard Crampton); Phyllis Brennon (Edna Hunter); Bertie Ralston (Joe Daly); City Editor (Bert Busby). Written by Harry Dittmar. Produced by Harry McRae Webster.

At the Tenderloin station a platoon of police is told off and they pile into the patrol wagon. Jack Patterson, a reporter accompanies them. The wagon stops in front of Stanfield's. The slumming party is panic-stricken.

Jack leads a squad of men into the luxuriously furnished rooms. As the policemen rush by him with drawn nightsticks he encounters Phyllis. His knowledge of the world tells him that she is no ordinary habitue of the Tenderloin. She thinks he is a detective. He shows her his badge and assists her to escape. Phyllis thanks him and he hands her his card. She tells him that she must be nameless for the sake of her family, and they make an appointment to meet later.

Phyllis keeps this appointment and others. Jack asks for her hand in marriage. The proposal of marriage upsets her. She is the daughter of a wealthy family, and to please her father she has allowed him to pledge her to another. She tells Jack that they cannot meet again. That night in the editorial rooms the editor and reporters are stirred by the news that Daniel Brennon, the head of the Union National Bank, has lost a million in the wheat pit. The scene shifts to the office of Brennon at the bank. Brennon goes to the vaults, removes some securities, places them in a valise and makes ready to go.

Jack starts to go home from the editorial room. He passes the Union National Bank building, sees a light burning in the offices and his suspicions are aroused when he sees President Brennon come out with a valise and walk away. Jack tells the city editor of his discovery and the latter authorizes him to go ahead. "If Brennon is really crooked it will be the biggest story of the year," he says. That night Jack is admitted to Brennon's mansion. Brennon is apparently ready for a journey. There are valises in the hallway. "I am a federal bank examiner," Jack says. "I have not yet made my report. Perhaps you can make some explanation before I do."

Jack intimates that he can be squared for a "consideration" and says: "You know, Mr. Brennon, what we found." Brennon collapses, then he draws out his wallet. Jack throws his card on the table. Brennon recognizes the name of the shrewd reporter. Jack demands the contents of the valise Brennon carried away from the bank. Brennon shows fight. Jack draws his pistol and Brennon takes out the contents of his wallet. They are the securities of an estate of which the bank is a trustee. Jack declares that it is his duty to remove from society a man who endangers the funds of small depositors. Brennon pleads, but Jack is firm. Suddenly his eyes are fixed on a photograph of Phyllis on Brennon's desk.

A curtain is drawn aside and on the threshold stands Phyllis dressed for a journey. She has overheard part of the conversation. She demands an explanation. Jack hands Brennon back the securities and Brennon abjectly seizes them. Then Jack bids him promise to make good before exposure comes. "If not for your own sake," he adds, "then for her." Phyllis understands. To her questioning look her father bows his head in shame. She recognizes the worth of the man with whom she has played. Jack waves aside her protestations. "It's all in my line of work," he says. The father leaves for the bank after thanking Patterson. Phyllis bids Jack good night. "I trust," she says," that I will have the pleasure of seeing you again, Mr. Patterson—seeing you—often."

Gertie was foolish enough to show it to Mr. Chilfoot, who was admiring it around Gertie's neck when Mrs. Chilfoot happened along.

The situation was a peculiar one for a good married man to be in and in trying to hide the necklace from Mrs. Chilfoot's gaze he did the wrong thing, for she knew something was up and like all women she wanted to see. Mr. Chilfoot reluctantly showed the beautiful necklace and Mrs. Chilfoot, thinking it belonged to him, appropriated it herself. This left Gertie in a peculiar position. Determined to get it back, in the dead of night she entered the Chilfoot apartments. Mrs. Chilfoot awakened at a very inopportune moment and upset all the plans. Police were summoned and a general fight and chase ensued. Gertie was only relieved from her terrible nightmare by having dear hubby tap her gently on the shoulder and take her in his strong manly arms to reassure her that it was all a terrible dream.

RED FEATHER.

THE TARGET (Five Parts—March 6).—The cast: Big Bill Brent (Hobart Bosworth); Mrs. Brent, His Mother (Anna Lehr); Marian Moore (Maud George); Walter Peyton (A. Kanmeyer); Jack Taylor (Ronald Bradbury); George Harris (Dick Le Reno); Nita (Jane Novak); James Fowler (Albert MacQuarrie). Scenario by Ronald Bradbury. Produced by Norval MacGregor.

Bill Brent has a theory that "A friend's a friend for all that," by which he means that a service rendered to a fellow-being will be requieted in kind; but his law partner tells him that there is no real friendship in this world which will stand life's test except the affection of a mother, and this is the keynote of the story of Brent's life.

Even the service which he rendered to the sheriff of the county, a service which the sheriff acknowledged by the gift of a beautiful revolver, at the very end is used as a weapon against him. In the first place, it is the instrument in the hands of his partner which sends Bill to jail, from which he escapes with an entirely different outlook upon life, which may be summed up in the saying that the world owes him a living, and until the world pays up he may levy toll upon it to the extent of his necessity.

This theory forces him to escape into Canada with a fellow convict, in whom he flatters himself he has found a true friend, but a woman comes between them, and he wanders back to the States again with a growing conviction that his old mother is the only real friend he has. Upon reaching town he is recognized by the sheriff for whom years before he had done a service. But this service does not prevent the sheriff from fulfilling his duty, and attempting to arrest him, with the result that he mortally wounds him with the same revolver which had evidenced his gratitude. Brent's final request to see his mother, who is very low, before he dies, is granted, and as her head droops on his shoulders he murmurs, "Mother, I am coming with you to dream in the shadow."

THE POOL OF FLAME (5 Parts—March 13).—The cast: O'Rourke (J. Warren Kerrigan); Beatrix (Lois Wilson); Karen (Maud George); Duke Victor (Harry Carter); Chambret (Bertram Grassby); Danny (Mr. Holland); Des Tribes (Frank MacQuarrie); Capt. Fritz Moelke (Earl Rogers).

"The Pool of Flame" brings the adventure of the romantically inclined Terence O'Rourke to a happy ending, which millions of his followers have ardently wished for him, for he finds his real life work in the pleasant occupation of defending through matrimony the Princess Beatrix, for whose hand he has endured so many exciting encounters. Terence and the Princess have been in love all along, but like a true Irishman, Terence had no visible means of support except his sword, and until he obtained the reward for finally restoring the pool of flame, a famous Indian jewel, to its original owners, the afore-mentioned sword had not provided him with sufficient wherewithal to support a bride, to say nothing of a princess. In "The Pool of Flame" adventure he is still opposed by Princess Karen, a beautiful Indian woman, and Duke Victor, the persistent suitor for the hand of the princess, and all of the well-known characters including Count Chambret, are concerned in this final episode of the adventurous career of Col. Terence O'Rourke, which takes in from Montebar, the capital of the principality of Grandlieu, over which the Princess Beatrix exercises domination to faraway India, where the jewel is finally recovered by O'Rourke, and restored to the desecrated temple. The final chapter closes with the announcement of the coming marriage of Beatrix and O'Rourke.

Dan Halliday and his brother, Jack, return home after an absence of two years. Their mother dies, and Jack becomes a doctor, while Dan gets an appointment on the police force in New York. Dan sees a woman committing a bribery. The woman turns out to be "Slick Kitty," a noted crook, and Dan is promoted for his capture to a police lieutenancy.

About this time Jack comes to New York and hangs out his shingle as a doctor, obtaining many patients through Dan's influence. He falls in love with Edna Madison, a charming young girl, whose mother has obtained a foothold in society. One day Dan happens to see his brother, Jack, leaving Edna and her mother, and learns of Jack's love for Edna. The mother's face looks strangely familiar to him and on close inspection he recognizes Mrs. Madison as "Slick Kitty."

Shortly afterward Mrs. Madison gives a reception. Jim Henderson, a member of the light-fingered fraternity, is courting Edna, posing as a man-about-town. He 'phones Mrs. Madison that he intends to attend the reception. Mrs. Madison tries to dissuade him, but he persists, and, in order not to have him expose her criminal record, she is compelled to yield to his wishes.

Dan, meanwhile, has become a headquarters man. He attends the reception with the idea of saving Jack from an unfortunate alliance by exposing Mrs. Madison as "Slick Kitty." He recognizes Henderson and keeps his eye on him. Presently one of the guests misses a necklace. Henderson has stolen it and, unknown to Edna, he drops it in her vanity bag. Then he goes into the library to avoid trouble.

Mrs. Madison sees what has happened and immediately changes her vanity bag for that of her daughter. Dan, seeing this exchange, accuses Mrs. Madison and locks her and Edna in the library. Jack is stationed at the window outside the library. When Dan addresses Mrs. Madison as "Slick Kitty," Henderson pulls out a pistol to shoot him. Jack jumps through the window and seizes Henderson before he has time to pull the trigger. The pistol goes off in the ensuing struggle and Henderson is killed.

When Dan learns that Jack intends to marry Edna, he slips the necklace in the pocket of the dead crook. The necklace is subsequently restored to its owner and, for the sake of Jack and Edna, Dan doesn't betray the fact that Mrs. Madison has ever been known in criminal circles as "Slick Kitty."

Every member of the Brown household, including Officer 711, who is calling on Jane in the kitchen, contributes some change to Early's bank. In the morning Brown discovers he has no carfare and, fearing to ask Mrs. Brown for it, borrows from Early's bank and substitutes poker chips for the coins he takes out.

Frank Brown needs money to purchase a kite and soon there is a run on the bank by the members of the Brown family. After Early has been put to bed and her elders are playing dominoes, Second-Story Steve enters through the window of Early's room and shakes her bank. Baby wakes and screams. Her cries are heard. Constable 711 captures Steve and expresses his opinion that the meanest man in creation is one who would rob a child's bank. Steve is allowed to go as he was caught before he could open the bank.

That night auntie, conscience stricken, enters Early's room to replace the coins she had abstracted. She disturbs the child and hastily leaves the room. Early awakes to find the bank open and instead of money she finds poker chips, washers, safety pins, buttons and peppermints. She is convinced that there has been another robbery and yells "Burglars." Brown enters her room and sees the poker chips. Knowing Mrs. Brown is following, he tries to get them from her before his wife comes in, but too late. Mrs. Brown and auntie run in and the three grown-ups look guiltily at each other. Early's screams have been heard by Constable 711, who, signaling for assistance, hastens to the Brown residence, only to learn the child has just had a bad dream.

THE CRY OF ERIN (March 17).—The cast: Shemus (Francis Ford); His Father ("Daddy" Manley); His Mother (Mrs. Manley); Biddy (Adoni Fovieri); Father Malone (Orin Jackson); The Squire (Robert Murdock); His Son (Jack Holt). Subtitles and production from an old ballad by R. P. S. Lefann. Scenario by Francis Ford.

Whenever a peasant was found he was hauled up for trial, and there were many who were killed "accidentally" while being captured. Among the bravest and best of the boys in the coming generation was Shemus O'Brien. He had been chased repeatedly by the soldiers, but his daring and quick wit had saved him from capture.

Next to his God, Shemus adored his old father and mother. Biddy, a girl of the neighborhood, was his sweetheart. Father Malone thought much of the boy and frequently assisted him with his good counsel. After hiding out for some time Shemus pays a visit to his parents, and Biddy, learning of his arrival, hurries to bid him welcome. The soldiers learn of his arrival and hasten to try and capture him. Shemus is warned in time and makes a thrilling escape. The squire and son are on the road and Shemus, borrowing the brilliant coat of the son, leads his pursuers astray.

Some time later, thinking all is safe, he returns home. The soldiers, however, had anticipated this and, creeping up to the house, capture the wily lad. He is sentenced to hang and preparations are made for the execution. His old parents are frantic and it takes all the persuasive powers of Father Malone to hold his people down and keep them from making a disturbance which would result in the death of a number of them.

The day of the execution arrives. Biddy and Father Malone are the only ones allowed to see the prisoner. Biddy exchanges clothes with the priest and succeeds in releasing Shemus' hands. When he is brought out he makes his escape, the soldiers being hindered in their pursuit by the peasants. In the scuffle Father Malone loses his top hat, of which he is justly proud, and the air is filled with his lamentations. Biddy denounces the soldiers and tells them that if they expect to have a hanging they will have to utilize one of their own members.

Some time later, when the affair has quieted down, Shemus, his parents and Biddy take passage at Cork for the wonderful land of America, where they live to enjoy peace and happiness.

THE FATAL INTRODUCTION (Three Parts—March 16).—The cast: Jim Claverling (Murdock MacQuarrie); Marie Richards (Edna Payne); Her Father (Arthur Moore); Frank Standing (M. K. Wilson). Written by Ben Cohen. Produced by Murdock MacQuarrie.

Jim Claverling, a young prospector, tires of his enforced idleness in the East and decides to go West to make his fortune. On the way to catch the train he stops for lunch. Frank Standing, a former miner and prospector, who is "down and out," goes into the same restaurant, determined to get a meal by fair means or foul. Upon finishing his meal Frank tries to make his escape, but is caught and threatened with arrest. Jim comes to Frank's assistance and pays the delinquent's bill. When Frank learns that Jim is setting out for the West, he tells of his knowledge of mining and Jim offers to take him along as his partner.

Back in the western town lives Marie, Jim's sweetheart. Frank is introduced to the girl and immediately becomes infatuated with her. The partners strike it rich and are offered a proposition by a mining concern. Frank persuades Jim to allow him to attend to the negotiations. Jim agrees and gives his partner power of attorney to sell the mine provided the terms are fair.

Standing arrives in the city and closes the deal. With the idea of stealing Marie from his partner, Frank sends Jim a telegram stating that the papers are being held up temporarily, but he thinks they will get their price. He has the check for the mine made out in his name and hurries to the town where Marie lives. He tells her that Jim was killed at the mine and after several days of persuasion wins her consent to marry him and accompany him to the East. Jim, meanwhile, determines to seek out Marie and tell her of their fortune. He sends his partner a message telling him that they will meet in the town where Marie lives and make a final settlement of the mine.

Frank has made all arrangements to leave on the 7.45 train and after packing all his possessions finds that he has left out a bottle of "knock out" drops. He puts the bottle in his pocket. Just as he starts out the door he meets Jim coming in and he pretends to Jim that he has received his letter and had accordingly hurried to the town to wait for him. Jim insists upon his partner celebrating the occasion and the two are in a saloon drinking to their good luck. Frank manages to put a few drops of the dope in Jim's glass. He is soon in a stupor, and Frank hurries to where Marie lives and escapes with her. When Jim comes to he is told how his partner has double-crossed him and with vengeance in his heart he determines to wreak his revenge upon him.

A year passes and Jim is still unable to locate Frank. Frank, with his ill-gotten gains, has risen to be quite a power in the mining world. One day Jim hears two miners mention Frank's name and from them secures his address. Jim returns to the mining country and again strikes it rich. By chance a large mining syndicate nearby hears of the strike and determine to "fleece" him out of the claim. Jim refuses to sell at their figure and determines to fight them to the end. By a strange coincidence Frank is at the head of the syndicate and when notified of the unsuccessful efforts to obtain the claim tells them that he will personally come to see about it. As Jim is going under an assumed name, he does not know that his former partner is the one he is fighting. When Jim learns Standing's identity his old desire for revenge returns and he determines to kill him.

Marie, yearning for the western life, persuades her husband to take her and their child with him. Standing and his wife arrive and while Marie starts out to look for a place to stop he wanders about waiting for the owner. Jim comes upon Frank unknown to him and is on the point of killing him. His better nature asserts itself, however, and he determines to give him a chance for his life. He accordingly writes a note telling him that he will kill him on sight. Shortly afterwards the two men come face to face and begin shooting. Standing recognizes his old partner, and, unable to face him, takes flight. He is wounded in the arm and drops his gun. While Jim pursues him, determined to overtake him, Frank runs home and throws himself on the couch. Jim comes in and confronts him. Standing pleads for his life and makes a confession of all his wrongdoing, promising Jim that if he will spare his life he will make him his partner. While they are talking Marie and their child come into the room and Jim, not wishing Marie to know the kind of a man her husband is, does not want Frank to continue, but she has already heard the most of Frank's confession and tells him that she is through with him for all time.

Frank commits suicide in his shame and Marie and Jim are reunited at last.

LOVE SPASMS (March 12).—The cast: Hotspur (Harry C. Myers); Beth, his wife (Rosemary Theby). Written by Samuel Greiner. Produced by Harry C. Myers.

Hotspur is so violently smitten with Beth, that he talks naught but Beth, wearies his clubmates with Beth, and neglects his job over Beth. He thinks the universe in love with her and plotting to abduct her. His boss advises him to get married, and cool down for business or look for another job. He takes the hint and gets married.

He can't tear himself away from her side; every minute spent in the office is as a century to him. After office hours he makes a bee-line for wifey, mindless of traffic and the tooting of chauffeurs. Unfortunately conflagrations don't last long. He gets so used to her beauty that he sees it no more. He develops an eye for defects, and when he finds none, he invents them.

Now it's a hair on her chin, now the bone in her elbow. She is a bundle of flaws. Everybody's wife is prettier than Beth. Soon he discovers another paragon of perfection in the form of a ballet dancer and promptly falls in love with her. One day a note informs him that Beth has gone back to mother's and that she is going to divorce him. Three cheers for liberty. To work off his joy, he turkey-trots about the room. He is the happiest of men.

A fortnight later he feels rather lonesome. It's annoying to hug pillows when you mean to hug wifey. Occasionally he catches himself sneaking about her mother's home. He isn't half as happy as he thinks he is. He forgets the hair on her chin, the bone in her elbow and the ballet dancer. He finds himself kissing her comb and brush and making love to a kimono of hers.

In the end he gets desperate. He goes to his mother-in-law and asks for Beth. She informs him that she has gone to Europe to recuperate from hubby's fault-finding. He threatens to commit suicide and rushes home. Beth also rushes home and gets there before him. He delays shooting himself until he has kissed her kimono once more. As he enters her boudoir, he finds her sitting at the window, sewing away on infant's clothes. A love spasm follows the reconciliation.

ORDERS IS ORDERS (Two Parts—March 15).—The cast: Grace (Mina Cunard); Joe (Ernie Shields); quarterback (Vic. Goss); police captain (Edw. Clark); the mayor (Marc Fenton). Written and produced by Francis Ford.

It is the day before the big football game and the air is charged with tenseness. The boys, overflowing with enthusiasm, parade up and down the streets singing and shouting in their exuberance. Joe is captain of the Yale team and he and Mina, the mayor's daughter, are very fond of each other. During the celebration the quarterback begins to get too noisy and is accordingly taken to jail. The captain, as a deterrent to other offenders, gives him thirty days in jail.

Of course when the news gets out there is a mighty uproar in college, for with the quarterback missing, they will have small chance to win the game the next day. The wisest heads on the ground get together planning the release of their quarterback, but all in vain, and it remains for the wise captain, Joe, to get a way out of their difficulties. Spurred on by Grace, he works out a little scheme and it proves successful. He buys a barber pole and goes down the street very conspicuously.

But he had received a receipt for the pole and while he is arrested many times, the receipt always results in his release. Finally the police captain gets tired of seeing Joe continually brought in and issues a general order to all patrolmen that they must not arrest a student carrying barber poles under penalty of losing their jobs. They learn this at the college and the boys go wild. Scattering over town, they proceed to gather in the barber poles and the result of their haul looks like a wood pile. Of course, the cops see them carrying off the poles, but are in fear of the order, so allow them to escape.

Next morning things begin to hum. The police captain's office overflows with barbers, and each one is filled with rage. The authorities are impotent, however, and the mayor informs the captain that unless the poles are restored by noon there will be a new face in his office. The college boys now come forward with their proposition. If the quarterback is liberated they agree to return all the poles in good shape, and the police are forced to agree to this.

So the game is saved and while Joe and Grace watch the game with interest, her father decides he is missing a good game and joins them. Grace is so glad to see him that she kisses him and as he turns away she offers her lips to Joe, telling him that he is next.

male, and when that was reached Kitty was quick to tell them they were on the wrong track. Jerry, the house detective, and Kitty were great friends, and Jerry kept a protective eye on the girl.

John Wells and his wife had got to the point where they got on each other's nerves and had frequent disagreements. The state of affairs reached a climax when John started to punish their child and the wife interfered. In a moment of rage he left the house and took up quarters in the same hotel as that in which Kitty worked. He became acquainted with Kitty and was a frequent visitor to her stand.

Kitty, with her wide acquaintance, had no one whom she could really call a friend and as a consequence suffered from lonesomeness. Wells, too, missed the home life and became a restless wanderer. It was not strange that the two should meet occasionally and drift together. Kitty finally permitted John to take her out for dinner, but always to a moderately priced place. Their friendship grows fast.

Well's wife, and child meanwhile miss him and wait in vain for his return. The wife has no way of locating him and finally, in a moment of pique, tries for a divorce. The news gets into the papers.

Wells finally gets to the point of asking Kitty to marry him. She is reluctant and tells him she thinks he is like the rest who make love without a thought of marriage. The thrust goes home and Wells says no more. The next morning Kitty reads the news of the impending divorce. She calls Jerry to her assistance and when Wells comes to her stand and tells her that his offer of marriage still holds good after he gets a divorce. Jerry comes up and announces that the girl is his fiancee.

Wells leaves discouraged, and Jerry laughingly tells the girl that his (Jerry's) wife and children would raise cain should they know he was claiming another sweetheart. Later Wells writes Kitty begging her to meet him that night. She in turn sends a note to the wife telling of the meeting place and advising her to go there. Wells goes to the appointed place, where instead of finding the girl he is given a note telling him she will not meet him. As he turns away his little child runs forward. Wells realizes the bonds that bind him to the wife and reconciliation takes place. When Wells bids Kitty good-bye, no one sees the tears she brushes aside while ostensibly powdering her face.

JERRY'S BIG GAME (March 10).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); Tony (George George); Prince (Jefferson Osborne); Rajah (Louis FitzRoy); Rose (Bessie Clark); maid, Katie (Louise Horner); Mrs. Rich (Janet Sully). Directed by Milton Fahrney.

Jerry again gets in trouble with the police and gives them a merry chase. For safety he darts into a building and then into one of the apartments—the musty home of an organ grinder and a monkey. The organ grinder attempts to put him out but Jerry gets his sympathy by explaining his plight. As the police arrive a happy idea strikes the organ grinder. He will masquerade Jerry as a monkey, to take the place of his sick monk, and not only escape the law but have a means of making some money by the transformation. Jerry assents and the police are fooled by the change. After the departure of the officers the organ grinder and Jerry, as his monk, start out to earn some of the wherewithal.

Money is flowing steadily in the tin cup until Jerry's weakness crops out. In the window of the fourth story of a building he spies the pretty face of a girl and loses no time in climbing up the side of the building and into the room. The girl is maid to a wealthy woman and Jerry is about to embrace her when the mistress enters. The organ grinder tugs at the rope to which Jerry is tied at the other end, causing Jerry to embrace the mistress. Her husband enters and uses a gun with painful effect. Without hesitation Jerry jumps from the window and does a ziz-zag from window to window all the way from the fourth floor to the street.

Jerry and the grinder hurry to another section of the city and arrive just in time to see the Rajah and the Prince abducting a girl. The two grab hold of the back of the automobile in which the kidnappers and their victim are speeding away and are taken within the gates of the palace.

Jerry gets into the Rajah's harem and is having the time of his life when the police, who have traced him and his partner, arrive. They are about to arrest Jerry when he tells them of the kidnapping of the girl by the Rajah and the Prince. The girl is produced and released, the two kidnappers arrested and Jerry complimented for his work. The police leave with the kidnappers and the victim while Jerry and the organ grinder, now perfectly safe, remain in the harem, the grinder playing music while Jerry dances for the fair inmates.

THE SUPPRESSED ORDER (Three Parts—March 14).—The cast: Jasimine (Winnifred Greenwood); Hugh Bradford (Edward Coxen); Jesse Semple (George Field) Allan Phillips, Jasimine's Brother (George Webb); Tobias, Keeper of the tavern (Charles Newton); Mammy June (Sylvia Ashton). Directed by Thomas Ricketts.

Tobias Phillips, proprietor of the village tavern, is a greedy, loose-principled man, who resorts to any means that will result in profit. He exploits the charm of his daughter, Jasimine, to make welcome the young men of the town as guests. Hugh Bradford, one of the guests, and Jasimine fall in love, but Bradford, Sr., objects to his son's attentions to the tavern keeper's daughter. Jasimine is devoted to her brother, Allan, a studious fellow, and Mammy June, lovingly domineers over both of them.

Jesse Semple seeks favor from Jasimine's hands by irregular paths. Jesse's advances meet the proper rebuff, and his actions remain unsuspected, partly through his wary methods and partly through Jasimine's pride in hiding any such attitude toward her. The forthcoming Civil War is naturally the subject of conversation. At the outbreak, all of them enlist with the exception of Allan, and into a troop under the command of Bradford, Sr., known as Bradford's Raiders they gather and engage in surprise expeditions to harass the enemy's lines.

Allan is persuaded to the cause of the North and goes to the Union army where because of his knowledge of the Southern territory he is engaged in special secret service work. His earnest appeal gains the reluctant consent of Jasimine to aid him in his work. Jasimine lends her support until a realization of her love for Hugh also commands a loyalty to his cause. In the end, Allan is committed to a plan of allowing false papers, which he carries to be captured by the Confederates, leading them into a trap for the specific purpose of crushing Bradford's troops of raiders. Allan proceeds against his will. He discloses the plan to Jasimine at the tavern during a secret night visit.

Hugh has appointed the tavern as a meeting place with Jesse that same night. Jesse arrives a little before the appointed hour and discovers Allan's presence. He enters and bargains with Jasimine for her favor as the price of his silence and the release of Allan. Allan overhears and a fight ensues in which Jesse is killed and Allan mortally wounded.

Jasimine pleads her willingness to make her sacrifice in an effort to induce Allan to destroy the false papers and save Hugh's troop. Allan tears up the papers. Hugh enters and discovers Jesse's death. Just as Jasimine is explaining to Hugh that Allan has spoiled the trap laid against him and pleads for Allan's release and freedom, Allan expires from his wound. The story concludes with the close of the war and portrays Jasimine and Hugh leaving the church after their marriage and starting out to face the reconstruction period.

THE QUAGMIRE (Three parts—March 10).—The cast: Ralph Darcy (Thomas Chatterton); Bess Hall (Anna Little); Jack Tice (Jack Richardson); Tom Hall (Perry Banks). Directed by Tom Chatterton.

Ralph Darcy, a young man of wealth, is in love with Tom Hall,'s daughter Bess, who is at school in a distant city. He is about to propose to her when he learns that he has contracted tuberculosis and must live in the open for a year, but he cannot bring himself to tell Bess. She, in the meantime, is preparing for her graduation and writes her father, who is foreman of Mammoth Mines, to be present when she graduates. Jack Tice controls the gambling in the rough mine and cattle town of Mammoth. He sees Bess' picture and falls in love with her.

Hall, going to town to get the payroll money, is grazed by a bullet fired in cowboy fun. Whiskey is given to revive him which awakes a long suppressed desire for drink. This leads into gambling and by the time he is ready to return to the mines, he has lost the payroll money. Tice, pretending to be Hall's good friend, does not permit him to gamble or drink in his place, but so arranges that Hall does so at some other place and pockets half of the money Hall loses. Then, to further his ends, he loans Hall the money that belongs to the mining company's payroll. Pretending he has sold his gambling hall, he and Hall go to see Bess graduate.

Ralph receives word that the trust company has failed and his fortune swept away. He then writes to Bess, telling her all, and asking that she wait a year for him. Hall, however, apprehends the letter and Bess, not hearing from Ralph, believes he has forgotten her and finally consents to marry Tice.

After the marriage she discovers her husband's perfidy. She leaves him after getting word from Ralph that he is on his way to claim her. Fleeing, she knows not whither, Bess becomes caught in quicksand and Ralph, now a cowboy, hearing her cries, finds her and rescues her from certain death. In the meantime, Tice has been severely thrashed by Bess' father. Cowboys destroy the source of his ill-made profits, and in his endeavor to escape, Tice is killed. Bess and Ralph are now free to complete their romance.

CURLEW CORLISS (Three Parts—March 17).—The cast: Curlew Corliss (Art Acord); Tina (Nita Davis); Frank Evans (John Gough); Mrs. Gregory (Dixie Stratton); John Sanderson (Lawrence Peyton); Bill (Pete Morrison); Mrs. White (Molly Shafer); Joe (Joe Massey). Directed by William Betram.

Curlew Corliss, one of the happy family of cowboys at Bar Ranch, falls in love with Tina, a school teacher, who comes to teach in that district. Curlew doesn't find the courage to propose, but he bought a ranch preliminary to getting "hitched."

About this time a not-too-scrupulous individual drifted into town calling himself Frank Evans, whom Curlew discovers with Tina and is introduced to as an old friend of hers. Curlew has a terrible struggle trying to get the proposing point and finally decides to ask her or "bust in his boots," but just as he is warmed up to the occasion, the boys come along and break in with an impromptu serenade. Curlew sees a necklace advertised in a catalogue for $2.98 and thinks this would help his cause with the teacher, so he sends for one.

Evans plays on hard luck and it occurs to him that there are other ways of getting money. Curlew waits anxiously for the stage on the day the necklace should arrive, but the stage is held up and the mail sack stolen. Curlew is one of the searching party for the robber, and finds the paper addressed to him in which the necklace had been wrapped and the black mask which the robber had thrown away. Tina sees the mask sticking out of Curlew's pocket and remembers Tina hearing one of the boys kidding him about marrying her and that Curlew answered, if he could only get hold of some money. Her suspicions are aroused. When Curlew calls, determined to ask her, necklace or no necklace, he is told that she has left with Evans. So Curlew is left alone with his disappointment. In the course of time, a widow Mrs. Gregory, comes to Tower and starts a home restaurant, which is well patronized by the boys. Sanderson, a rancher, falls for the widow. Curlew lives alone on his place, but comes in to town and takes a flier at the new restaurant and soon he and Sanderson are the widow's star eaters.

Before the opening of school again, Tina returns, with Evans, and when Curlew angrily encounters Evans in the restaurant, the widow introduces him as her son. Sanderson doesn't like the idea of the widow's having a son and leaves, but Curlew, lonely and needing someone to take care of his home, begins to propose to her. She stops him, telling him that she is too old for him and wants someone like Sanderson who can take care of her in luxury. Curlew

PLOTTERS AND PAPERS (March 17).—The cast: Johnny (John Sheehan); Madam "Z" (Carol Halloway); Sofia (Mary Talbot); Slick Connors (Rea Berger); Detective (Dick Rosson). Directed by Archer MacMackin.

Johnny, a newspaper reporter, fails to get an interview with Madam "Z," the deciding witness in a murder trial. The Editor is just handing it to him when Steve, the star reporter, comes rushing in and informs the bunch that Madam "Z" has been kidnapped. The City Editor assigns Johnny to find Madam and get her testimony.

The Dastardly Dozen, a band of anarchists, try Sofia Barislov for a breach of authority and find her guilty. She is sentenced to spend forty days and forty nights in a dungeon subsisting on bread and water. But Sofia has a lover among that Dozen and he goes out to get her some dessert to go with her repasts.

Sofia's lover is a terrible looking individual and so when Johnny spots him he surmises that he is either an anarchist or a plotter, and follows him to the dungeon. He finds Sofia incarcerated and imagines her to be the mysterious Madam "Z." Johnny shows Sofia his reporter's badge and she takes him for a policeman and screams. The gang makes him a prisoner and Johnny is sentenced to be tortured to death. He is bound to the torture cylinder, studded with spikes which slowly revolves toward the corner of the room. They start the block and leave him to his doom.

Johnny is almost in the midst of his last living turn on the torture block when a secret panel opens and out steps one of the supposed plotters. He stops the cylinder and releases Johnny, removes his moustache and reveals himself as a secret service agent, then bids Johnny escape through a secret pasage.

The passage leads to a basement under a house where Johnny discovers Slick Connors, a politician, with Madam "Z" in his power, telling her that he will keep her prisoner until after the trial. He sees Connors bind her, throw her to the floor and leave. Then Johnny discovers a knothole in the floor—the key to the mystery! He pokes the thing through and whispers into the ear of the captive and Madam "Z" gives him the testimony through the knothole.

But when it comes to signing the document, they were stumped. Suddenly Johnny gets a bright idea and writes at the bottom of the document "signed by the skin of my teeth," pokes a pencil through the hole into the teeth of the woman and holds the paper while she signs her name in this manner. As Johnny comes from under the house, he runs into Connors. A scuffle follows, Johnny trips Connors, notifies the police and makes a flying run to the office. The papers come out with an EXTRA lauding the deeds of Johnny "the star reporter," and he becomes the lion of the hour."

TIPS (March 19).—The cast: Prof. Doolittle (Orral Humphrey); Mrs. Floursack, his landlady (Lucille Ward). Directed by Phil Walsh.

Professor Doolittle completes his treatise on "The Origin of Tattooing," and sends it off to the publishers in a dray. His somewhat absentminded devotions to Mrs. Floursack are interrupted by the arrival of a letter advising that he has been left a legacy of $100, and requesting him to go to the city to claim it. He delights his lady-love by announcing that they will be married as soon as he gets the money.

In the city, he runs up against the "tipping system." He looks like easy money, and is worked to the limit, down the line of porters, bus drivers, bellhops, chambermaids, etc. He finally reaches the lawyer only to find that he is not the right Doolittle, and the money has been paid to another man.

He returns to his waiting bride-to-be, broken in spirit and in purse, and is being consoled by her, when a telegram arrives telling him that his book has been accepted and the publishers are sending a large check in advance. In lieu of change, he gives the messenger, the only one who really deserved a tip, his watch and is folded in Mrs. Floursack's generous embrace.

LOVE, MUSIC AND CANNONBALLS (March 9.)—The cast: The Wanderer (Rube Miller); The Innkeeper (Arthur Tavares); His Ally in Crime (Alice Neice); A pretty senorita (Madge Kirby). Directed by Rube Miller.

Rube, a wanderer, crosses the Rio Grande by wading, and gets into Mexico. He is halted by a border guard, whom he passes by a changing hands of gold, which procures for him a sash and a headgear of the realm. Proceeding into the interior, he comes upon an inn where he discovers a pretty senorita being persecuted by a big Mexican. He saves the girl and thereby wins her love. In a card game, Rube discovers the duplicity of the innkeeper and his accomplice, winning their combined fortunes.

The innkeeper sends his servants to kidnap Rube, and the latter is tied to a fence, from which he is released by the senorita. She is captured and tied to a tree, from which she is released by Rube who captures a cannon, and drives their oppressors from the scene. Later Rube shoots a flagstaff from the camera straight through the inkeeper's middle, and he sings his swan-song to his love to the sweet accompaniment of his guitar; while Rube and the senorita make off to enjoy their own love-making.

MORE TRUTH THAN POETRY (March 12).—The cast: Studio Manager (Jack Gains); Leading Woman (Priscilla Dean); Leading Man (Patty McQuire); Villain (Russ Powell); Director (Jack Dillon); Scenario Editor (Robt. A. Dillon). Directed by Jack Dillon.

It is a rainy morning, and only a few of the motion picture actors arrive at the Vogue studio. Water falls in torrents on the stage, and the drenched actors file into the studio grounds. The leading woman, the leading man and the camera man are late.

The manager calls up the leading woman on the phone, and she refuses to go to the studio unless they send a car for her. Out into the streets filled with water goes the auto. She is called for and delivered to the studio, but refuses to leave the car unless she is provided with an umbrella. The property room and dressing rooms are turned upside down to find an umbrella but none is forthcoming. Finally, the resourceful property man plays "Sir Walter Raleigh" and lays his overcoat down for the leading woman to alight on from the auto.

Now that the company is assembled, the director arranges the set and starts the action. A dramatic scene is taken when the leading man saves the leading woman from the clutches of the villain—the starving chee-ild is fed, and when the director asks the footage of the scene, he learns that the cameraman forgot to put any film into the camera. The ill-fated director was revived when he learned that the sun was coming out.

THE GIRL AND THE GAME (Chapter Eleven—"The Salting of the Superstition Mine"—Two Parts—March 6).—In a fit of anger over his failure to secure a right of way through Las Vegas, Seagrue seeks revenge, and Spike is the victim. He is turned over to the sheriff who identifies Spike as the escaped convict for whose return a reward of $500 is offered. Spike is led off to jail. Helen resents Seagrue's meanness in turning Spike over to the sheriff, and grills him vehemently until Seagrue tells Helen that Spike was implicated in the murder of her father.

Seagrue discovers that the rich ore vein of the Superstition mine punches out. He calls his henchmen to his aid and they decide to "salt" the mine and then offer it to Rhinelander at a fabulous price, giving as the reason for sale, Seagrue's inability to operate the mine successfully without the railroad cut-off line on which he has failed.

Rich ore is rolled in among the rocks, and a blast arranged, while Rhinelander is sent for. Upon Rhinelander's arrival, with a mining expert subsidized by Seagrue to give a good report, the party descends to the working level, and Rhinelander finds valuable ore in some quantity. He agrees to purchase the mine from Seagrue for $110,000, paying $25,000 in cash.

Above the ground there stood a car of rich ore which was included in the sale to Rhinelander. Teams started hauling this ore to the railroad siding some miles away. Bill and Lug conceive the idea of stealing the ore hauled to the railroad, overpowering men left by Rhinelander's teamsters to guard the shipment, the two crooks ingeniously arrange cables to pull the car of ore into a way-freight without the knowledge of the trainmen.

One of the guards escapes, and races back to the mine to inform Rhinelander of the theft. Helen and Storm start in pursuit of the thieves, pressing into service the camp wagon. Meanwhile, as the train travels along, Bill and Lug throw the bags of ore out of the car, expecting to later pick them up in the automobile. Helen and Storm overtake the train through a short-

FALSTAFF.

OSCAR, THE OYSTER OPENER (March 7). The cast: Oscar (Frank E. McNish); restaurant-keeper (Claude Cooper); Mame (Elsie Jordan).

For twenty years Oscar, the oyster opener at Hizzlebooble's Oyster House, had one ambition. He wanted to find a pearl that would make his fortune. It mattered not that he held a mortgage on the oyster house.

There was another jewel in Hizzlebooble's place. Her name was Mame. Both the oyster opener and the proprietor sought favor in her eyes. Jealousy was rampant. Proof of it came when a customer tried to kiss the fair jewel. Pete and the proprietor saw it. They started to punch the offender. But each declared that he alone had the right to defend Mame. During the fight that ensued the offending customer walked out.

When the smoke of battle cleared Oscar was the victor—but only because he threatened to foreclose the mortgage unless the proprietor stayed in his place. At the oyster bar Oscar tried to pat May's hand, but an oyster grabbed his finger. Oscar in rage shook the oyster that clung to his finger in the face of the proprietor. In a second Mr. Hizzlebooble was shrieking with pain. The fickle oyster had taken a fancy to the end of his nose and stayed there.

Just then the sound of an automobile was heard outside the shop. Pete and Oscar gazed out at the street. An impressive looking man alighted, looked at the restaurant and started toward the door. Of course they didn't know that a punctured tire and the cold outside had sent the new customer. Mame became manager of ceremonies. She sent Oscar and the proprietor back to their places. She offered the new customer all the tempting things on the menu. Instead of food he liked the touch of Mame's hand.

Then another fight started because he asked Mame if she wanted to see the pearl ring he had bought for his sweetheart. Mame sure did want to see it. And it fitted perfectly, too. At that instant Oscar and the proprietor arrived on the scene to murder the man who threatened to steal their jewel. But Mame quieted them.

Into two minds came a single thought. There was a place near at hand where pearls might be found. But again Oscar won. With the proprietor safely on the floor under his broad-soled shoe he opened oysters at a mad rate of speed to find the pearl. The customer and Mame became engrossed in a most interesting conversation. She did not see the richly-dressed woman who swept into the place with anger glinting her eyes and her lips compressed in rage. She grabbed the shoulder of the man who had the pearl.

"Where's that ring I told you to get from the jeweler?" she demanded. Then she saw it on Mame's finger and snatched it away. "As soon as I get another butler I'll discharge you!" she snapped to the wilted customer. "Come along!"

Mame fainted in her chair. Then from the oyster counter came a cry of triumph. After twenty years the pearl oyster came to the hands of Oscar. With the shining gem held out he rushed to Mame. She saw it, gasped, and jumped to his arms. And when the proprietor staggered out to speak, they haughtily passed him by. Only Oscar gave him a promise as he left. He was coming back to fore close the mortgage!

AMBITIOUS AWKWARD ANDY (March 9).—The cast: Andy (Walter Hiers); his employer (Riley Chamberlin).

When Andy's employer was asked why he permitted the awkward negro to remain upon the payroll, he blandly replied: "I more than save his salary, for now instead of going to the theater I have free vaudeville in the daytime."

Andy was an expert in doing things the wrong way. He was eager to help, but assistance from him ranked with interference from some one else, and his employer was kept continualy wondering what would happen. Hence when he received an ill-spelled letter from Andy, announcing that he had secured a job as Pullman porter, and intended "to save my tips and some day come back and be your partner," the employer mentally decided that sleeping-car pasengers would be an extra hazardous risk for some time to come.

It developed later that Andy, unnoticed by his associates, had become ambitious. A book agent had induced him to purchase an interesting volume called "A Knowledge of All Trades," and Andy figured that by careful study he might rise in the world. He did not know that the work was supposed to be a humorous publication, and took all the jokes seriously. Hence when he was working as a porter, he blacked all the shoes, even the white ones, and at dawn started to close the upper berths without any consideration for the feelings of the passengers sleeping in them. Then he left the train, hurriedly, between stations, for one of the first passengers had a gun.

Later Andy secured positions as a chauffeur, and as an expert dynamite blaster, but trouble still followed him, and he came back to his old job, which he won back after fighting the new incumbent. He finished by dragging his rival before his employer, and saying with great earnestness, "This gemmum is EAGER to resign, for he knows you wants me back." The employer laughed and Andy "came back."

THEODORE'S TERRIBLE THIRST (March 14).—The cast: Theodore (Riley Chamberlin); his son (Walter Hiers).

Clarence, the son of Theodore, was not a chip of the old block. Clarence was a model youth. He read the classics and never drank anything stronger than buttermilk. But Theodore——

Well, the villagers pitied the son on the many occasions they saw him standing at the door of the village saloon, peering in with a pathetic smile and moaning: "Father, dear Father, come home with me now." But father never obeyed, for father had a terrible thirst, and spent most of his time trying to quench it.

Theodore had a sister, who lived some distance away. She died leaving all to her brother and his son, providing that they both became abstainers. A week of continued abstinence would be proof of their proper living, but until this was demonstrated the money would remain in the hands of the executor, who brought the news to Theodore.

Now Clarence could qualify under the will without any difficulty, but Theodore couldn't and wouldn't. The very thought made him thirsty, and he went back to the liquor emporium, leaving his son distracted. For the son was engaged to be married, and he was so busy being a model young man that he had never worked, and unless he became an heir it would not be possible for him to establish a home of his own.

The young man solved the problem by kidnapping father and placing him on a desert island for a week. People sailed past, but when they saw Theodore waving they thought it was simply a friendly greeting, and returned it. There were alligators in the water, at least Theodore thought he saw them, and he remained a week in retirement, "alone with nature and without alcohol," as his son expressed it. When the legacy was paid over the son bought the island, and there lives with his wife and his father. Theodore no longer has a terrible thirst and is gradually getting along so that he does not miss his old boon companions, or the snakes and lizards who used to frolic about him.

RUPERT'S RUBE RELATION (March 16).—The cast: Relation (Frank E. McNish); his nephew (Fred Abbott); his sweetheart (Isolde Illian).

The other artists in the city studio called Rupert the "rural Bohemian." He was always talking about the dear old farm, and bighearted Josh Jenkins, his uncle, who held the backwoods record for milking cows and eating cabbage. The only drawbacks to the farm, the young man claimed, were that it had a mortgage and no running water.

Rupert's merry companions decided that life would be a blank until they met "Uncle Josh." So they lured him to the city by a letter, pretending to be from Rupert, offering to pay off the mortgage if he called at the studio at a certain hour on a certain evening. And they managed things so that Rupert was away at the time, and they led the old man to "Denny's".

"Denny's" was a cabaret, run at high speed, and their intention was to make "the poor rube's eyes stick out." The results, however, were not what they had anticipated.

A young lady danced upon a table. Beautiful young ladies usualy did that at "Denny's." Was Uncle Josh shocked? He was not. When dared to duplicate the performance he did and danced so lightly and well, that the young lady who preceded him left the place with tears of mortification.

Then came a number not on the bill. A sweet girl was annoyed by a masher, and the bouncer tried to put him out. But it was the bouncer who was bounced. Then the odious man resumed his ogling, until the girl cried in anguish, "Is there no hero who will dare all for a poor working guirl?" And again it was Uncle Josh who responded to the call of the afflicted. He punched and manhandled that masher, until he mashed all the mashing out of him, and then he threw him out of doors.

Rupert arrived at the restaurant a few minutes later. He had learned where his uncle was, and trailed him to "Denny's" despite many mishaps en route. When he got there he was just in time to congratulate Uncle Josh, who had accepted the late bouncer's place at a salary sufficient to pay off the mortgage within a short time.

Moral: When a "rube" wakes up, there is usually something doin'.

loving and unassuming boy, for all his Eastern experience, to gladden the hearts of his old-fashioned mother and Dad. Effie Marsh, Phil's childhood playmate, calls to tell them she is going to New York so that she may follow an art career.

To better fit himself for the profession of mining engineer, Phil goes prospecting in the hills, where he finds a miner dying from small-pox, and, regardless of personal danger, he cares for him The miner assigns his claim to him, although Phil tries to find out if there are relatives, but before all his inquiries are answered, the miner dies leaving Phil a picture of himself and sister and the information that his dead sister is survived by a little daughter whose whereabouts he knew not.

The claim proves valuable and Phil negotiates with a mining company for its development, the president of which is Count Nicasio, husband of Claudia Nicasio, a worshipper of social rank. Phil is invited to the Nicasio home and there meets Claudia's sister—Jean Bradford—who is expected to marry a title in the person of Lord Devlin, a profligate.

Effie finds her dream of an art career empty and goes to work as a model. In this way she meets Devlin, who wins her affection, and after finding that she is the heir to Phil's mining claim and unwilling to assign her rights to him he casts her aside.

Phil and Jean soon become attached to each other, which inflames Devlin. About this time, Phil's parents decide to surprise him by a visit. They arrive while Phil is at dinner with the Nicasios, and Devlin stopping in at Phil's apartment on his way to the dinner finds them and for the purpose of discrediting Phil with the Countess and her set, he suggests that the old people attend the dinner just as they are, assuring them of a welcome. Phil does welcome them, but they are treated contemptuously by the Countess and her guests and Phil takes them away indignantly. Jean, who has been disturbed by her sister's conduct and more than ever impressed with Phil's nobility, sends him a note the next morning, asking him to meet her in the garden, where they pledge their love.

The Countess has a secret lover, and by accident mails a note intended for him to Devlin. This he uses as a lever to force his suit with Jean. Jean, engaged in charitable work, discovers Phil, comforting Effie, whom he saves from suicide and sends home, and misconstruing his action she listens to her sister's persuasion and consents to marry Lord Devlin. After an explanation, however, the lovers are reunited. Claudia confesses and begs Jean to save her from ruin, but Jean refuses. In desperation, Claudia goes to Devlin's apartment with a revolver, determined to get the incriminating letter. Jean follows her fearing trouble.

In the meantime, Phil has learned from Effie that she is heir to the mine and of Devlin's attempt to gain control; he goes to call on Devlin in order to regain it and finds Jean alone with him, Claudia having hidden at Jean's approach. Phil gets possession of the two documents—gives Devlin a sound thrashing—and all ends happily for him and Jean.

THE FLIGHT OF THE DUCHESS (Thanhouser—Five Parts—March 11).—The cast: The Earl's Ward (Gladys Hulette); the Earl (Robert Gray) Duke (Burnett Parker); His Mother (Nellie Parker Spaulding); Gypsy Blacksmith (Wayne Arey); His Mother (Caroline Lee).

The trouble started when the old Duke, satiated with hunting and other diversions, dies, leaving his "sick, tall, yellow Duchess with the infant in her clutches." The Duchess then takes to traveling with her young son. Returning with the idea that it should all be romantic in the northern land where he lives, just as he had been told it would be in Paris, the Duke, now a grown man, orders that all the servants and yeomen dress as in the medieval days, and he commands that his learned men look up the books of laws and of customs during that time.

The Duke's orders are carried out, and his duchy is turned into great discontent. Soon his "plan admits a wife, to meet his eye with the other troubles, to sit thus, stand thus, see and be seen." Straightway a young girl, suitable to be his wife, is found. She is young and in a convent, without much thought of the serious things of life. The old Duchess is displeased at the idea, but she can do nothing. So she resolves, therefore, to make it unpleasant for the little Duchess who shall supplant her. It was the Duke's oldest retainer who went for the lady. The gaily bedecked palfrey which he brought for her in lieu of the motor car which she had probably expected, pleased the young girl, who took the whole matter as a huge joke.

On the way to the castle where the betrothal party was to be made a gala occasion, the prospective duchess first saw the gypsies who were later to be her life companions. While the gypsy blacksmith fixed the shoe her palfrey had thrown, the gypsy queen told her fortune. With one long look into the eyes of the handsome blacksmith whose own eyes shone with ardor, and, with a sigh, the lady rode on to the castle and the waiting Duke.

With true medieval pomp he welcomed her, but her first shock came when he merely smirked when advancing to meet her clad in the ancient armor of his forbears. That was only the beginning. Within the first hour she was in the castle the lady learned that she was to be subdued and sat upon and treated with all the scorn and contumely that the Duke and his mother believed should be the portion of brides of the Middle Ages.

There was no escape, it seemed, but the climax came when the Duke, preparing for a hunting party with the aid of his librarian and books, demanded that his betrothed take part in the ceremony, her role being to ride forth with a bowl of water and wash the hands of her liege lord. That was where she rebelled. Instead of washing his hands, she merely threw the bowl of water at his lordly head, and got a proper trimming from his yellow mother for her sacrilege.

Realizing that arguments were of no avail, the Duke started off on his party without having his hands washed. The delay so occasioned was quite long enough for the gypsies to arrive, the gypsy queen having it in mind that the Duke would give her the money his ancestors had always considered right. The Duke could not see the matter in exactly this light, though, but he did give the gypsy queen a promise of a purse if she would go into the castle and give his promised bride a good scare. The old crone assented. It was the chance for which she had been looking since she had first seen in the eyes of her beloved grandson, the blacksmith, the look of hopeless longing for the lady he believed could never be his.

So they all rode away, and the gypsy queen went in to the lady—but not to frighten her. Instead she drew for her a picture of the wild, free life of a gypsy; she told her of love that was waiting for her, and finally she persuaded her to flee from all the terrors the castle held and go with the gypsies as their child. It was easy to go away—for there was no one left about the castle to prevent, and at the foot of the hill they found, as though by premeditation, the old priest who had said prayers for the Duke. Perhaps it was a somewhat hurried wedding of the slacksmith and the lady out there on the highway. However, she never regretted it.

ALONG THE COLUMBIA RIVER (Picturesque America—March 8).—Some decidedly interesting sights are shown in this picture. The salmon fisheries along this famous stream are very interesting. The various methods of catching these finny creatures are shown. Tons and tons of the fish being drawn in nets by horses, and the fish wheels, operated by the river current, in which nine or ten tons are caught, are shown in action. Other interesting parts of the country along the course of the river are flashed on the screen. The Multnomah Falls, one of the most wonderful sights in this country, are also shown. These mighty falls, which have a drop of 720 feet, are a most imposing sight.

QUAINT VOLENDAM (Picturesque Holland —Pathecolor—March 8).—No town in Holland possesses more points of picturesque interest than Volendam. The quaint little tiled homes, the limpid canals, the queer boats, the colorful garb of the inhabitants—all these are shown in their natural colors, making a picture of matchless beauty. Of especial interest are the views of the fisherfolk, who make up the greater part of Volendam's population.

GLEEFUL GUARDIANS (Starlight—March 8).—Heinie and Louie are guardians for a girl who is fabulously rich and extremely good looking. Some unthinking unfortunate left both the cash and the girl behind him when he took up his abode in the next world and foolishly provided in his will that the girl should be under the care of Heinie and Louie and that she should marry one of them. They are called to the office of the lawyers in charge of the estate and told of their good luck. They imagine that the girl is anything other than the beauty she really is, and are agreeably surprised when they see her. Her surprise, however, is anything but agreeable, because she had arranged to marry the man of her choice.

Both Heinie and Louie propose to her, and she accepts the former. Then she arranges with her lover to act the part of the clergyman, after insisting that Heinie draw the money from the bank. He does this and hands it over to her when the ceremony is carried out. But he then finds that the minister is none other than his rival, and that he has been "fleeced" out of a perfectly good fortune. Great are his lamentations thereat.

There ensues a succession of comedy scenes showing Peggy in conflict with the sour Scots. She tells the children fairy tales, drives her car at breakneck speed, dresses in her cousin, Colin's, clothes and scares the village drunkard out of his wits by replacing his full glass with empty ones, outrages the devotion of the meenister and disturbs the community generally. But when the weaver's lass is called before a tribunal of the deacons of the the church to answer for her misdeeds she displays for the first time a trace of womanhood. She finds that Colin is responsible for the girl's predicament and when he lacks courage to confess his guilt, the deacons, of whom his father is the head, Peggy breaks into their proceedings and tells the truth.

The result is that Andrew Cameron consents to the marriage of Colin and Janet and is properly humbled by the assault on his pride. Peggy then announces her intention of returning to America. The Rev Donald Bruce hears of it, comes from the parsonage on the run and at length persuades her to stay.

BETTY OF GRAYSTONE (Fine Arts—Five Parts—Feb. 20).—The cast: Dorothy Gish, Kate Bruce, Albert Tavernier, George Fawcett, Kid McCoy, John Beck, Owen Morre, Warner P. Richmond, Grace Rankin, Macey Harlan, Eugene Ormonde and Leonore Harris.

Near the little New England town of Graystone is a mansion known as Graystone Gables, the summer home of a wealthy young New Yorker, David Chandler. Eli Lockwood, who has a pretty daughter named Betty, is caretaker of the place. The girl has a somewhat exacting mother, so she likes to go with her kindly father to see the wonderful grounds of the estate. The father dies and the mother marries Jim Weed, a widower with two grown-up sons. Because of their unkind treatment of her she spends more and more time at the Gables.

One day she creeps in through a window and dresses in a wonderful gown that she finds. A subsequent visit is discovered by the owner, who has returned unexpectedly. He has no objection to her visits and gives her the freedom of the place. Then one of Wood's sons attempts to rob the place. When Betty appears with a sheet around her he thinks he has seen a ghost and tells the people of the village. A party is formed to solve the mystery and Betty and David are discovered together.

After the scandal that follows Betty is driven from the village. She is dressed in her borrowed finery when David comes along and finds her weeping by the roadside. David takes her to New York and places her in the care of a society woman as chaperon. A girl named Mildred Lee is openly making love to him because of his great fortune. This disgusts Betty and she starts back home. David follows.

Back in Graystone Betty finds that her mother is dying but her step-brothers refuse to let them meet. In despair Betty goes to the Gables, where David finds her. She has been followed to the mansion by one of her step-brothers and is struggling to escape his unwelcome attention when David arrives. Betty is rescued. The picture ends with a wedding that makes the girl who was driven out of town by gossip the first lady in the community.

THE BRIGHT LIGHTS (Keystone—Two Parts—Feb. 20).—The cast: Roscoe Arbuckle, Mabel Normand, Al St. John, William Jefferson, Joe Bordeau and James Bryant.

The manager of a small town hotel installs a cabaret in an attempt to achieve the standard set by restaurants in the large cities. His effort is ludicrous because of the fact that his talent is all recruited from the help in the hotel. Roscoe, the cook, is forced to appear in a dress suit and when Al St. John appears from the bar there is a lively rivalry between the two for the applause of the crowd. Mabel, the waitress, vies with a professional dancer from the city.

Into this setting comes William Jefferson, a polished sharper, who takes the innocent Mabel by storm. She listens with open mouth to his stories of life in the metropolis and willingly leaves the village with him. Roscoe, who has been mildly in love with the waitress, realizes what her fate is likely to be and starts in pursuit. His search takes him to the Bowery just as an old sailor is being thrown out of a dive. From the sailor Roscoe learns that Mabel is inside, practically a prisoner and forced to associate with thugs and the women of the resort. He plans a heroic rescue, but when his purpose becomes known he is promptly bounced.

Meanwhile the sailor has returned with reinforcements. Led by the persistent Roscoe they storm the resort. There is a free-for-all fight, in the course of which Roscoe throws a member of the gang through a solid brick wall. This loosens the foundations and a shoe shop and Chinese laundry above drop into the dive. Mabel is found in an inner room, which she is only too glad to leave to return to the country with "Fatty."

WIFE AND AUTO TROUBLE (Keystone—Two Parts -March 5).—The cast: William Collier, Blanche Payson, Joseph Belmont, Alice Davenport and Mae Busch.

Collier, ordinarily a meek husband, is tired and tries to sleep overtime after a big night, but his wife, Blanche Payson, a husky Amazon, lifts him out of bed, carries him to the bathroom and throws him into the tub. When he finally appears at breakfast he finds his brother-in-law, Joseph Belmont, is being helped to the best of everything. In disgust he hastens to the office which he shares with his wife's brother.

At the office Mae Busch, his stenographer, expresses a longing for an automobile. Collier agrees to buy her one and is accepting her loving thanks when Joseph appears. Quietly he lifts the telephone receiver from the hook, calls the wife on another wire and switches it to Collier's phone so that all the conversation which goes on between employer and stenographer can be heard at the other end.

This brings wife and mother-in-law on the run to the office. They arrive just as the new auto is about to start on a test run with Collier and Miss Busch. To appease her wrath Collier gives the machine to his wife and while she and her mother speed away he and the stenographer hasten to a cafe. Joseph, who has joined the motor party, takes his mother and sister to this same cafe. Numerous complications follow but all ends happily.

THE FLYING TORPEDO (Fine Arts—Five Parts—March 12).—The cast: John Emerson, Spottiswoode Aitken, Bessie Love, Viola Barry, William E. Lawrence, Fred J. Butler, Raymond Wells, Lucille Younge and Ralph Lewis.

An eccentric novelist reads of the offer of a defense board for new weapons of defense and backs his closest friend, an inventor, in the development of a torpedo that can be controlled by wireless.

War clouds hover over the countary and a band of international crooks is active in its efforts to obtain possession of the model. The crooks are finally successful after murdering the inventor by the ingenious use of asphyxiating gas. But the novelist is determined to go on with the invention. He advances money to the dead man's assistant and sets about using the methods he has described in his popular detective stories to run down the band. Aided by a Swedish servant, who is a keen admirer of his stories, the author is successful in locating the model. Before he can take it away, however, he is discovered and made prisoner. When he does not return the servant girl gives the alarm and the police rescue him and bundle the crooks off to jail.

By this time a foreign invader has landed in California, become strongly intrenched and defeats the United States forces on land and sea. The coast cities are in peril and the model flying topedo is seized upon as a last hope. Many duplicates are made and send to the beleaguered defenders. Then the tide changes. By wireless control and range finders the torpedoes are sent on their unerring way and the works of the foreign foe are demolished. The rout is complete.

THE MORAL FABRIC (Kay Bee—Five Parts—March 12).—The cast: Frank Mills, Edith Reeves, Howard Hickman and Louise Brownell.

Scott Winthrop is a wealthy, matter of fact business man who cannot conceive an undeniable right in another man's attempt to break up his home because he has happened to take a fancy to his wife. But Amy Winthrop, a romantic young woman with more spare time than is good for her, takes up with the notions of a so-called liberal organization and is in the arms of its leader on her wedding anniversary when her husband comes home with a costly present for her. She stubbornly announces that Mackley Stuart is her "elective" mate and that they are going away together.

Unable to dissuade her, the husband sends word to the newspapers that he is relinquishing his wife to Stuart at their request. The publicity that follows practically forces them to wed. Later, while touring Europe, Winthrop runs across the couple in a Naples cafe. He manifests great pleasure and greets them as old friends. He congratulates them on their happiness and fills his former wife's ears with the same kind of twaddle that had lost her to him. With pitiless cruelty he pursues his campaign and the result he seeks is not long in coming. Amy throws herself at his head and he apparently is content. Stuart, furious, now finds himself in the position in which he had placed Winthrop. The three discuss the situation. Amy repudiates her husband and offers to leave him to return to her first love. Winthrop leads her to believe that he will take her back and then spurns her. Thus he proves to them that the fabric of morality cannot be lightly destroyed and is satisfied that he has ruined their lives as they ruined his.

Mr. Jack Magee, six weeks behind in his rent, is stopped by Mrs. Billups, the landlady, on his way out and told very bluntly that "its pay or get out." He is a gay dog and succeeds in flattering her so that she temporarily forgets about the rent, but that evening when he comes home he finds his door locked.

Nothing daunted, he proceeds to climb the fire escape to get into his room just after a burglar has climbed up the iron stairs and knocked over some boxes, arousing Mrs. Billups. She fires a big pistol out the window and yells for the police, frightening both the burglar and Mr. Jack so that they fall. Jack lands on top of the burglar, and when the cop arrives he gets all the credit for catching the burglar. For his heroic act he is welcomed into Mrs. Billups' boarding house again, and the grateful lady's appreciation assures Mr. Jack of comfort and three square meals a day ever after.

MR. JACK WINS A DOUBLE-CROSS (No. 2 of Frank Daniels' Comedies—Vitagraph—Feb. 28)—The cast: Jack Magee (Frank Daniels); The Cook (Kate Price); The Butler (George Stevens); Mrs. Vane (Mrs. C. Jay Williams). Author—Paul West. Produced by C. Jay Williams.

Eight weeks behind in his rent, Mr. Jack Magee, the Hallroom Heartbreaker, is in the act of preparing his dinner over the gasjet when he receives an invitation from the rich Mrs. Giltrox to attend a dinner "en famille" that evening. He almost faints with joy and is on hand bright and early.

In the course of the evening he enjoys himself immensely flirting with one of the pretty women guests, but worries greatly over the long delay before "eats." The butler is sent by the hostess to find out the trouble and returns with a biscuit in his eye implanted there by the cook. Some of the men guests attempt to interview the queen of the kitchen and get worse treatment. Then the hostess calls upon our hero, Brave Jack. He doesn't dare refuse, and when the cook catches sight of him, she sets him to work preparing dinner. The men are afraid to venture in and the women weep because they fear Jack is killing the cook.

Finally all burst into the kitchen to find Jack in a "boy stood on the burning deck" pose. His description of what happened, in which he licked both a policeman and the cook, is received with loud cheers, and the women flock around showering hero worship upon him.

MR. JACK DUCKS THE ALIMONY (Vitagraph—March 6).—The cast: Mr. Jack (Frank Daniels); his wife (Eulalie Jensen); Colonel Crab (Logan Paul); sergeant (Edward Elkas). Author, William B. Courtney. Produced by C. J. Williams.

Handsome Jack Magee simply cannot get along with his jealous wife, so when she sees him trying to flirt with the pretty maid, she sues for a divorce. Jack finds he will have to pay alimony, and absolutely refuses to do so. Unable to convince the lawyer of his disregard for the law, he finally enlists in the army in order to avoid paying alimony. There his ludicrous stunts cause much laughter and a great deal of trouble for Colonel Crab and his officers, until he is given a clerical position.

Later the Colonel entrusts Jack with some important papers to give Captain Crump. He gets chummy with the cook (who is a spy) and shows him the papers. He is seen by the Colonel who furiously puts Jack in a cell as a spy, where the poor fellow in imagination sees the fatal stone wall and firing squad business. Fortunately, the divorce lawyer happens to visit the Colonel, who is a friend of his, and succeeds in getting his friend Jack out, and our hero, preferring matrimony to paying alimony, tells the lawyer he is going back to his dear little wife.

JACK, THE HASH MAGNATE (No. 4 of the Frank Daniels' Comedies—Vitagraph—March 13).—The cast: Jack Magee (Frank Daniels); Lizzy Potts (Belle Bruce); Pansy Bullion (Edwina Robbins). Author—R. T. Whytock. Produced by C. Jay Williams.

Happy Jack, the popular Hash Magnate of Harlem, is suddenly seized with high social aspirations and decides to carry out his ideas, to the great dismay of Lizzy Potts, the cook, who loves Jack. He hires a full-dress outfit, plasters up his suitcase with canned goods labels and arrives in a taxi at the Giltmore, where he registers as Count Di Woppo. There he makes the acquaintance of Mrs. Pansy Bullion, a rich widow, who mistakes him for the Prince Di Gorgonzola, who is reported to be traveling incog.

Being title-mad, she proposes and he dazedly accepts her. But the real Prince arrives and Jack has to fight a ferocious duel with him—coming out victorious—through no fault of his own, for the Prince slips on a banana peel. But Lizzie, faithful Lizzie, is on his trail, and summons him back to the hash-house. Mrs. Bullion runs over a boy in her auto and takes refuge in Jack's hashhouse, where she is horrified to see her erstwhile Prince behind the counter. She angrily hurls a dish of hash at him, but Lizzie springs for her and pulls off her false hair. Bald as a billiard ball, Mrs. Bullion dashes out and escapes amid the hoots and jeers of the assembled crowd, while Jack and faithful Lizzie fall into each other's arms.

The marriage ceremony is performed at Sir Daniel's deathbed, and at its conclusion, all present receive a shock when a former mistress of Mortimer's confronts them. Joanne, horrified at the woman's story, refuses to live with her husband and runs away to America. There she receives news of her husband's death while hunting in the wilds of British Columbia, and her relief is great. But two years later she hears that her husband is alive, and the old fear returns. Determined to prove for herself the truth, Joanne leaves for the railroad construction camp high up in the mountains of British Columbia. She is maliciously directed to Bill Quade's place, thus falling into the clutches of the worst men in the camp. He conceives a violent love for Joanne and tries to force his caresses upon her, but is prevented by John Aldrous, a young novelist and explorer and his companion, Donald McDonald, typical old mountaineer.

Bill swears he will have the girl, and John places her under the protection of his friends, Paul Blackton and his wife. She and Aldrous fall in love, but her former marriage is a barrier to their happiness. While watching blasting operations Joanne and Aldrous wander into the cavern which is to act as the air-chamber for the explosion of several tons of dynamite and are trapped there by a landslide. Expecting death momentarily, they are saved by the fact that the exploding wires were broken by the landslide and they are rescued.

Meanwhile, Quade and his gang have been on the trail of Aldrous and Joanne, and after some exciting adventures, one of the crooks turns out to be Joanne's first husband. In a struggle with John he is killed, freeing Joanne forever and when John has recovered from his experience, he and Joanne are reunited in permanent happiness and love.

That night when Nadia leaves the office she goes to Mabel's flat, dons Mabel's finery and there meets Ashton, a wealthy rounder. She tastes liquor for the first time; wears a fine gown for the first time and dines for the first time in a questionable cabaret.

In natural consequence, Nadia leaves her home and becomes a friend of Ashton. As time passes, Nadia learns the power of her beauty, and as Ashton's health declines, she schemes to secure his riches. woman is torn betwixt the love of gold as typified by the two old men and the passionate love she holds for Phillip. She carefully hides from Phillip the fact that she is anything but pure and innocent.

What shall she do? Shall she be satisfied as the wife of Phillip with but his love? One day the question is settled. Nadia discards Villars and submits to the attentions of Lawlor, who has the most money. Nadia plots to keep Lawlor and Phillip Morton, both constant callers at her home, from meeting one another. Phillip arrives unannounced one day and discovers Nadia in the arms of another. Then it is that he spurns the woman, and later wooes and wins Isobel Warren. Nadia, answering the lure of gold, marries Lawlor, but she never forgets her passion for Phillip.

As time passes, Phillip Morton is ordered to South America. When Nadia reads in a newspaper of Morton's intended journey, she compels her aged husband to take her there. In South America Phillip Morton and Nadia meet again. Morton has long since lost all his infatuation for the siren, a fact which causes Nadia to long more passionately for the love of the man whom she has sacrificed for the lure of gold. Desperately the woman hits upon a scheme. She writes Phillip a note asking him to call at the hotel. Before his arrival Nadia garbs herself voluptuously. When Phillip, enticed by a subterfuge, enters Nadia's private apartments in the hotel, she exerts every woman's wile to win him to her. But she is unsuccessful in winning him. However she does not give up and conceives an idea that Phillip Morton may be tempted to divorce his wife and marry her should her aged husband die.

The woman entices her aged husband to the top of a cliff, where she pushes him off, intending that he meet his death that way. Unknown to Nadia Lawlor is rescued by a beachcomber. The old man, burning with the desire for vengeance, begins his slow and painful climb up the cliff side. Phillip, walking along the cliff, again encounters Nadia. Again the woman pleads with him. Her flushed face with its uncanny beauty presses close to Phillip. He again spurns the woman and turns away.

Nadia stands wondering there at the brink of the precipice. She finally realizes that her life has been in vain. She turns to leave the place. As she turns, she encounters the form of her aged husband. In quavering tones the old man accuses his wife of attempting to murder him. In a last desperate attempt to shut out the horrid spectacle from her sight and mind, Nadia again shoves the doddering old man to his death. He falls, but as he does so, he clutches Nadia's hair with his hands, and she, too, is dragged over the precipice and falls with Lawlor to death on the rocks below.

THE HERO OF SUBMARINE D-2 (Vitagraph—5 Parts—March 13).—The cast: Lieut. Commander Colton, U. S. N. (Charles Richman); Gilman Austen (James Morrison); Hon. J. F. Austen (Anders Randolf); Capt. McMasters, U. S. N. (Charles Wellesley); James Archer (Thomas Mills); The Ruanian Ambassador (L. Rogers Lytton); Caroline Austen (Eleanor Woodruff); Ethel McMasters (Zena Keefe). Author—Cyrus Townsend Brady. Produced by Paul Scardon. Picturized by Jasper Ewing Brady.

Lieutenant Commander Colton, U. S. N., is in love with Caroline Austen, daughter of a prominent political power in Washington. Colton has a rival in James Archer, a journalist of prominence, unscrupulous and secretly in league with the Ruanian Ambassador, who is endeavoring to obtain for his country inside information as to the United States naval resources.

Gilman Austen, Caroline's brother, receives an appointment to the Naval Academy. He is much in love with Ethel McMasters, daughter of a superintendent, and pays so much attention to her that his term marks in navigation are so low as to preclude his passing the semi-annual examination. He is told of this by Captain McMasters, and Colton, Caroline Austen and Ethel McMasters then get busy in Gilman's behalf, Caroline working with Colton, who is in love with her, and Ethel attempting to influence her father, but these two officers absolutely refuse to exercise any influence in Gilman's favor.

Mr. Austen, Sr., then takes a hand in the game, but finds naval men a different proposition from politicians, and as a result Gilman is forced to leave the Academy. Mr. Austen uses his power and has Colton transferred to the command of a collier. Gilman Austen, however, grits his teeth and 'lists in the navy as an apprentice, and here we see him carried through all his training experiences.

Colton being of an inventive turn of mind and realizing the weakness of the submarines is in the battery, invents a new battery. Archer hears of this and informs the Ruanian Ambassador, who offers the traitorous journalist almost any sum to secure these plans. Archer is prevented from securing them by Gilman Austen, who is now a full-fledged able seaman, serving under the name of Roger Brown. The Ambassador then determines upon a big coup. He directs Archer—who now is completely in his power—to have a Ruanian merchant ship lay a series of mines in the channel through which the warships must pass. Colton has been placed in command of the submarine flotilla, and Gilman Austen is on duty with the D-2. Through Caroline Austen, Colton learns of the plot, and as the ships are due to arrive that night, Colton takes command of the D-2, goes out and submerges his boat. Time is precious, and Colton realizes that he cannot take the D-2 through the mines, so he has himself shot out of a torpedo tube and swims through the mines, goes on board the merchant ship and blows up the mines just before the fleet comes in. Colton is badly wounded and is rescued by Gilman Austen and the submarine crew. For his work in this action, as well as his general reputation and good character, Gilman Austen is sent back to the Naval Academy. Colton marries Caroline.

THE IMMORTAL FLAME (Five Parts—(February). Written and directed by Ivan Abramson.

James Forbes, a Congressman with high political ambitions, lives at Washington with Marion, his wife, and daughter, Ada. Ada, deeply in love with Eugene Cory, a composer, from whom she is receiving vocal instruction, is about to become engaged to him. Forbes' nomination for senator is strongly opposed by "Boss" Stapleton, Cory's rival for Ada's hand. Alice Woods, another pupil of Cory, under mental stress, confesses her love for him. Cory sympathetically tells her of his impending engagement to Ada Forbes.

To further his political ambition, Forbes prevents Ada's engagement to Cory, and urges his daughter to marry Stapleton. The latter, in appreciation, gives Forbes the nomination for senator. Cory, disillusioned, attempts to shoot himself. Alice, arriving for her lesson, stays his hand. She again declares her sincere love for him. He eventually marries Alice.

The married life of Ada and Stapleton proves a failure, Ada lavishes all her affection on her adopted daughter, Beatrice. Cory, living with his wife in New York, has achieved success. Alice, childless, devotes here time to charity. The premiere of Cory's opera is followed by a reception in his honor, given by one of the leaders of Washington's "smart set." Here Ada again meets Cory; they realize that they are both mismated; that love cannot be bought nor sold; that the only price of love is love.

Arriving home late that night, Stapleton quarrels with Ada, telling her that "old memories are haunting her again"—and strikes her. Seeking consolation, Ada goes to New York. She is met by Cory who provides a home for her in an apartment hotel on Riverside Drive.

Alice and her sister, Stella, who is about to be married, are seeking a furnished apartment. They call at the hotel. The clerk obtains permission from Ada to inspect her apartment. Here, Alice sees a photo of Cory, and demands from Ada, "Who is this man?" Confusedly, Ada answers, "Why, that's my huband!" Alice collapses, and, Ada, realizing her plight, confesses the truth. Alice for the first time learns that Ada is unfortunate and instead of condemning her, Alice gives Ada her sympathy, and offers any help she may desire—but Ada refuses on the ground that the sacrifice must be made by her. She asks Alice to go home, and promises never again to meet Cory.

That afternoon, Cory pays a visit to Ada, and she implores him to leave her forever. Grieved over the separation from her sweetheart, parents and child, Ada reads in a newspaper that her mother is on her deathbed. That evening, Alice receives a telephone message from Ada saying: "I'm going back—forgive—I—" and then—silence, and a crash. Alice and Cory hasten to Ada's apartment, and find the stricken woman in a state of collapse. Cory summons a physician, while Alice tenderly nurses Ada.

At midnight, Alice and Cory leave her bedside, in charge of a nurse. Ada awakens, eludes her nurse, and wanders to the bank of the river. Overwhelmed by the hopelessness of her love, she enters the swirling waters. Gradually the icy stream engulfs her, extinguishing the last spark of the immortal flame of her great love.

her $50,000 necklace to the baby on her wedding day. Morgan promises to carry out her wish. She dies.

For five years, Morgan finds consolation in faithful devotion to the welfare of his daughter and her family. One day he takes them to Atlantic City for a rest. There, induced by June, Morgan visits Maxine, a clairvoyant, who predicts for him a second marriage to a young woman "who will make his life an earthly paradise." Morgan succumbs to the wiles of the clairvoyant, and, next day June finds her father in Maxine's company.

Meanwhile, June's husband meets with an accident at New York, and June returns home. Morgan remains at Atlantic City, stating he has an important "business engagement," and there marries Maxine. Two days after Morgan brings his wife home. She receives a cool reception from his daughter and, as time passes, the two women become bitter enemies.

Later Maxine persuades her husband to give her the necklace bequeathed to June's daughter, and, when June sees it on Maxine's neck, her anger knows no bounds. Maddened with fury, June tears the jewel from the charlatan's throat. Morgan, entering the scene, heeds his wife's reproaches, and in frenzied rage orders June, her husband, and daughter from his home. When the governess, for thirty years in his service, rebukes Morgan for his heartless conduct, and warns him that "he is living in a fool's paradise," she too is ordered from the house.

June, now living in a cheap boarding house with her family, in poverty, is about to become a mother. Terrified at the thought of further responsibilities and the bitter recollection that the venom of Maxine's malice has transformed her kindly father into a brute, who forced this misery on her, June conceives a desperate plan to avoid the consequences of motherhood; but fortunately, her intentions are defeated in time by her husband. John now decides to see Morgan and tell him the facts. Morgan informed by John of their poverty and June's desperate notion, resolves to come to their aid, but, here too Maxine comes forward unexpectedly—orders John from the house, and tells Morgan "she doesn't want his pauper relatives around."

One evening, Rufus Stone, Maxine's lawyer and friend takes her to a performance of "Faust." Morgan remains at home. In their absences, he compares "Faust's" with his own life. He sees himself as "Faust" giving the jewels to Maxine, as Marguerite; while Rufus, as Mephisto, laughs mockingly at his folly. Morgan, now awakened, realizes that the old governess was right when she accused him of living in "a fool's paradise."

Late that night, Morgan finds Maxine in the arms of Rufus. His infatuation turns to hatred, he tells Rufus, "You love my wife? Take her!" he tears the necklace from Maxine's neck; and orders the pair from his home. He restores his daughter and family to his home. Maxine, now proposes marriage to Rufus, but he tells her she is too late.

A week later, while celebrating the reunion of his family, Maxine, like an ugly shadow from the past appears. It is her last attempt to regain the old man's affections. He again commences to weaken before the poisonous charm of Maxine, but now comes the magic power of his little grandchild who rushes to his aid and overpowers the pretense of the vampire. Morgan gives Maxine a liberal allowance and freedom—commands her to leave—and she goes forth into the night.

Isabelle Rawlston is also in love with Sherwood, and determines to break up his match with Peggy.

On the night of the birthday party Isabelle intimates to Sherwood that Peggy's interest in Hathaway is one other than charity. He becomes jealous and tells Peggy she must give up her settlement work. She refuses and returns the engagement ring.

Peggy receives from her father, for her birthday gift, stock in Consolidated Cotton, valued at $50,000. This she puts away, intending to use it in her charities. The next day her father tells her that he has just learned of the deplorable financial conditions among the owners of the cotton mills in the south, and that he has written to Colonel Robert Carter, one of the big cotton growers, and offered to aid him.

Colonel Carter, who is proud and haughty, becomes indignant when he receives the letter from the Wall street broker, and turns down his proffer of assistance. This puzzles Peggy, and she decides to go south and investigate conditions at first hand. Arriving in the south she obtains a position as a mill hand. Her beauty attracts the attention of the foreman in the Carter mill, and he tells Peggy she must remain after work, as he wishes to see her. He attempts to force his attentions upon her, and a struggle ensues. John Carter, son of the owner, enters at the critical moment and rescues Peggy. The foreman is discharged and the gallantry of young Carter makes an appeal to Peggy.

The boll weevil is discovered in the cotton, and this, together with a shortage in the crop, threatens ruin for Colonel Carter. For the second time he refuses financial aid from Peggy's father, and the broker decides to crush him by cornering the cotton market. Peggy learns of her father's manipulations and hurries to New York. With her $50,000 worth of stock for a nucleus she begins a fight on the exchange, in which she is triumphant over her father. He is dumfounded when he learns the identity of his antagonist. Peggy explains the hardships he would have worked among the mill hands had he been successful. She induces him to take a trip south with her, when they meet the Carters. The two men profit through the meeting, and come to a complete understanding on economic questions and conditions. Young Carter learns that Peggy was the one that "broke" the corner and saved his family from ruin. The two decide to exchange cotton bolls for orange blossoms.

THE SOUL MARKET (Popular Plays and Players—Five Parts—Feb. 28).—The cast: Elaine Elton (Mme. Petrova); Oscar Billings (Arthur Hoops); Jack Dexter (Wilmuth Merkyl); Dick Gordon, his friend (Fritz De Lint); Griggs (Fraunie Fraucholz); Sam Franklin (Charles Brandt); Harvey Theugh (Charles Mack); Joe Burrows (Bert Tuey); Mrs. Wilson (Grace Florence); Susan (Cora Milholland); Vivian Austin (Evelyn Brent); James Austin, her father (Al Thomas); 'Billie" Simpson (Gypsy O'Brien). Directed by Francis J. Grandon.

Elaine Elton, a musical comedy prima donna, at the height of her success, becomes weary of her environment. Around her she sees young girls ever bartering their beauty and innocence for luxury and fine clothes, and to her it seems a veritable soul market. Jack Dexter, a clean-cut young man, just out of college, and with ample means at his disposal, falls in love with Elaine across the footlights. He makes several fruitless efforts to meet her, but is repulsed. Oscar Billings, an elderly roue, who is financially back of the theatrical trust, and owns the production in which Elaine is starred, also forces his attentions upon the prima donna.

After various attempts to bribe employes around the stage door, Jack finally succeeds in arranging to get Elaine's chauffeur out of the way. He assumes the chauffeur's attire and drives her home. At the door she observes that he is not her regular driver. Jack explains that the chauffeur's mother is ill in California, and that he was suddenly called away. He applies for the position and Elaine engages him.

The following day when Elaine is out for a drive in the country their machine is wrecked and Elaine is severely wounded. Jack carries the unconscious woman to the nearest house, which proves to be his own magnificent country home. Jack enjoins his servants to secrecy. He cares for Elaine very tenderly and she begins to fall in love with him. Encouraged by this Jack makes violent love and proposes marriage. Indignantly she refuses him, but her manner shows she loves him.

Elaine recovers and is removed to her own home. Soon after her arrival she receives a proposal of marriage from Billings. Tempted by his wealth and position, she writes a note accepting him. She gives the note to her maid to mail. Elaine then drowses off. In a dream she marries Billings, who continues his affairs with scores of other young women. Jack has remained as her chauffeur, to be near her. In a quarrel, where Jack takes her part, Billings attempts to kill Jack. Elaine shoots him. To avoid a scandal they start to take the injured man to his apartments, which he has still retained. On the way he revives, and a fight between Jack and Billings ensues. As they struggle for possession of the steering wheel, the car goes over a precipice.

Elaine's maid enters at this point, and in dropping a tray, awakens her mistress. Jack enters about the same time. Elaine arises and goes to his arms. When Billings comes into the room, unannounced, he finds Elaine in the arms of Jack, in exactly the same situation that appeared in the dream. Acting upon an impulse Elaine orders Billings from her apartments. The maid returns, trembling, and says she failed to mail the letter of acceptance to Billings. She explains that she left it on the kitchen table when her sweetheart, the iceman, called and that he inadvertently had placed a piece of ice on the letter and it had been soiled by the wet surface. The maid fears she will be discharged, but Elaine takes her in her arms and kisses her. Elaine then learns of Jack's wealth, and they repair to his country home for a quiet wedding.

FOX FILM CORP.

GOLD AND THE WOMAN (Five Parts—March 13).—Chandos, an early English settler in America, tries to buy from Chief Duskara, of the Wiconicoes, a thousand acres of land known as "The Valley of Shadow," which have been given by grant to the Indian chief. Duskara refuses to sell "The Valley of the Shadow" and hides the grant thereto in a hollow tree. Chandos and his son murder Duskara and the settler forges the chief's name to a deed transferring the property to the Chandos family. The dying squaw of Duskara utters a curse against the Chandos family and all its issue, on whom she seeks to invoke blindness.

Generations come and go. Hester Gray, a girl in her teens, is the descendant of the early settler, and the heir to "The Valley of Shadow." Lee Duskara, a student at Harvard, is the great-great-grandson of the Indian chief. Hester and Lee are thrown much together and fall in love. Lee asks Colonel Ernest Dent, Hester's guardian, for permission to marry the latter's ward.

Dent, who was a friend of Hester's father, has become embroiled with Juliet Cordova, a Mexican adventuress who is serving as his secretary. Juliet's power over Dent is absolute. He consults her on even the most trivial of subjects. When Juliet learns that Lee desires to marry Hester, she takes steps to prevent the marriage. Simulating the utmost innocence, she compromises Lee and the latter is rejected by Hester.

"The Valley of Shadow" is no longer the quiet, picturesque tract of Chief Duskara's time. The most productive coal mines in the world stretch across its broad expanse. It is these, or rather their revenue, that Juliet covets. She induces Dent to marry Hester. After the marriage she intrudes herself into the home of Dent and Hester, nominally as Dent's secretary. Hester is stricken with blindness, and Dent, at Juliet's persuasion, tries to have Hester deed away her title to "The Valley of Shadow."

Finally Hester discovers the dual life that Dent has been leading. She is groping her way through her husband's study when she comes upon Juliet and Dent, asleep, locked in each other's arms in a chair. She runs from the house with the purpose of committing suicide. Lee Duskara, who, incidentally, has established his title to "The Valley of Shadow," prevents her from carrying out her purpose. Dent dies, a victim of his own self-indulgence. Lee again declares his love for Hester, and this time is accepted.

SOL LESSER.

THE NE'ER-DO-WELL (10 Parts).—The hero is Kirk Anthony, a college graduate, a veteran football player, and, since graudation the coach of his university team. On the evening following a football victory, the last of the season, Kirk and others start out to celebrate. Late that night he finds himself on shipboard, and when he awakens he is without money and without baggage.

During the voyage Kirk becomes acquainted with a woman—a Mrs. Stephen Cortlandt—whom he learns to admire very much. She is really a diplomatic agent of great influence. One day while Kirk is out hunting he meets in a forest bower, a Spanish girl who is known only as "Chiquita." He fails desperately in love with her, and tries vainly to discover her identity.

The story of his making good, of his winning of Chiquita despite the counter-plottings of Mrs. Cortlandt, of the clearing of his name, and of the final decisive intervention in Panamanian affairs of old Darwin K. Anthony, is engrossing and varied by many richly humorous episodes.

GREAT NORTHERN.

THE MOTHER WHO PAID (Five Parts).—Feb. 7, Prologue—While away on important business Justin Winthrop receives the news of the birth of a son; his supreme wish is now granted, since he is provided with an heir to his vast estates.

Countess Winthrop, while walking in the grounds of her country estate, encounters a young gypsy mother, Ayla, and her babe, who relates how she has been cursed by her father, the gypsy chief, and turned away from the tribe on account of her nameless child. Countess Winthrop gives shelter to the homeless ones, and that night the Winthrop baby, who has been ailing, dies. The Countess, realizing what a terrible disappointment this will be to her husband, forthwith takes the gypsy baby to replace her own, and gives Ayla a locket containing her photograph.

Thirty-five Years Later—The supposititious Justin Winthrop, Jr., has become a distinguished politician, and it is expected that he will be appointed Minister of Foreign Affairs. Beresford, who is infuriated by this rumor, receives a call from Winthrop's butler, who brings a letter written by the Countess upon her deathbed, informing her son that she is not his real mother, but that he is the son of a gypsy woman. This letter will make Beresford an irresistible weapon against his opponent. He consults Ayla, now known as Madam de Thebes, the famous clairvoyant, and she predicts a great political victory for him.

While on his way to the Senate, Winthrop rescues Louise Beresford from a robber, and love at first sight ensues. Upon her return home Louise overhears her father and the butler discussing the letter, which the latter has stolen from Winthrop's desk. Louise at once warns Justin.

Madam de Thebes, fearing arrest, sends the locket given her by the Countess to Louise, knowing of the love Louise has for her son. Unconscious of the harm she is doing Justin, Louise shows her father the locket, thereby providing Beresford with all the weapons against Winthrop.

Madam de Thebes, who has been arrested, escapes from prison through Louise's help and reaches the House of Parliament in time to refute the public accusation of Beresford, that Winthrop is the son of the gypsy fortune-teller. She falls fainting and is carried to an antechamber, where Beresford and Winthrop become reconciled. Madam de Thebes, subduing to the very last the desire to clasp her son to her heart, dies, and her failing senses can no longer hear her son's tender whisper: "My mother!"

Rembusch Screens

The DIFFERENCE in the material Makes the MATERIAL difference

WHITE OPAQUE.
For the exhibitor who wants a very cheap SEAMLESS white, cloth screen.

MIRRORCLOTH.
For the exhibitor who wants a better screen than a white cloth screen—a very cheap, seamed metallized cloth.

SILVERFIBRE.
A better metallized screen; SEAMLESS; a great value for the money. Made to fit your house.

GOLDFIBRE.
A still better SEAMLESS heavy fibre screen; very popular. Guaranteed the best of its kind on the market. This is one of the most popular of our makes. Samples furnished for try out.

CRYSTAL FIBRE.
A SEAMLESS heavy fibre, better than any Goldfibre on the market. All material, workmanship and selection of the highest grade. Guaranteed a better screen than any that is offered by any other manufacturer.

GLORY LIGHT.
A new wonderful white fabric screen, SEAMLESS. For all theatres, but especially for large and very fine theatres. We guarantee this screen to give perfect distribution at all angles and at the same time retain its brilliancy. The sharpness and detail brought out by this surface is superb and beyond description. It has color value perfect and the workmanship and material are of the highest order. The sharpness of a picture on Glory Light fabric is astonishing. This is not an aluminum or gold screen, but an invention of our own, the outcome of ten years of experimenting. "The supreme fabric screen."

GLASS TRANSLUCENT SCREEN FOR REAR PROJECTION (Framed). Made in nine different finishes for narrow or wide houses.
Where rear projection is possible, there can be no question about the Glass Translucent Screen being the proper surface. In fact, its superiority is so great that comparison is superfluous. The pictures are very sharp, clear and brilliant, equal to any screen made and the spot of the lamp will not show through. This method of projection is especially desirable because the noise of the operating room is away from the auditorium proper. Full information will be given to anyone who desires to consider a rear projection screen.

REMBUSCH PATENTED GLASS MIRROR SCREEN (Framed).
A screen in a class alone. Pictures on a Mirror Screen have a depth and perspective altogether distinctive because the reflected light is entirely diffused. There are no elements of shine present on the face, which is dull, snow white, therefore no haze or glare is possible. Eye strain is entirely eliminated. This surface has been acknowledged by scientists and medical authorities as the easiest on the eyes of any screen in the world. It is a life-time investment. We can refer you to screens eight and ten years old and will be glad to demonstrate a sample of any other surface against these old screens today and prove their superiority. They are as good today as the day they left the factory. Our late new improved Mirror Screen is much improved over the screens we have made in the past. Made in nine different finishes for narrow or wide houses. Prices furnished on application.

STRETCHER FRAMES AND ROLLERS.
We make every kind of roller and stretchers for screens, shadow box outfits, special scenery, etc. Prices on application.

THE UNWRITTEN LAW (Five Parts—February).—The cast: Kate Wilson (Beatriz Michelena); John Wilson (William Pike); Larry McCarthy (Andrew Robson); Judge Snyder (Matt Snyder); Fred Morley (Frank Hollins); Dr. Mahler (Clarence Arper); Sue Wilson (Baby Felice Rix); Estelle (Irene Outtrim); Sadie (Nina Herbert).

The picture opens with a scene in the drawing room of the home to which John Wilson, the State's District Attorney, has just brought his bride, Kate. This fades out into one year later. The young wife has become the mother of a baby girl. John Wilson is now a candidate for Governor. Larry McCarthy, saloon proprietor and political boss of the southern half of the State, comes to Wilson's home to plead his support, and while there meets Kate. That same evening the Wilsons have dinner at the Frolic Cafe, where Estelle, a popular cabaret singer and McCarthy's sweetheart, is the star performer. Because Wilson and his wife, both of whom do not drink, refuse to take the wine offered by McCarthy, he decides to harm Wilson in his race for Governor.

With no suspicion of McCarthy's perfidy, Wilson is confident of victory, and in anticipation of it gives a ball on the night of election. During the affair, he receives news of his defeat. He wanders into the library and there finds a decanter of whiskey. Surrendering to a sudden impulse, he begins to drink and is thoroughly intoxicated when Kate discovers him later.

Wilson becomes a confirmed drunkard. Estelle has run away with another man, and McCarthy, now determined to possess himself of Kate, assists Wilson on his downward way. Kate, finding it necessary to secure an income for the support of herself, John and Baby Sue through her own endeavors, saves a few dollars from the wreck of their fortune and goes into the millinery business.

John sets out to mail a letter addressed to the insurance company. Kate has enclosed in it fifty dollars in bills to pay for a policy on her store. John's intentions are good enough, but McCarthy pulls him inside a saloon. The temptation is too great and he spends the money for liquor. At home that night while in a drunken stupor he throws a burning match on the floor. It sets fire to the curtain and soon the building is in flames. McCarthy arrives in the nick of time and rescues the family. Baby Sue has been seriously burned. Reduced to the poorest circumstances, the Wilsons are now forced to live in cheap apartments in Larry McCarthy's tenement house. Kate earns a miserable existence for them through taking in washing. Finally McCarthy proposes that he come as a boarder, thus eliminating the necessity of Kate's paying rent. John is now growing jealous and suspicious of McCarthy's intentions. Although the rent is already in arrears and Kate believes John's suspicions of McCarthy entirely unwarranted, she nevertheless listens to his wishes and refuses Larry's proposition.

John has found a ray of hope in a newspaper article in which a prominent physician declares that the drink habit may sometimes be cured by a sudden shock. He makes a new resolution to brace up, and on the strength of it Kate allows him to collect a back laundry bill. John again succumbs, however. Left thus without resources to pay the rent, Kate is forced to allow McCarthy to come as a boarder. Realizing his utter worthlessness, John determined to no longer burden Kate with his presence and leaves.

The blow of John's leaving completely breaks Kate's health. The doctor declares that she will never be able to work again. McCarthy has come to her assistance with nurses, medical assistance and other comforts. Just as Kate is improving, the doctor declares that Sue, who is still failing, must be sent to a country sanitarium. McCarthy again comes to the assistance and furnishes the money with which to send the child away. Through his continued kindness, Larry gains Kate's promise that she will divorce John and marry him. After that their intimacy gradually increases, until gossip starts and Kate is snubbed by her former friends. This causes her great anxiety on Sue's account and her great wish becomes urgent that she may secure her divorce in time to marry before the child returns from the sanitarium. Meanwhile Larry has begun to tire of her and resumes his associations with Estelle, who has some time before returned from Chicago.

The decree of divorce is issued the day before Sue is to arrive home, and Kate goes ahead planning an immediate marriage. Larry is thoroughly infatuated with Estelle again and plans to run away with her. To still further deceive Kate and allay any suspicions that might arise, Larry secures a marriage license. He had not the opportunity to previously advise Estelle of this, and when she overhears a reporter's remarks concerning it she jumps at the conclusion that he intends to double-cross her and marry Kate. She hurries to Kate's apartments and a scene ensues. Larry, who is in his room smuggling his grip out through the window, overhears the heated words, and going into the living room, finds Kate confronted by Estelle. He sees that there is no longer a chance of deception and so tells Estelle to go to the depot, where he will meet her.

Larry starts back into his room, but Kate throws herself in front of him, declaring that he must marry her for Sue's sake. He knocks her onto the couch with a blow on the jaw and continues into the room. Kate rises in a daze and follows him. At just this juncture John, now an unkempt bum, enters the room. He registers that he hears something in Larry's room. Shortly after Kate comes out, finds a cop on the street and, leading him into the apartments, motions him into Larry's room. He finds Larry stretched on the floor murdered and John with a pistol in his hand. John is placed under arrest and brought to trial, but refuses to talk.

Fred Moreley, his former assistant in the District Attorney's office, is John's attorney. He believes John innocent. Dr. Mahler has endeavored ineffectually to restore Kate's memory through hypnotism and continues in his efforts during the trial. He is trying for a recurrence of something that happened during the tragedy. The court is, however, unable to wait for her testimony and the jury files out to ballot for a verdict. The vote is "guilty." They return to the court room and the foreman is on the point of delivering the verdict.

Dr. Mahler remembers the bruise that Larry's blow had left on Kate's face. He strikes her on the jaw and through the application of his hypnotic influence succeeds in restoring her memory. Kate rushes into the court room just before the verdict is delivered. She takes the stand and tells her story. When she followed Larry into the room on the night of the murder, her hand fell gropingly onto a revolver which he, in his hurry for departure, had left on his desk. She picked it up in a daze and pulled the trigger. It was she who killed McCarthy; John is released, and in the belief that conviction is impossible the District Attorney places no charge against Kate. There is a reunion of John, Kate and Sue.

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS, INC.

THE YAQUI (In Parts—Bluebird—March 19).—The cast: Tambor (Art Bosworth); Modesta (Golda Caldwell); Lucia (Dorothy Clark); Senor Esteban (Chas. H. Hickman); Teresa (Yona Landowska); Martinez (Jack Curtis); Lieut. Hernandez (Louis A. Valderanna); Senora Esteban (Gretchen Lederer); Flores (Emory Johnson). Produced by Lloyd B. Carleton.

Col. Martinez, commander of the Mexican troops, is in partnership with Flores, a brutal slave holder, who owns large tracts in the Maguay fields of Yucatan. Flores comes to Martinez and enlists his aid to secure peons to labor in the fields. Army headquarters are in the center of the Yaqui Indians' lands and Tambor is one of the leading spirits among the Indian tribesmen.

Col. Hernandez is second in command to Col. Martinez, and both men are in love with Ysobel, daughter of Esteban, a rich land holder. In order to instigate a reason for enslaving the Yaqui Indians, Col. Martinez involves a scheme to insult Tambor's wife.

At the feast of Santa Catalina, the Yaqui assemble in the plaza before the church to hold their ceremonies. In the midst of the revelry, Martinez approaches the wife of Tambor and taking her in his arms attempts to kiss her. This action proves an incentive for trouble, which Martinez anticipated, and as the result of the ensuing trouble, Tambor was sentenced by Martinez to die. The younger and able bodied Yaqui are declared prisoners and are exiled into slavery.

Tambor is supposed to have been executed by a man who expresses such hatred towards him, that he wanted to kill Tambor himself. In reality the bullet which struck the Indian on the forehead, was only meant to stun him. Tambor falls into the open grave and his executioner fills in the dirt.

Late in the evening, the man who had shot Tambor and buried him, returns to dig the Yaqui out of the grave and revives him.

The slaves of Flores are loaded onto cars and sent to Yucatan, but not before Tambor had secreted himself under one of the cars. Upon arriving in Yucatan, Flores entices the wife of Tambor into his home, where in frustrating his assault upon her, stabs herself. Tambor arrives too late to prevent this deed, but gets revenge by drawing the knife from his wife's breast and sinking it into the heart of Flores.

Tambor escapes and eventually reaches his tribesmen in Santa Catalina. The suit for the hand of Ysobel progresses. Ysobel loves Lieut. Hernandez, but her parents urge her marriage to the Colonel.

Lieut. Hernandez is meanwhile becoming sympathetically inclined toward the Revolutionists and means to overthrow the military rule of Martinez, and to this end the Yaquis join in re-

The doctor finds the duplicity of his wife and leaves her; the little orphan is thrown in the street.

The father of the child meets with an untimely end at the hands of his former sweetheart, who herself pays the penalty later.

The doctor searches and finds the Little Orphan and brings her to his home.

WORLD-EQUITABLE.

THE DEVIL'S TOY (Premo Feature Film Corp.—Five Parts—March 6).—The cast: Helen Danver (Adele Blood); The Devil (Edwin Stevens); Wilfred Barsley (Montague Love); Paul La France (Jack Halliday); Betty (Madge Evans); Simon Cunningale (Arnold Lucy). Director, Harley Knoles.

Wilfred Barsley and Paul La France are poor but ambitious artists. Barsley's work is hopelessly mediocre, but in Paul burns the fire of real artistic genius. Paul is in love with Helen Danvers, his chief model. She reciprocates Paul's love. Paul succeeds in selling an occasional painting and is just barely able to keep the wolf from the door.

Barsley can sell none of his paintings. His wealthy uncle, Simon Cunningale, is his sole means of support. In a period of desperation over his failure to produce real work of art, Barsley offers himself in prayer to the Devil, proclaiming his willingness to sell his soul for the three things he most desires—fame, wealth and love.

The Devil appears at Barsley's side and agrees to grant his desires. At the promptings of his evil mentor, Barsley murders his uncle, hiding the body in the old man's secret treasure vault. By Cunningale's will Parsley inherits a great fortune.

Meanwhile Helen Danvers has obtained a start on the operatic stage and has gone on a long tour, leaving her sweetheart, Paul, to struggle along with his paintings. Paul hides his dire poverty from Helen, writing her of the fictitious sale of several paintings. In reality Paul is slowly starving to death in his garret studio. He becomes violently ill.

Barsley visits Paul and finds him delirious. He is prompted by the Devil to steal Paul's paintings and palm them off as his own. He sends Paul to a sanitarium and gives a great exhibition of the stolen paintings, becoming at once hailed as a master artist and thus achieving his second wish. Paul recovers his health in the sanitarium but loses all memory of his past. He remains in the sanitarium, the doctors hoping some day for his complete recovery.

Helen becomes a famous singer, but is saddened by having lost all trace of Paul. She has never met Barsley, but when she does meet him at an exhibition of his supposed paintings she recognizes in them many of the canvasses painted by Paul. She determines to solve the mystery.

To this end Helen practices all her wiles upon Barsley and succeeds in inspiring him with a devouring passion. She lures him on to the wildest extravagance. At last she brings Barsley to the point of complete bankruptcy. Barsley appeals to the Devil, who tells him that he is powerless to grant the third wish, love, which he says is the gift of Heaven alone. When Helen sees that her work is done she turns on Barsley, accusing him of treachery to Paul. Barsley plunges into the depths of dissipation and meets a terrible end at the scene of the murder.

Through her agents Helen at last locates Paul in the sanitarium and visits him. The sight of her restores his memory and brings the story to its happy conclusion.

AS IN A LOOKING GLASS (Five Parts—March 6).—The cast: Mrs. Lila Despard (Kitty Gordon); Andrew Livingston (F. Lumsden Hare); Jack Firtenbras (Frank Goldsmith); Lord Udolpho (Gladden James); Felice (Teddy Sampson); Senator Gales (Charles Eldridge); Mrs. Gales (Mrs. Woodward); Miss Vyse (Lillian Cook); Dromiroff (George Majorim); Rowoll (P. Massi). Director, Frank Crane.

Lila Despard is a fascinating adventuress, who enslaves with her charms every man she meets. Jack, her partner, living on her money, is forced to leave France to escape punishment for a crime and drags with him the unhappy Lila.

On the boat she fascinates Senator Gales, an old aristocrat, and is jealously hated by his little wife. Livingston, of the United States Diplomatic Service, is also very much attracted by her and has need of all of his will-power to remain true to the girl to whom he is engaged. Lila becomes disgusted with Jack's continual begging and one evening, after a scene, she leaves him.

Spies in the employ of a foreign government are anxious to obtain national secrets from Livingston and shadow and attack him, but to no avail. Dromiroff, at the head of them, recognizes in Lila a notorious Monte Carlo woman of years ago; he also recognizes in her a tool by which to obtain Livingston's secrets. To avoid an exposure of her past life, Lila promises to use her charms to extract from Livingston government plans.

By clever scheming she leads Miss Vyse, Livingston's intended, to break their engagement, and the "injured" man, naturally, turns for comfort to Lila. Quickly his feeling for her develops and he asks her to be his wife. Realizing that she truly loves him, and regardless of her promise to Dromiroff, she accepts his proposal.

Jack, completely down and out, reads of Lila's approaching marriage. Furious, he rushes her away from a mask ball and demands that she go with him. She finally manages to get rid of him by promising to get money from one of her lovers and go with him the next day. After tricking Dromiroff with fake papers, presumably government secrets, Lila leaves with Livingston.

After a few ideally happy days of married life, Jack appears and exposes Lida's past life. Livingston refuses to believe it, but Lida realizes that all is over and, remorseful and despairing, drinks poison, leaving a note for Livingston telling of her love for him.

J-M Vitribestos Curtain in Century Theater, New York. 43 ft. wide, 45 ft. high. Supported by steel cables and operated by hydraulic power.

The original ASBESTOS curtain---J-M

J-M Curtains are the original asbestos curtains—made by the largest and oldest manufacturers of asbestos products in this country.

They are made of two different materials—Vitribestos and Asbestos Cloth.

J-M Asbestos Curtains are made of pure Asbestos Cloth spun from the tough fibres of the asbestos rock, with or without brass wire reinforcing. They are absolutely non-inflammable.

J-M Vitribestos Theatre Curtains are built of fireproof Vitribestos Panels and sheet steel mounted in a heavy angle iron frame. A perfect fire wall through which flames cannot break. Bulletin on request.

J-M Asbestos Booths

Made in three types—permanent, semi-portable and portable.

The permanent and semi-portable Booths are made of J-M Transite Asbestos Wood—a mineral wood that is highly fire-resistant and an insulator against electricity and sound. It is fire-proof. It cannot become charged with electricity from live wires, and it muffles the annoying "whirring" of the machine. Complete ventilating systems supplied if desired.

J-M Portable Booths—asbestos cloth over an iron frame. Can be set up in 20 minutes. Write for booklet.

IS YOUR PROJECTOR GIVING SATISFACTORY RESULTS?

If you buy projecting machines of the same make repeatedly, you do it, not because of what the manufacturer says, (Advertising), but because of what you get, (Service).

Clever salesmanship or advertising may have secured the first order, but YOUR PROJECTOR must demonstrate its ability to "deliver the goods" right along before you will buy another of the same make.

Mr. Landen of Belleville, Ill., says he uses 12 MOTIOGRAPHS because they give real service, with practically no upkeep.

Just try a 1916 MODEL MOTIOGRAPH in your booth. Its ability to give results will put you right as to what projector to use.

Special Announcement!

For six years, the Industrial Moving Picture Co., have been industrious—We have been regularly and consistently occupied; busy; diligent—We have "made good" in our chosen field.

We have an enviable, and uniformly successful record of actual moving picture achievement. We have produced and delivered honest film. We have given dependable service.

The formal opening of our new laboratory and studios, which will be announced very soon, signalizes a decided extension of our scope. Our power to serve is manifolded—our facilities immeasurably increased.

Petty people have basked in a reflected importance, and enjoyed some transient business, by the use of names intended to prey upon the prestige we have gained for the word "Industrial."

To safeguard our interests—to protect our customers, we have secured a combination which clearly becomes the hall-mark of perfect developing and printing, and minimizes the power of pretenders to plagiarize and misrepresent.

"The Supreme Sacrifice"

Founded on the novel "To HIM THAT HATH" by Leroy Scott

¶ Affords Robert Warwick a magnificent opportunity to display his brilliant gifts of dramatic power and characterization. ¶ The story concerns itself with the heroic sacrifice of David Aldrich, a young author, (played by Mr. Warwick), who sacrifices himself and endures a bitter term of years in prison to save the hallowed memory of his dearest friend, an East Side clergyman, who in a moment of desperation has embezzled the charity funds placed in his care to satisfy the extortionate demands of a woman with whom he had become entangled years before.

MILLIONS

¶ Means proportionate profit to the exhibitor. The World and Equitable Film Corporations could not afford the immense expenditure involved by starring in great features such notable artists as Clara Kimball Young, Robert Warwick, Alice Brady, Kitty Gordon, George Beban, House Peters, Edwin August, Charles Cherry, Frank Sheridan, Holbrook Blinn, Muriel Ostriche, Carlyle Blackwell, Bruce McRae, Gerda Holmes, and a host of others unless they could be sure of substantial returns on the investment represented.

"Passers By"

By C. Haddon Chambers

¶C. Haddon Chambers, the celebrated author of "Passers-By" has written many successful plays; but none that has attained the international fame accorded to this wonderfully powerful and brilliant piece of literary art. ¶ The story interests with its novelty, thrills with its dramatic climaxes, and impresses with the masterly way in which the author handles the deeper currents of modern life.

INVESTED

¶The only way to make sure of this reasonable profit is to produce photo-plays that are "sure-fire" money-makers, not a "hit or miss" program. It follows therefore, as sure as night trails day, that the prosperity of these two great corporations, is bound up with the exhibitors success. If we are to exist, we must give the exhibitor features that will yield him big business. That's "Horse Sense" isn't it?

Attention, Mr. C. C. Burr
Manager of Trade Advertising

Gentlemen:

Thank you for the information contained in yours of the 22nd. in regard to where I may see the Paramount short subjects.

I shall visit both the Broadway and the Strand at the first opportunity, just to see the Burton Holmes Travelogues and the Pictographs; I shall also look up the Bray cartoons.

My home town is Jersey City, and if I cannot find all your pictures at any of the picture theatres there, I shall act upon your suggestion and make a request for them. As I wrote you before, a program consisting of all the features mentioned in your recent advertisement, would be an ideal moving picture entertainment, and you must accomplish it.

Very truly yours,

T. Vincent McDonald

THE IMMORTAL FLAME

An IVAN FILM Play presenting the celebrated artiste

Maude Fealy

with

PAULA SHAY (The Mary Garden of the Screen) and a Broadway Star Cast in a 5-act screen epic written and directed by Ivan Abramson, "Filmdom's Master Craftsman"

What the critics say of "The Immortal Flame"

Lynde Denig in THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD—" 'The Immortal Flame,' in common with other pictures made by Mr. Abramson, possesses an emotional force and a sensational quality always effective with devotees of melodrama. . . . Profiting by a long screen experience, Miss Fealy acts every scene for all it is worth, and the last reel gives an astounding exhibition of physical daring."

Oscar Cooper in "Motion Picture News"—"We think Mr. Abramson deserves a good deal of credit for working out his story to its logical conclusion. . . . This has not a little to do with the final 'strong' effect of the picture. . . . We should say that Mr. Abramson's work and Miss Fealy's acting contribute about equally to the value of the picture."

George W. Graves in "Motography"—"The story is interesting and the settings and photography are good. Miss Fealy's acting is a prominent feature of the picture and it shows earnest and effective effort."

Released in March through the most thorough distributing system extant.

The REGULAR VITAGRAPH PROGRAM is not produced for all exhibitors.

It is produced for those who discriminate—for exhibitors who are good spenders and shrewd buyers.

These buyers demand much and much is given them.

The VITAGRAPH PROGRAM is backed by the brains and experience of twenty years of successful picture making.

Many producing companies spend more money for publicity than does the Vitagraph. Many of them spend more money for sensational advertising.

Vitagraph money goes into the improving of the VITAGRAPH PRODUCT—which for twenty years has led the world.

The REGULAR VITAGRAPH PROGRAM is uniformly superlative.

It is the box office payee.

It has kept its faith.

"Consistency=== Thou Art a Jewel===" sayeth an aged proverb—a sentimental bit of truth of doubtful origin—

Possibly Socrates, in his prison cell, with the memory of applauding crowds and a life well spent in the public weal, gave birth to the thought as he poised the fatal draught of hemlock—

But we think it antedates Socrates and goes straight back to the first cave man who hammered it in letters a mile high on the first mountain-side with the first crude tools of man. It's as old as mother earth herself.

"CONSISTENCY" is the most significant word in filmdom.

That's why we seized it for our slogan, years ago, and nailed it firmly to our masthead.

Toward the production of consistently good pictures we have ever turned our energy and resources.

Our history proves it.

Kleine pictures are consistently good—always!

The EDISON Way

Edison photoplays exploit players of international reputation and popularity. Edison minor players are carefully selected as to type.

Edison stories are clean and inoffensive, but also highly dramatic. The settings are carefully planned and executed with a degree of finish that is not excelled.

In photography Edison products are unsurpassed. Positive prints are made along scientific lines while tinting and toning processes are among the contributions of a great inventor to the world's progress.

Those responsible for the artistic destinies of Edison photoplays endeavor not only to build the big things in a big way, but to fashion the smallest details with the same careful thought.

RESERVE SEATS MONTHS IN ADVANCE FOR BIG FOUR PRODUCTIONS

BUSINESS is like friendship—sensitive. It goes only where invited—stays only where well treated.

Below is a letter from Joseph Heim, Proprietor of the Luna Theatre, Danville, Pa., which explains, in part, why one exhibitor is giving his business to V-L-S-E. Read it, and then read what the Big Four service is accomplishing for Mr. Heim:

Luna Theatre,
JOS. HEIM, Prop.,
Danville, Pa.,

V. L. S. E. Inc.,
New York City.

Gentlemen:

I have used in the past few months seventeen or eighteen of your photoplays, and wish to congratulate you on the quality of same.

I have turned patrons away with nearly every show, and being so well pleased, wish to acknowledge to you my appreciation and good wishes.

My policy is that nothing but the best is good enough for my patrons.

The treatment accorded me by your Philadelphia office, is excellent and fair. Your service in every particular is the best I have had in all my fours years experience in this business.

Yours very truly,

Jos Heim

Not only Mr. Heim's satisfaction with V-L-S-E productions, but that of his patrons prompted the above letter.

Mr. Heim can tell you now what his receipts will be on Tuesdays for months to come.

They have set the seal of approval upon these pictures to the extent that every seat in the Luna Theatre has been reserved for afternoon and evening performances on every Tuesday, when Big Four features are shown, for the rest of the season.

In other words, by reason of the superior drawing powers of V-L-S-E pictures,

Just one illustration of the V-L-S-E's treatment of business, and why, notwithstanding this company's liberal open-booking policy, it probably has fewer cancellations than were ever before known in the film industry.

If you seek to surround your theatre with the safeguards enjoyed by Mr. Heim, the list of branch offices on the last page of this advertisement, provides the means for you to gain such security.

Gentlemen:

On Saturday February 5th we had our first Anniversary at the Sorg. We tried an experiment, which we think is the acid test of merit. We had booked "THOU SHALT NOT COVET", after seeing the picture, and wanted to see how much confidence our patrons had in the V. L. S. E. Program. We did nothing in the way of advertising except run two slides. As you know, this is not our regular method of presenting your productions, but we wanted to see just what influence the name V. L. S. E. had with the public.

WE DID A CAPACITY BUSINESS ALL DAY.

The reason is we have always made V. L. S. E. our magnet, not any certain production or producer but the program as a whole. We will certainly bring "THOU SHALT NOT COVET" back at the first opportunity, as it was one of the most pleasing pictures we have ever shown. The acting of Kathlyn Williams and Tyrone Power is beyond criticism.

Our big house is one block from the main street. We get ten cents straight at all times, while our competitors, with a better location, are showing the so-called "$2.00 pictures" for five cents. We are doing the business of the town, and cannot tell you how glad we are for having secured the V. L. S. E. program. The other service is no competition whatever to us, and we shall continue, as we have in the past, featuring V. L. S. E., feeling sure that you will give us the very finest productions obtainable.

Thanking you for your courteous treatment, and again assuring you that I am an enthusiastic V. L. S. E. "booster", I am,

Very sincerely yours,

Sorg and Rex Theatres,

C. E. McCune

We have had the greatest attendance in our history and, best of all every one who saw Ruth Roland in the introductory picture of this wonderful story of heredity, romance and humanity was tremendously pleased. Facts and Comments

WE DEPLORE the holding of two expositions of the moving picture art within one week of each other. Of course nobody questions the legal right of either the Board of Trade or the Exhibitors' League to hold as many expositions as they please and whenever they please. To get the best results for the industry, however, one big exposition will serve the best interests and add most to the prestige. The Exhibitors' League has heretofore held its exposition either in June or in July and to move it to within one week of the Board of Trade date seems like sharp practice. It is sure that the two expositions cannot be successful and it may be now that neither of them will come up to expectations. It would benefit the industry to have one united exposition in which all branches are interested and for the success of which every man in the industry could work with enthusiasm. It goes without saying that co-operation cannot be expected where methods such as the arrangement of dates above referred to is followed.

A CONSERVATIVE and very successful exhibitor in a college town of the Middle West complains with much earnestness of the surfeit of sex-problems on the screen. Laboring under a wholesome and entirely justifiable sense of indignation he says that he is "in favor of a nationally controlled censorship if it will do away just a little with the sex-problem." Alas, how true is his complaint and how utterly wrong is his proposed remedy. Censorship has been tried in the ancient and in the modern age of civilization and has been found woefully wanting. This is the hurdle which no advocate of censorship is able to jump over: "Who is going to censor the censors?" Their decrees cannot rise above their source, which is human nature with all its failings, its imperfections and, as Mr. Hodkinson so aptly puts it, with all its "variable standards." How easy to frame an indictment against the abuses of the press which indeed are neither few nor small. We freely admit these abuses, but we bestow freedom on the press because of its usefulness in disseminating knowledge and discussing public affairs and criticising men in public office. Even thus it is with the freedom of the screen. There are and, we fear, there always will be, abuses of the screen at least while human nature remains what it is. We cannot entirely abolish these evils, but must be satisfied with minimizing them. Legislation can prevent men from stealing, but it cannot make them honest.

HEREAFTER snakes, bugs and spiders will not be allowed to appear on any screen in the City of Portland, Ore., unless due notice of their coming is given in a proper sub-title, the latter acting as a sort of noiseless rattle. If you do not want to see the crawling things watch the subtitles and close your eyes. How can we tell when the wriggling is over? Mrs. Local Censor will arrange for that. She says just tell your neighbor to nudge you in the ribs. Portland is running into a labyrinth of complications.

TIMELY indeed is the plea made for quality irrespective of length. There is, we trust, just enough of the element of art in the motion picture to make quality triumph over length. The striving after length has resulted in "padding," which is unquestionably one of the real handicaps to the exhibitor. There is no doubt at all that the short length has been neglected both by producer and exhibitor. In too many cases it was unfortunately true that the short film was a poor film. The inverse of the proposition that a long film was bound to be a good one has proven an awful delusion as pretty nearly all our readers must know from painful personal experience. We certainly do not believe that the multiple reel has run its course; on the contrary we believe that its possibilities are inexhaustible like the moves in a chess game. We are, however, thoroughly convinced that a return to high quality in short lengths will be a distinct benefit not merely to any particular group of producers, but to the industry as a whole. The high-quality short reels are the very roots of the screen's popularity.

Gordian Knots*

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

GORDIUS came driving his team of oxen into the Phrygian public square and, in view of the fact that the people needed a leader, dedicated his wagon and yoke of oxen to Zeus, tying them to the temple so that the ends of the knot could not be seen. Inasmuch as no one could untie the knot, Gordius was made King of Phrygia, thereby showing a better reason for leadership than many rulers of the present day could offer. But along came Alexander and cut the sacred knot with his sword, just as some of our photoplaywrights are doing in an attempt to force themselves Alexander-like upon the public.

It requires but little ingenuity to so entangle the characters of a crime story that no swift and clever untangling can be made—the whole art is to devise a puzzle which can be reasonably solved at the crisis, yet which has all the appearance of hopeless complication if the guilty keep silence. The easy and customary way out is for the real criminal to experience a change of heart. "I can not see the innocent suffer. I am sorry to say that I did it."

A change of heart is quite human. It is an every-day occurrence among many millions of the unwise, and it may easily be an act of wisdom to change one's course rather than perpetuate a struggle against hopeless environment, but no small degree of skill is demanded to make its application to a story situation entirely satisfactory to an audience. To render it plausible, not jarring to common sense, it should be brought about through a shifting of motion, or through the introduction of some entirely new and powerful influence.

A change of mind, or a change of heart, in one of the leading characters must be closely preceded by a recognizable good reason for the change. To bring it about with scant portrayal of motive is often to arrest one line of action and take up another in a purely arbitrary and Alexandrian way, certainly not a convincing way for people of common intelligence, never an expert way of meeting a difficulty. A story may be otherwise satisfactory and utterly fail from lack of attention to the why and wherefore of a transformation of purpose on the part of an important character.

There is always risk of destroying interest by bringing into a story something which does not spring from the essence of its subject, especially after the characters have been well established. While anything extrinsic may be added to give the story new force, the selection of that addition is of much higher importance than may at first sight appear. Such matter, called "adventitious," is often among the first to be eliminated by an author who carefully revises his work. It is apt to divert attention from the main line of action.

Conversion was recently handled with great skill in a short story. A comparatively young professional man is about to marry a woman he detests because her wealth will enable him to carry out the ambition of his lifetime, when he becomes acquainted with a sporty young lady at a summer resort without the formality of an introduction. He becomes fascinated by the sporty girl and starts in for a last good time while he is yet free to do so. He assumes that she is well "protected" from the elegance of her attire and from the fact that she has a motor car of her own. He plunges with the little money he has left and entertains her with reckless prodigality.

He unbosoms like a weakling, bragging of his family and social connections, even betraying a measure of condescension in telling the sporty girl that he loves her and would like to marry her. His character is carefully painted as so conceited as to be highly amusing because he takes himself seriously, and we are glad to discover that he is mistaken about the sporty girl. She is really an adventurous young lady of wealth intent on amusing herself for a few days while awaiting the advent of her father. We feel that there is something coming to the egoist but it is not what we expect.

At the last moment the young man's habit of self revelation brings to light new matter. In spite of his many weaknesses, he has struggled through college and has drudged during his best years to accomplish a really laudable ambition. A sudden change takes place in the girl's heart. She accepts his proposal of marriage, delighted that he has loved her while thinking her poor and not altogether worthy, and she staggers her suitor by announcing her great wealth. The sudden and surprising change of sentiment is so clevely handled that it provides an unexpected termination without shocking credulity.

The complication grows more interesting as it progresses, and it comes in the nature of gay surprise that the entanglement is not slashed in the commonplace, the Alexandrian, way, but it is all in the handling. The Gordian knot was united with rare skill. The girl's deep pity and her fine recognition that the man who unselfishly loved her needed only such support as she could give rendered plausible a conversion otherwise beyond the bounds of common sense.

The regular way of tying one of the characters up in a financial knot is to have him speculate in a stock which the villain controls. It is an Alexandrian way to have either virtue or vice triumph by any such means. That an unimportant individual should control the stock market is on a par with that control of public opinion which a reporter-hero obtains through his newspaper articles. None of us is so much superior to the rest of us that he can ordinarily exert such power, a power too rare to be a demonstratable probability in a play.

It is in closer relation to logic for the man who is to suffer a reversal of fortune to be the leading factor in such reversal, a simple enough matter when one realizes how many lines of business are successfully conducted during long periods on a slender margin of reserve. A business man's bank relations often constitute the sword ever hanging over his head, or a Gordian entanglement may quite logically result from a crisis preventing the collection of accounts to meet outstanding obligations. A swift presentation of his affairs at the outset permits a sudden change in his fortunes without straining credulity and even a solution of his difficulties with a happy ending.

If a knot of great difficulty is to be tied, why not state a set of circumstances from which a financial entanglement might reasonably be made. The effect need not be less entertaining that it is a probable sequence of events in real life. There are logical routes into any manner of complication and entirely believable ways out again without resort to Alexandrian methods, well within the realms of what is real and convincing to human nature in general.

Now or Never

By W. Stephen Bush.

NEVER before in the history of the world have there been such opportunities for gaining the lion's share of the South American film market. Without undue pride or boasting we may claim that the American producer has invaded Europe with astonishing success. I found the American film in all my travels in Europe, in the little towns no less than in the big centers of population. It is surely a cause for wonder that the South American market has so far been neglected. No film man has ever returned from a trip of observation through Latin-America without recording his conviction that American films will "go big" in the sister republics to the south of us. I have sat time and again in our Broadway motion picture theaters with natives of Latin-America and they were outspoken in their belief that at least fifty per cent. of American-made films will be acceptable to South American audiences. Recently we have pointed out in these columns how American producers by catering to the special wants of Latin-America can easily gain a lead over all competitors. The rich treasure houses of Spanish and Portuguese literature are virgin territory from the filmer's point of view. There are plenty of materials in the fertile soil of that literature which will make good film plays for all mankind without regard to nationality. A good library, a good Spanish or Portuguese scholar, an intelligent native of Latin-America, a little power of selection and the work may begin at once. No European producer has ever attempted to specialize along these lines. Latin-America will appreciate our sympathetic study of its peculiar tastes and needs.

We ought to remember, too, that never before have the South American countries been more prosperous and never before have they had more purchasing power. Never before have they been cut off from their wonted European supply. Now or never is the time for the American producer who wants to garner the profits which this market promises.

Last but surely not least there is the great medium of communication between the film men of the two continents, Cine-Mundial, the Spanish edition of The Moving Picture World. No smoother channel has ever invited the navigator into new seas to conquer. No better pilot could be had at any price. The same spirit of service which characterizes all the efforts of The Moving Picture World animates Cine-Mundial.

Progress of the Organized Exhibitor

By W. Stephen Bush.

ALMOST significant feature of motion picture development is a revival of the spirit of organization among the exhibitors of the country. The feeling among exhibitors that they must get together is in evidence in every state.

It has been slow and laborious work to bring the exhibitors together. Indifference, the insistent daily demands of the management of the theater, previous efforts that have resulted in failure—all these elements handicap the organizer's work. There is a sentiment that the exhibitor has certain just grievances and that for the redress of these grievances no less than for strong constructive work it is necessary for him to organize. He is too apt, however, to forget. The moment the pressure stops he puts off guarding against a recurrence of the evil.

The Moving Picture World has been the consistent supporter of the exhibitor in his efforts to organize. That's why we take the liberty of telling him that he owes it to himself and to the industry at large to overcome his indifference and to take his duty toward the organization very seriously. If in some respects the work of organizations is still crude and inarticulate, there is no reason to be discouraged. The past history of the motion picture gave but scant encouragement to initiative and enterprise on the part of the exhibitor. He is just beginning to find himself and to discover the importance of his place in the councils of the industry. It is easy to scold him, to show impatience with him, but it is much more to the purpose to help him and give him credit for what he has accomplished.

The plan of establishing a National Bureau of Information, Advice and Assistance exclusively for the benefit of the exhibitor has received the hearty indorsement of the state convention which has just ended its sessions at Albany. There is no doubt that such a bureau will be indorsed with equal enthusiasm at the National Convention to be held in Chicago, July 11th to 15th.

The Wrath of the Censor

By W. Stephen Bush.

THAT censor boards maintained by the state are bitterly and personally hostile to the screen as such is once more demonstrated by the remarkable document which J. Louis Breitinger, the great Torquemada of Pennsylvania, has sent to Harrisburg, asking for more power.

We earnestly recommend the perusal of this strange official effusion to all who may have any lingering doubts as to either the danger or the perfect idiocy of any system of censorship. At its best or if you please at its worst the Board ought to be nothing more than an agency of repression. Breitinger and his Catonian Sages, however, are now going much further. They actually assume to dictate to the producer before he begins to think about a scenario. They scold the public for attending the motion picture theaters in spite of the Board's frantic efforts to destroy the industry. They resent the attempt to convey any moral lesson via the screen, saying that this task belongs exclusively to church and school. Incredible as it may sound they even deny that the motion picture has any educational value.

Such is the inexorable logic of Fate. Once depart from the dictates of common sense and turn your back upon the lessons of the past and there is no telling when and where the road to folly will end. I do not believe that the Grand Inquisitors will get more power from the state. The people of Pennsylvania are Americans and they cannot help laughing at the censors. The last legislature took the sting out of censorship by allowing an appeal from the Breitinger-Overholtzer combination. In due time several severe shocks were administered to the combination by the Courts of Common Pleas in Philadelphia and elsewhere. If the censors were not delightfully impervious to ridicule and wholly insensible to the lashes of irony the lecture read to them recently by Justice Barratt would have burned up their conceit like fire consumes straw.

In their attempt to fathom and regulate the psychology of the screen the "dread" inquisitors have invited attention to their own psychological conditions. If this attention is unwelcome it surely is nobody's fault but theirs.

We learn that just like its prototype the Grand Inquisition of Spain the Pennsylvania imitation has surrounded itself with a host of "Familiars," secret agents provided with tin badges and "beating" their way into motion pictures hunting petty violations of the law. We are told that these pests are becoming unbearable in spite of the fact that by virtue of a recent judicial decision they may now be safely chased out of the operator's booth.

Editor Brisbane Talks Bluntly

Enlivens Trade Board Dinner to Newspaper Men by Statements That Arouse Other Speakers.

THE dinner given on Sunday, March 12, to the cartoonists and "colyumists" of New York newspapers by the publication committee of the Motion Picture Board of Trade was marked by an interest not exactly anticipated by its promoters. Arthur Brisbane, editor of the Evening Journal, was the first speaker to address the 125 diners gathered in College Hall, Hotel Astor. Mr. Brisbane surprised his hearers at the beginning by stating that of the motion picture business he knew very little. He was speaking extemporaneously except from such notes as he had made during the opening remarks by Arthur James, the chairman of the committee and the toastmaster of the evening, and the introduction by J. W. Binder, the executive secretary of the board. The surprise occasioned by the opening remark was quickly transformed to amazement when Mr. Brisbane said the moving picture, so far as it is merely a melodrama or a story, is only a moneymaking proposition, and whether censored or not he did not in the least care.

"But the censorship of the moving picture will become an established fact," the speaker continued, "and it may in the future be a very serious matter because at the present time the moving picture is an amusement; and its success is based upon the stupidity and lack of intellectual development of the human race." Mr. Brisbane said a lot more, all of which emphasized his lack of information about the motion picture as it is today and part of which seemed to indicate that his immediate neighbors at the table were unable to point out to him some of the great accomplishments of the picture manufacturers.

Several of the following speakers paid their respects to the editor's views of the motion picture—Mr. Brisbane had departed immediately at the close of his speech to catch a train and therefore the subsequent proceedings lost some of the tensity that otherwise would have prevailed. J. Robert Rubin, counsel of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, who followed Mr. Brisbane, made one of the most effective speeches of the evening. William M. Seabury, counsel of the board; Herbert S. Houston, president of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, and Commodore J. Stuart Blackton were the other speakers.

"The Fifth Estate, the motion picture, reaches out to its older brother, the Fourth Estate, and asks co-operation in resisting the destroyer of art, the foe of progress, the common enemy, the censor," said Mr. James, in opening. "The spoken, the written, the drawn, the sculptured, the painted, the acted word, alike in their common purpose, the expression of thought, cry out against the oppression of those who seek to make all men conform to the narrow confines of their bigotry, their undevelopment, their prejudices and cant. To yield at all to censorship is to put our mental, our artistic, our very moral liberty into the keeping of others. Our physical freedom was worth dying for a century ago. Surely our greater freedom of thought and its expression is worth fighting for today.

"Censorship is without the shadow of a defense among a civilized and an enlightened people. We readily concede, or I might better say, we proclaim that morals on the screen differ not at all from morals of the spoken drama, of the newspaper and of the pulpit. We believe with all other men who have a thought for the uprightness of the community in which they live, that there are proper rules governing public exhibitions and amusements and to such proper regulation we cordially subscribe.

"But censorship, whether it be the censorship of the daily newspaper, or of the pulpit, or of the motion picture, we solemly, earnestly, indignantly resent because we know of no man or group of men great enough, godlike enough, to take our art and enslave it and make it do their bidding."

Speech of Mr. Brisbane.

The remarks of Mr. Brisbane were in part as follows:

I am one of the few living men who has never seen Mary Pickford, or Charles Chaplin, or Theda Bara, or Miss Clark—I believe she comes in there. All I have seen is the Durbar and Scott's north pole pictures and "Carmen," which I couldn't escape, because it was given in Mr. Hearst's house and I happened to be a guest there. (Laughter.) I have great respect for the men who are developing the financial value and the real genius of those people, but I don't think that I should be bothered about it. Now, as to the censorship, I do not think I can become very much excited about it. There will be no censorship without the consent of a majority of the people of the United States, and I do not think they will consent to any very extensive or universal censorship. The moving picture, so far as it is merely a melodrama, a story, a tragedy, or a joke, a comedy, is only a moneymaking proposition, and whether it is censored or not I don't in the least care.

The censorship of the moving picture will become an established fact, and it may in the future be a very serious matter because at the present time the moving picture, all it amounts to today, at least the modern moving picture, is that it is an amusement, and its success is based upon the stupidity and lack of intellectual development of the human race. The success of the moving picture is due to this, gentlemen: We are a race of animals. We have been standing on our hind legs only five hundred thousand years. We have been using speech about one hundred thousand years. We have been using the written word, as a race, only fifty years. I can remember myself less than fifty years ago, when I was a boy, I used to sit and read to a dozen people on my father's farm, because not one of them could read. To educate mem, in a word, and to get them to make their own moving picture, is extremely difficult. It takes a high order of intelligence to take a sufficient number of lines, and pictures, and manufacture them into a film.

Now, to go back, we have stood on our hind legs for five hundred thousand years, and we have been able to read, as a race, for fifty years, but we have used our eyes for at least twenty millions of years on this planet. The lobster has an eye on the end of a stick, and he may have been your great great-grandfather many times removed, and he was looking for a moving picture or something he could grab with his claw and eat, or something that would grab him and eat him. You know the lobster, of course, grabs the jelly fish, and the jelly fish gets the lobsters, all by the use of their eyes. With the moving picture now you get all your impressions by the use of your own eye; we select our husbands and our wives by our eyes, and everything is done by the eye, which is the greatest of all human factors. And this has been done for twenty millions of years with absolute ease.

One of the big factors in politics, if it were used, and I believe it is going to be, would be the moving picture. I believe that in the next campaign the man that studies this and uses genius to get at the facts will find it a very large factor in the result. For instance, if they take what I believe you call a "close up" picture of some of the things which may happen, you will do something worth while. (Applause.) For instance, a picture at Delmonico's, a table with Tammany politicians, and just a close up of Mr. Murphy's fork with peas on the end of it, which he is trying to balance; a picture of the city deposits being given to Interborough lawyers and directors, and the inside of No. 26 Broadway—which is the Standard Oil Headquarters. I really believe, and this is not in any sense a joke, that if you would, and I would advise you to do it, as I did advise a man in the last campaign, to take pictures of some of the people who are high in authority in the city, for instance, a picture of the Mayor of the city going home in his automobile—which you pay for—and then a picture of yourself, or your daughter hanging on to a strap, and say, naturally, that these people are with the Interborough, because they don't ride in the subway. If you put those pictures out the people will look at them and see them and believe them.

Those are pictures which I would not like to see censored—I think the censorship of ordinary things is not a menace. The things that need censorship are not the ordinary things. You don't need to do things out of the ordinary in order to make your business succeed, or to gain popularity. I have been an editor of newspapers in this city for twenty-eight years. I began with the Evening Sun twenty-eight years ago, and ever since then I have been with that and other papers, the Sunday World and the Evening World and the Journal, and all my experience has been that nothing is gained by making any concession to indecency.

I made a memorandum here on my card that you could make more money out of a Childs Restaurant than you could out of the old Haymarket. The only thing is that it takes a certain amount of ability and persistence to make money out of a Childs Restaurant, but it doesn't take very much to hire a woman to degrade herself and give an indecent exhibition.

Now, one of the things that you want to establish is standards. Establish something, so that it will become and be a standard for your business. One of the great purposes, I believe, to which the moving picture can be put is that of education, educational films. Today the newspaper is a regular bill of fare, such as you have tonight,—not a mess of olives, or soup, or bread, but it is a little of everything. Now, the moving picture will become that in the future. You will have your theatres where there will be a limited bill of fare,—pictures of the day's news, the things that are worth while, rapidly done; where you will have the story, whatever it may be, of love or mystery, and where you will have a certain amount of education, and things of that sort, and I wish that some of you would concentrate on the problem of making educational films where a man like Arliss can impersonate Disraeli, and, I believe, Lincoln.

I believe when you make films of that sort, for instance, of Abraham Lincoln, it will be good fifty years from now, if taken as of that period when Lincoln lived, because dresses do not change, as you know; the facts don't change, the patriotism doesn't change, and thus you will have a picture of Lincoln when he was a boy. You will see him there, with his knife and his shavings, and you will have a picture of his haphazard, worthless sort of a father and his gigantic mother, Nancy Hanks. And so, as with him, you can have it of others in the same way, and they will be educational and will live and be useful for many, many years and can be used many, many millions of times. You could do this with Washington, just as you could with fifty or sixty others worth while; and exhibit them in different parts of the country, and use them year after year.

You want to make your moving picture industry a great big industry, with great big standards, not merely a message of amusement for the public, but something which will settle down into a regular business like Marshall Field's. In literature, any one can name a certain number of master works, ones which every one knows, and which can be readily picked out. Now, among the millions of pictures that you have today, I do not think that you can find any one who can do that. That should be one of the main purposes of the moving picture field, and you should include it among some of the things that I have suggested. Tonight I asked some of the people here if they could name me six of the greatest, the six greatest, most successful, moving pictures in your industry. Now, you can mention fifty or sixty or a hundred books, but they gave me "The Birth of a Nation," and "Carmen," and "The Battle Cry of Peace," and then they couldn't agree on the rest. I turned to them and said: "Gentlemen, you spend many millions of dollars a year on your pictures, and yet, although you should be able to, you cannot state whether there are six or twelve or sixty great pictures that you have, and that is because you have not gone far yet; you are absolutely at the beginning of your business."

It is a great business, of course, with great big forces moving it, but its great work is for the future. Why, every school in the world will soon be teaching by the moving picture. Astronomy can be taught by the moving picture, so that the child can see and understand it at five years of age. We know about astronomy, because we studied it years ago, when we were young, but astronomy cannot be taught in the old way until the students are twenty or eighteen years of age. Now, you can do these things in the school, and you can educate the children and teach them astronomy, and they will learn it, and they will like it, and will learn it because they like it.

The moving picture will make intellectual digestion absolutely perfect. It will be a real education, presented in a real way, and in an attractive way which everybody, not only the school children, will recognize and appreciate. And, going back for a moment to the use of the moving picture as a political asset, if both sides in a great campaign will use the moving pictures, not only of a man at the beginning of the day, but a picture of where he goes next, and what he does, and the condition which he is in at the end of the day, you will have a great political education for the people. If you will do this, and pursue this policy of watching, not only will you tell the people what is happening daily, but the moving picture will carry the election and editors will be "has beens." (Applause.)

Mr. Rubin, in opening expressed his surprise at some of the statements uttered by Mr. Brisbane. He regretted that a man possessed of such great power had not given more time to investigating the picture, to seeking out the better subjects. "Too many persons neglect the motion picture," said Mr. Rubin at one point. Mr. Rubin spoke in part as follows:

No industry of which I have knowledge has a history so filled with romance as has the motion picture industry. It is awe-inspiring when one realizes what happens—how men become millionaires over night; how players though devoid of skill become popular idols, drawing salaries in excess of that of kings and potentates. However, the artistic side of the motion picture has kept full pace with the material side. The motion picture performance is no longer the exhibition of a few reels of claptrap melodrama.

Through the motion picture, the world is wiser, humanity broader, the people happier. It is the greatest boon to civilization since the advent of the telephone. It entertains, informs and instructs. It is a veritable schoolhouse in itself.

Look at its other side. It carries with it an investment of over $500,000,000. It is said that 2,900,000,000 persons attended the motion pictures last year. Think of it, nearly 3,000,000,000 people interested enough in the motion pictures to attend. Can it be doubted then that this art or industry reflects the ideals of the great mass of people. And surely, if it speaks to and for the people, it must tell the story of life, and if it tells the story of life it must be free to speak truthfully, to reflect life as it is, as does the drama and the press. It cannot be doubted but that the same ideal underlies them all, and the law should present the same attitude to them all.

But while the press and the drama find themselves guarded by the great walls of the constitution of the state, the newer art, this infant industry finds itself facing strangulation by an almost forgotten paternalistic institution called the censor, for there is now pending in this state and before the Congress of the United States and before the Legislatures of eleven different states censorship bills, requiring that each film to be released be submitted to a Board of Censors, who shall state whether or not the picture shall be exhibited to the public.

I fear the public has not been interested in the censorship problem. Unfortunately, the public is accustomed to be unmoved. It leaves the great fights of life to be waged by those with a pecuniary interest, forgetting that in these battles their rights are involved, and that their rights are being litigated, and they have failed to make themselves parties to the litigation. I fear the people do not realize what censorship means, from what it comes and where it leads. When I stop to reflect on the history of censorship, I am horrified. As I know it, the censor is an ancient institution like the rack and the whipping post, born in the house of autocracy, the offspring of bigotry and intolerance and the servient tool of tyranny and despotism. It was an institution that played havoc with your journalistic and literary craft and your memory should not be so short but that you know of its consequences.

Press censorship was the rule in Europe, but when the onward rush of civilization and democracy came and drove tyranny and despotism from their trenches it drove out censorship. Even then it was not the people who led. It was the great authors, such as John Milton, who desired above all "the liberty to know, to utter and to argue freely according to his conscience," but when once the people were aroused to the full consequence of censorship, they rushed madly to the aid of the great authors and the great thinkers of the time.

This attitude was first shown in England in the seventeenth century, when they drove the press censorship from the statute books; then in Holland, and then by the revolution of 1848 from Central European countries, and until by the revolution of 1909 even Russia abolished the pre-publicity censorship, so that today every civilized country in the world is free from the pre-publicity censorship, though in Russia the author may still find if he criticise too severely the ruling powers that his work may be suppressed, but even there it is not necessary to secure permission to publish. Prior to the war, the last relic of censorship in Europe was the dramatic censorship of England. But the dramatic censor of England since 1901 has not had the power that is given to the Board of Censors under the law proposed in this state. There, while the dramatist could submit his manuscript to the censors for their approval, it was not necessary, but could always publish it, chancing the attitude of the local officials, which, in fact, is similar to the situation now in vogue in this country. It is, therefore, astounding to find that in republican America, in democratic New York, in the twentieth century a bill requiring great entertaining, informative and instructive productions to receive the consent of three individuals before the public is permitted an opportunity to see them. To one whose mind is filled with thoughts of liberty of utterance and conscience, the idea is abhorrent; it is opposed to the spirit of democracy that has so long prevaded this country; it is opposed to the spirit of the constitution of the Empire State and it is unnecessary and impracticable.

Under the guise of morality, religious bigotry may be rampant. If the censor may forbid a picture because it treats a religious subject in a manner distasteful to him, he may next forbid the treatment of any subject that does not meet with his religious views, and then we will have a religious board, the board thrown in the malestrom of politics and religion, with the politicians fighting vigorously for the political patronage of the censorship office. This is not fanciful, gentlemen; it has been done. In various states where the censorship has been in vogue one picture or another has been tampered with because a religious subject was not treated in the manner or according to the viewpoint desired by the censor.

There must be a union of you men of might with these people of power. There must be an alliance of the art, of the motion picture and the profession of the journalist. There must be an offensive and defensive wedlock, and let tonight be a call to arms to all interested in the freedom of thought to fight the common enemy—gag rule.

Mr. Seabury said the two chief questions of interest to the industry at this time are: What are we going to do about censorship, and how are we going to do it?

As a preface to these inquiries, he commented upon the existence of censorship in Kansas, Ohio and Pennsylvania and the present status of various censorship bills throughout the country. He pointed out that there are approximately four separate censorship bills pending before the Committee of Congress. Two such bills are pending before the Legislature of New Jersey, one pending in New York, one in Maryland, and one in Kentucky, and he indicated that during this year only about eleven State Legislatures had been in session, while next year approximately thirty State Legislatures would convene, and it might reasonably be expected that there would be a corresponding number of censorship bills in these states. He said that the only effective and practical method of opposing censorship was by educating the public and informing them as to the vicious principles upon which censorship is based.

Mr. Seabury commended to the attention of the newspaper men the article, "If Shakespeare Fell Among the Censors," by W. Stephen Bush, and also a recent magazine article by Channing Pollock.

Mr. Blackton quoted De Wolf Hopper as remarking that there are two classes of men who are privileged to use the expression "we"—editors and men with a tapeworm. He expressed the fear that Mr. Brisbane had been speaking in a dual capacity. He called attention to the fact that a film portraying the life of Washington had been issued as far back as 1905; that all of the plays of Shakespeare had been transferred to the screen; and he said that Abraham Lincoln had been shown on the screen in dozens of instances.

At the end of the speaking several films were shown. Among these were, for entertainment, "Fatty and the Broadway Stars" (Keystone) and "Goodness Gracious" (Vitagraph). Then there were several subjects showing cutouts by manufacturers and by censors. It was after 1 o'clock when the party broke up.

Assisting Mr. James in the arrangements for the dinner were Paul Gulick, vice-chairman, and T. M. Alexander, secretary of the publication committee.

Among those present other than the men already named were:

Charles Urban, of London, inventor of the Kinemacolor picture; E. Gluecksmann, Buenos Aires; E. A. MacManus, Hy Mayer, Franklin P. Adams, Winsor McCay, F. M. Follett, Fontaine Fox, Rollin Kirby, F. Brenton Takes Issue With Brisbane.

Cranston Brenton, chairman of the National Board of Censorship, was one of those who heard Mr. Brisbane's address at the Trade Board dinner. In a statement he issued on Tuesday Mr. Brenton said:

Arthur Brisbane is always so well informed it is surprising that, at a gathering called together in opposition to the legalized censoring of motion pictures, he should have charged the producers who had invited him as their guest of honor with an absence of intelligence in every phase of their business except that of making money, should have attributed even their financial success to the "stupidity and lack of intellectual development of the human race," and should have emphasized his utter indifference to the whole question of the legalized censoring of their films.

After proclaming complete ignorance of motion pictures as a whole, he proceeded, in a long and brilliant speech, to demonstrate the truth of this assertion. He has seen but three motion pictures—one of these under protest—yet he advised the industry to develop their films along lines that have already been brought to such approximate perfection that little is left to be done even if his most extreme recommendations should be rigorously followed. Such questions should, however, be left to others to answer, and I shall confine myself to the one matter for which he showed his contempt—that of legalized censorship.

It is my privilege to represent the National Board of Censorship of Motion Pictures as its chairman. The National Board came into being some seven years ago at the request of the Motion Picture Exhibitors who suggested, by the way, our present name, to act as a court of review and advice before their films are shown to the general public. It views and passes on virtually every film produced in the United States. The 225 members who make up the National Board of Censorship all serve as volunteers, without pay. They have not the remotest financial interest in the motion picture business, and so are impartial observers who approximate more nearly than any small group of paid legalized censors could public opinion in regard to films. This board is, unqualifiedly, opposed to all forms of legal censorship—federal, state and local, because it believes such censorship to be undemocratic and to threaten the fundamental principles of free speech and free expression. It feels qualified to object, through its extensive opportunities of observation, to legalized censorship because of the inherent dangers in allowing the output of the fourth or fifth largest industry in America to be controlled by a group of three or four censors appointed by any political party and open to the sinister influences that such offices invite, and it knows that no such group could possibly view efficiently the national production of motion pictures that taxes the best attention of its 225 members and the activities of its paid staff.

Mr. Brisbane's one contribution to the opposition to legalized censorship, voiced in his speech, was based on the dangers of possible political control.

The National Board, in this connection, would call attention to the work of politics in Oklahoma at the time when Al Jennings was a candidate for Governor of that State. The story of his life, called "Beating Back," in which he told the history of his outlaw career and his return to the life of an honest citizen, which had appeared in serial form in a prominent publication, had been "filmed" for the screen. This moving picture was circulated in the State as part of his campaign propaganda, with the result that many voters were won to his support, and popular belief in his integrity created. Thereupon a bill was introduced into the Oklahoma Legislature looking toward the prohibition in that State of any film which dealt with "the history of a notorious criminal, such as a bandit or gunman." The evidence is that this bill was introduced at the behest of the political party whose interests Mr. Jennings was opposing, with the obvious object of defeating his campaign.

Another interesting question is presetned by the case of the temperance film, "John Barleycorn," which, according to the Philadelphia Press, a prominent member of a legalized censorship board, who admittedly represents large liquor interests, attemtped to keep from the motion picture screens of his State.

These incidents should be sufficient to demonstrate the evils of legalized censorship, and yet similar illustrations of the unfortunate effect of politics on motion picture censoring might be multiplied from many sources, and these will obviously increase if legalized censorship is generally adopted.

As chairman of the National Board, I am very glad to record my opposition to legalized, pre-publicity censorship—particularly as I might, because of a possible misunderstanding of the term censorship in the title of our board, have been considered the one arch offender against whom the dinner was given in protest.

William Bertram

DIRECTOR WILLIAM BERTRAM is due all the credit for the accuracy of action and photography in "Snow Stuff," a three-part "Mustang" subject in the Buck Parvin series by Charles E. Van Loan.

In days not long ago Director Bertram "cruised the big timber" on a still hunt for the yellow metal, "punching" his dogs and following his sledge over the snow and ice of the frozen North.

William Bertram.

When he was given this subject he started negotiations with erstwhile friends at Valdez, Alaska, through whom he could secure the necessary "props" for the appropriate handling of the story.

When the dogs were received Director Bertram had little difficulty in teaching his leading man, Art Acord, and his leading lady, Dixie Stratton, the art of handling the brisk little animals and the guiding pole of the sledges.

The subtle humor of the author, Charles E. Van Loan, comes to the surface in a bubbling fountain of mirth, and the cast does justice to the situation in hand. "Snow Stuff" is scheduled for release through the Mutual service on March 24.

The Dinner to Frohman

Object of Festivities Requests That Interest in Him Be Transferred to Actors' Fund.

DANIEL FROHMAN has written a letter to the committee who had tendered him dinner asking that this function be abandoned or at least postponed, and asked to have the interest transferred to the forthcoming efforts in behalf of the Actors' Fund. In the letter he says:

"Those of my friends who are concerned in this compliment would make me happier by considering, instead, the needs of the Actors' Fund, and as there is to be held a ball of the Allied Arts of the Theater at the Astor on March 30, which includes all those interested in the stage, moving pictures, vaudeville, literature and the drama, that they manifest their interest instead by substituting this event for the testimonial to me, and to make this ball not only representative, but by aiding it with their patronage, a great success."

The letter was addressed to Samuel Goldfish, J. Stuart Blackton, A. L. Erlanger, J. E. Brulatour, Walter Damrosch, Otto H. Kahn, John W. Rumsey and others.

NETTER IN NEW YORK.

Leon D. Netter, who has been connected with Sol L. Lesser in his Coast enterprises for the past four years, arrived in New York Saturday. Mr. Netter will remain in New York indefinitely and in all probability will identify himself in some of the propositions which Mr. Lesser has now pending.

Pan-American Conference

At Buenos Aires, from April 13 to 15, International High Commission Will Consider Many Points of Interest to American Producers and Exporters—Paul Cromelin's Memorial of Motion Picture Copyright Reforms.

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE United States Section of the International High Commission, which meets on the 3d of April in the city of Buenos Aires, sailed on the armored cruiser Tennessee, having on board a complete and interesting program of films made in the United States. These films, which will be shown at Buenos Aires, not only to the various sections of the High Commission, but to the Argentine public generally, were secured through the timely action of Paul C. Cromelin, of the Cosmofotofilm Company. The list of films contributed by the various companies is as follows:

MUTUAL FILM CORP.—"The Victim" (N. Y. Motion Picture Co.), "The Brand Brothers" (Eclair), "Everyheart" (Beauty), "Animated Cameraman" (Novelty).

THOS. A. EDISON, INC.—"The Catspaw," "Cartoons in a Sanitarium."

UNIVERSAL FILM MFG. CO.—"The Riddle of the Silk Stocking" (Imp), "The Cage of the Golden Bars" (Gold Seal), "In the Shadows of the Pyramids" (Gold Seal), "Blue Blood and Yellow-Backs" (L-KO), "Lady Baffles No. 2" (Joker).

COSMOFOTOFILM CO.—"The House of Temperley" and "The Bosun's Mate" (London Film).

VITAGRAPH CO.—"The Isle of Regeneration," "The Right Girl," "Following the Scent."

THANHOUSER CO.—"The Five Faults of Flo."

LUBIN MFG. CO.—"The Great Divide," "Tillie's Tomato Surprise."

WORLD FILM CO.—"The Senator."

The International High Commission will consider various subjects of the most vital interest to American producers who are interested in the Latin-American markets. Topic No. 1 deals with "The Necessity of Better Transportation Facilities Between the American Republics and Means of Securing Them." Another subject which will be discussed and acted upon is "Improved Banking Facilities," with its kindred branches, such as extension of credits, financing of private and public enterprises and the stabilizing of International exchange. Another question of much importance will be "Uniformity of Customs Regulations and Classification of Merchandise." The sessions of the International High Commission will last about two weeks and will also consider the question of patents, trade-marks and copyrights.

The copyright situation in the Latin-American countries is in a state of confusion. Under the present system the American producer has very little, if any, protection against infringers and pirates, and he has to have recourse to somewhat bothersome and expensive proceedings if he wants to protect his works against unscrupulous persons. The Secretary of the Treasury, William G. McAdoo, is the chairman of the United States Section of the International High Commission, and he has been memorialized on the question of a better protection of copyrights in Latin-American states by Paul C. Cromelin, whose knowledge of the subject is thorough and who has dealt with its practical features for many years and in many countries. Mr. Cromelin's plea is an exhaustive one. He advocates the adoption by the Latin-American countries of the following provision in their copyright regulations:

"The acknowledgment of a copyright obtained in one State, in conformity with its laws, shall produce its effects of full right in all the other States without the necessity of complying with any other formality, provided always there shall appear in the work a statement that indicates the reservation of the property right."

Mr. Cromelin points out the various formalities which have to be observed under the United States copyright law and briefly describes our system of registration. He then goes on to say:

The registration is in fact one of the necessary conditions upon which the copyright is granted. Our law provides further for the compilation and publication of copyright entries so that if a manufacturer of motion pictures desires to use a work and is uncertain whether or not such work is copyrighted, he has a source where he can after diligent and careful search reasonably satisfy himself upon the point before beginning to expend money on the negative. The making of an original negative of a motion picture photoplay is usually a very expensive undertaking running into thousands of dollars, depending upon the story, artists used, difficulty in obtaining suitable settings, etc. It therefore becomes of paramount importance for him prior to going ahead to satisfy himself that he is not infringing some author's rights.

As our relations with our Pan-American neighbors develop, original stories, the copyrights in which belong to citizens of those countries, will undoubtedly be used as the basis for motion picture plays. Now in many countries there is no formality required today in the matter of conferring copyright upon the producer of a literary or artistic work. Its publication automatically vests in the author or his assignee the copyright. There is no uniformity today in the Pan-American republics as regards registration. In some countries, notably Chile, Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico, Paraguay, Peru, San Salvador, Venezuela and Nicaragua, no time is specified within which the formality of registration must take place. In other countries the time varies from within fifteen days from time of publication in Argentine to two years from such time in Brazil.

In the case of an American citizen, registration is an absolutely necessary essential in order to obtain a United States copyright. So also must the citizens of all other countries with which we have copyright treaties or with whom we have established reciprocal relations, register their works in the United States to secure copyright, with the exception of a citizen of those Pan-American States which have ratified the Buenos Aires convention in 1910. It would appear to be beyond question that without having ever to register in the United States he is entitled to all the benefits of our copyright law provided he has complied with whatever requirement his own country makes and on his work he indicates in some manner the reservation of the property right. The continuance of such an arrangement is fraught with grave danger to every manufacturer of motion pictures. He may make a picture of a story which originated in one of those countries. There is no way for him to tell from what may be a typewritten scenario or an unlawfully typed copy of the work offered him that it is a work in which copyright subsists. So far as the sale and distribution in the United States is concerned, the matter is serious, but we have at least provided for a limit to the amount of damages recoverable in case of an innocent infringement. Section 25 of the Copyright Law of the United States contains the following:

"* * * and in the case of the infringement of an undramatized or nondramatic work by means of motion pictures, where the infringer shall show that he was not aware that he was infringing, and that such infringement could not have been reasonably foreseen, such damages shall not exceed the sum of one hundred dollars; and in the case of an infringement of a copyrighted dramatic or dramatico-musical work by a maker of motion pictures and his agencies for distribution thereof to exhibitors, where such infringer shows that he was not aware that he was infringing a copyrighted work, and that such infringements could not reasonably have been foreseen, the entire sum of such damages recoverable by the copyright proprietor from such infringing maker and his agencies for the distribution to exhibitors of such infringing motion picture shall not exceed the sum of five thousand dollars nor be less than two hundred and fifty dollars. * * *

"* * * But the foregoing exceptions shall not deprive the copyright proprietor of any other remedy given him under this law, nor shall the limitation as to the amount of recovery apply to infringements occurring after the actual notice to a defendant, either by service of process in a suit or other written notice served upon him. * * *"

It will be observed that even in the case of what was originally an innocent infringement, the copyright proprietor is entitled, in addition to damages, to every other remedy given under our law and the limitation as to the amount of recovery shall not apply to infringements occurring after the actual notice to a defendant, either by a service of process in a suit or other written notice served upon him.

These other remedies include delivery up of all infringing copies, negatives, etc. It will thus be seen that even with the limitations made by our law the consequences of an infringement may be very, very serious. It is not this alone, however, but the remedies which the copyright owner may have in damages when the motion picture is brought into his own country or into the other countries of the Union, which makes it serious for the manufacturer or his assignee.

We believe the convention should be amended in such a way as would provide for a system of registration and an exchange by the various nations adhering to the Pan-American convention from time to time of a complete list of copyright registrations filed with them, these to be published in a manner similar to that followed by the Register of Copyrights at Washington under the name of "Copyright Entry Books."

We understand that a petition has reached you through the Register of Copyrights at Washington which was signed by the Victor Talking Machine Co., Thomas A. Edison, Inc., and Columbia Graphophone Co. bearing on this same matter and they have proposed an addition to Article 3 reading as follows:

"* * * and provided that no copyright owner shall be entitled to enforce any claim for infringement of his copyrighted work in a signatory State occurring prior to the filing of an entry of such copyright in the Copyright Office of such signatory State by the Copyright Office of the signatory State in which such copyright was originally granted, and the Copyright Office of each signatory State shall be required to forward to the Copyright offices of each of the other signatory States, each month a complete list of copyright registrations effected during the preceeding month."

We heartily approve of and indorse their petition as quoted above and urge the importance and necessity of such action upon you with a view to avoiding probable and numerous lawsuits which are sure to arise unless some such system is adopted. We believe such a course to be necessary in order to avoid international legal difficulties, involving, necessarily, great expenses and possible damages.

In conclusion we commend to your serious consideration the clauses in the United States Copyright Law as amended by Act of August 24, 1912, relating to motion pictures. We believe that if there is uncertainty on the part of the representatives of other Pan-American countries as to the kind of internal legislation they should originate in their respective countries covering the copyrighting of motion pictures, they might well make use of the experience we have gained and adopt and make a part of their Copyright Law the good feature of our Law to the extent this could possibly be done. This would be a strong move in the direction of Uniformity of Laws respecting an important division of the law relating to copyright and would of necessity in the last analysis prove of benefit to all concerned.

Mr. Cromelin's memorial has appended to it the formal approval of the Motion Picture Board of Trade and of many other producers who are not members of the board. It is expected that the United States Section will submit Mr. Cromelin's ideas and suggestions to the International High Commission. With the great opportunities presented in South America to our producers, action on Mr. Cromelin's memorial will be of the greatest importance. The Moving Picture World will print in both editions (English and Spanish) an account of the proceedings of the International High Commission in so far as they relate to motion pictures.

Kleine Exalts Quality

President of General Film Company Outlines Plans and Policies in Exclusive Interview—"Quality Must Triumph Over Length"—False Rumors Are Denied—"G. F. Manufacturers United in Friendly Rivalry."

By W. Stephen Bush.

CONVINCING, courageous, sure of his ground, George Kleine, the new president of the General Film Company, proposes to wage relentless war against certain superstitions and heresies which, in his opinion and in the opinion of many disinterested persons, are working great injury to the entire industry. Mr. Kleine was a figure in the industry almost at its dawn. The motion picture in its ever varying phases from the day of the fifty feet length to the monster productions of today has ever been his study and his care. Conservative by nature and constructive by habit, Mr. Kleine is well qualified to point out the besetting evil of today and to suggest and recommend the proper remedy.

I found Mr. Kleine in his room at the Republican Club on West 40th St. with many illustrated newspaper clippings before him, all dealing in words or in pictures with Billie Burke, whose star in the firmament of films is now so much in the ascendant. He hopes that the Billie Burke series will take the best of the motion picture theaters by storm, he swears by the magnetism of the beauty with the Titian hair; there will be a grand drive for the Fortress of Popularity and there will be a veritable "drumfire" of advertising from the machine gun to the biggest howitzer. Mr. Kleine spoke of all this with the cheerful calm of the general who has completed his preparations and is about to "tell Gridley that he may fire." Billie Burke, however, was mentioned only in an incidental way after all. He used the coming serial as an illustration of the cardinal point in his campaign against certain superstitions and heresies above alluded to.

"Nothing either prophetic or historic this time," laughingly exclaimed Mr. Kleine when he saw me. "You know," he continued, with a quiet but very expressive smile, "this business of ours changes constantly, and if a man will take the pains of checking up predictions he will get all the prophets in trouble. We never know today what may happen tomorrow." He presently added in a more serious tone: "Behind all this change, however, there must be some permanent principle, some rule by which we may guide ourselves." Whereupon he went at his subject full tilt.

Retrospect on Feature Development.

"What is a feature film?" he asked. "We accept the basic definition that a feature film involves length. This was true for a short period. To my mind a feature is a film of any length which stands out much above the average in quality, in interest to the public. Its elements may be the attractive personality of a star or some other new and unusual attraction, consisting, for instance, of a new subject or of the original treatment of a trite one. The chief qualification is that it must be different from the general mass of films. There is a law working out in the matter of features. The feature of today may be the commonplace of tomorrow. If you review the evolution of the film since 1908, you can demonstrate the workings of this law I have in mind. There had been sporadic releases of more than a thousand feet as long ago as 1907. I had a multiple-reel, called 'Pierrot,' in 1907 for which special music had been written by Leo Wurmser. It had been made for special concert work, but there was no market for it and by the time multiple reels came into vogue my 'Pierrot' would have been impossible from a photographic point of view, the art having improved rapidly in the course of a few years. You no doubt remember Pathe's first 'Passion Play' and the 1,400-foot film, 'Napoleon,' also released by Pathe. The broad sweep of the business, however, adhered to the standard length of a 1,000 feet up to 1911, when, in the regular course of development, we became acquainted with two-reel productions, which were then conspicuous but which gave way in turn to three-reel features, until they in turn became commonplace and ceased to be features. 1913 saw the advent of features of exceptional length: 'Quo Vadis,' eight reels, followed by 'Les Miserables,' eleven reels; 'Last Days of Pompeii,' eight reels; Selig's 'Spoilers,' in 1914; Annette Kellermann in features of many reels, to the numerous seven and ten reel productions of this day. Up to the present moment, features of seven reels and longer have not been made in such quantities as to rob them of their character as features. There was still an extra effort in all of them, whether it consisted in special attention being given to the scenario or whether it was in the quality of the cast or in the specialization of the artistic or technical end.

Origin of the Five-Reel Production.

"With the need of theaters for a dependable service, combined with a desire to give the best and to pay special attention, there arose a demand for a long film which could at the same time be turned out in frequent intervals. This, to my mind, was the origin of the five-reel feature. The five-reel feature, therefore, is today in the same position as a two-reel production was four years ago and is rapidly undergoing the same evolution. Just as soon as a class of films is made in great quantities and released at regular and frequent intervals it ceases to have unusual attraction. On this account both manufacturers and exhibitors are straining for something more than the ordinary five-reel feature. The change in the last six months has been notable, owing largely to an overproduction of these films. Both the exhibitor and the public have lost much of their interest in features of this length. At the same time, it is a demonstrable fact that the public are more eager than ever for noteworthy films; but this craving is satisfied with increasing difficulty. Length alone is not sufficient, a long film must have some such quality as 'The Birth of a Nation' or 'The Battle Cry of Peace' and others of the very few in this class. Again the rule applies: Frequency of issue will rob any film of its character as a feature. We can say that if any company were able to produce a regular supply of feature films equal in power to 'The Birth of a Nation' they would, by reason of the frequency of issue, lose their character as features. I have therefore arrived at this conclusion: We must subordinate length to quality. The quality must be of such character as to embrace all of the film virtues.

The Coming Triumph of Quality Over Length.

"When our industry or art develops to such a point that length is entirely subordinated to quality, and the exhibitor no longer bases the price he is willing to pay for his films on their length, I believe that we will obtain subjects in single reels which will show as great drawing powers as the ambitious features of the past. That such a movement has been developed, although, to some extent, unrecorded, is demonstrated by the demand for Chaplin films and for strong serials. In these cases we have a two-reel issue for which many exhibitors are willing to pay as much as for five-reel features. Exhibitors have complained that well-known film stars have been taken out of program releases and placed exclusively in so-called feature films. This condition is due entirely to commercial reasons. Salaries have advanced to such a point that popular film stars cannot be used in program films because the returns do not warrant their employment. This condition, however, is but temporary, I believe, and is being affected by such development as the high scale of prices the exhibitor is willing to pay for two-reel Chaplins and serials. I firmly believe that in the not too distant future manufacturers will be financially reimbursed if they have the courage to place their greatest stars in one, two and three reel lengths. It is often said that many so-called feature films at 5,000 feet could be profitably reduced from an artistic standpoint to 3,000, and even to 2,000 feet.

General Film Company Keenly Alive.

"Speaking for the General Film Company," continued Mr. Kleine, "I want to say that the manufacturers who supply its films are keenly alive to present-day conditions. Business men must be conservative. It cannot be asked of them that they place in their short releases stars of the first magnitude, as in some cases the salary of a single artist may consume the entire proceeds derived from the sale of the film. There will be instant response, however, if public and exhibitors show proper recognition of the reappearance of some of the best-known film stars in program releases.

Film Business a Breeder of Rumors.

"The film business has always been a breeder of rumors. The present period has its customary crop. Among them is the statement that one or more of the manufacturers that have for years supplied the General Film are about to withdraw. The advertising which will appear in the Moving Picture World will give the forcible lie to these reports. I wish to say that at no time have the manufacturers had the interest of the company more at heart nor has there ever been a more earnest attempt to supply a high grade of film. I have been in close touch with all these manufacturers and I know that at no time has friendly rivalry been more keen among them. Each one is trying to produce better films than the other. It is a fact generally acknowledged among exhibitors and in the trade generally that the program of the General Film Company is the best upon the market, and if a weak spot develops here and there, as must happen in every group, it is receiving the most earnest attention. Let the exhibitor take a broad view of his obligations to his exchange and to the manufacturer, paying a fair price for his film service based, to some extent, upon his income, and the manufacturer will be enabled to employ both the technical and artistic best that can be procured.

Public Tires Periodically.

"We must not overlook the fact that the public periodically tires of that which becomes familiar. This was true in respect to the fifty-foot film in 1898, of the three-hundred-foot length in 1900, and it is true of the various lengths which carried either mediocrity or similarity of subject within the passing of the year. The essence of the film business is novelty. I mean novelty without vulgarity or indecency. We simply must get away from the hard and fast application of the yardstick as a measurement of value. We must get away from the old insistent routine of length and regard the commercial decencies of the situation. We must realize that one foot of film may be worth more than some other foot of film. Indeed, one foot of film in one production may be worth a thousand feet of film in another production. With the Billie Burke serial I propose to demonstrate the ultimate earning power of a short length film with proper advertising, which you may be sure it will get. It will, thus advertised, earn what in the film business will be considered fabulous sums. If a film draws fabulous amounts to the box office, the man who makes it is, it seems to me, entitled to his share of it."

Mr. Kleine's words gather force as he goes along, and the impact of them is direct and decisive.

Footage No Test of Merit.

"The keynote of all serious-minded people in the industry today is the doctrine that the value and the earning power of a film does not depend on its length. Footage is no criterion or test of quality, and never can be."

I mentioned here that there were exhibitors who would gladly subscribe to that statement.

"I know that, too," said Mr. Kleine, "and I want to add that we manufacturers are entirely dependent on the exhibitor for his co-operation. The exhibitor, we hope, will do those things which are clearly indicated by business conditions and by co-operation enable the manufacturer to do his share, among other things, to employ the best talent in films of any length. It is an imposition upon the public and a threatened fatality upon the business to have it said with truth that a short film is a poor film or, to put it the other way, that the best films are the longest. Quality in short lengths needs specialization and emphasis to make it known to the fullest extent. The lack of these adjuncts has made programs suffer. There was a day, and it is not gone entirely, when men looked upon films just as so many reels, no matter what was on them. The exhibitor who insists upon quality must be willing to differentiate in his payment in the prices that he pays. There are but two ways open to the manufacturer: He must either lessen the output or pay decent prices for his staff, etc. The idea of so many dollars for so many thousand feet is all wrong. Such arbitrary measuring of values is impossible in the final analysis. You remember the splendid three-reel features, 'Christopher Columbus' and 'Cinderella,' issued by Selig; the settled law which I mentioned before has made such features of the past the commonplace of today. What we need is novelty divorced from length."

When a man has such clear conceptions of his policy and knows how to put it in such admirable language, the interviewer finds his occupation seriously imperiled. There is nothing for him to say, except perhaps just this one word: The program of Mr. Kleine will not be suffered to remain a mere theory. He is essentially a man of action. He will try out to the utmost limit the ideas and plans which have taken root in his mind—all of which means that in the near future the ship which Mr. Kleine commands will dash on with "Full Steam Ahead."

THREE EQUITABLE-WORLD STARS IN LEGITIMATE.

Three of Equitable and World Film stars are to leave the screen for a few weeks to take part in important legitimate revivals. Charles Cherry, who is to be seen in "Passers By," will appear in "Idlers"; Alice Brady is to appear in "Little Comrade," which will allow her the featured role; while Jane Grey, last seen in "Man and His Angel," will be seen with Mr. Cherry in "Idlers." These stars are permanent screen artists for World and Equitable and will put in their spare time at the studio.

Photograph Editor Takes Vacation—Why Not?

From Paramount Picture Corporation Press Department, Chas. E. Moyer.

George R. Meeker, editor-in-chief of the Paramount Pictographs, the magazine of the screen, and the first serious attempt to visualize the thoughts of America's greatest thinkers and to teach vital subjects through the medium of the screen, has been granted a two weeks' leave of absence, to recuperate from the arduous duties with which he has been confined during the past few months. Mr. Meeker has given to the motion picture industry "the first new thing" in a number of years. Mr. Meeker will spend his vacation at Palm Beach.

"Making people think" in this pleasurable manner, the work of which Mr. Meeker has accomplished in carrying out an ideal of William W. Hodkinson, president of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, has received no end of favorable comment from every section of the country. It has already been looked upon as a great influence throughout the country. One of the kindest compliments that has been paid to the work of the Pictograph Department is the following:

"So it is that they teach; they become a motion picture university of thought—a university where industry, manners, charity, politics, safety-first, or any of the great humanities of life can be portrayed. Its instruction is given in such a pleasing form that the audience—the pupils—never for a single instant realize that they are actually being taught; they feel as if they were being amused. But they think, they think deeply, and of vital things. Their thoughts will mould their opinions and their opinions will mould their characters; their characters will be the character of the whole nation. Character rules empires."

Upon Mr. Meeker's return to New York next month he will take up a variety of interesting subjects to be portrayed upon the screen through the Pictographs.

George Larkin

GEORGE LARKIN has long had a reputation for daring, for doing those things that stand out on the screen and provide a thrill for picturegoers. Mr. Larkin's success, however, has not depended upon his exhibition of nerve; he has done much in the way of straight dramatic work. And he has been on the screen for nearly nine years.

Mr. Larkin's stage experience began in 1900, and covered specialty and stock work as well. In 1907 he joined the Edison company, remaining there for three years. From 1910 to 1912 he was with Pathe, and then for a year he was with Eclair. In 1913 he went to the Pacific coast, where he played in the Pathe and Kalem companies, later joining the Universal forces. He will be especially remembered for his participation in the making of "Trey of Hearts," in which he was featured in the male lead.

George Larkin.

In the Selig-V-L-S-E subject, "Unto Those Who Sin," released on March 6, Mr. Larkin is seen in the leading male role opposite Fritzi Brunette. This picture was made on the coast shortly before Mr. Larkins's recent return to New York. While here he was a leading member of the cast of "A Circus Romance," produced by the World Film. At present he is playing opposite Jane Grey at the Triumph Equitable studio in "The Surrender."

Among his intimates Mr. Larkin is known for his skill and taste in "wearing clothes." He is known, too, as a good fellow, in spite of the extreme care he exercises in keeping himself at all times in the best of physical condition—"as hard as nails."

Chicago News Letter

By JAS. S. McQUADE.

Threatened British Prohibition of Foreign Films and Film Stock.

IN AN Associated Press dispatch from London, a few days ago, I read an account of a great meeting held in the Guildhall, that city, to inaugurate a national savings campaign. The keynote of the speeches made by men prominent in the Cabinet was for economy in everything. Economy and productive energy were required from all workers in order to meet the great emergency of the nation.

"The question is how we can take millions of men from the workshops and farms and yet provide for all the needs of the civil population and the army millions in the field," said Earl Kitchener, Secretary of State for War, at the conclusion of his speech. "If those left behind work only as hard as they did before and all the consumers consume as much as they did before the war, our problem will be unsolvable."

Chancellor of the Exchequer Reginald McKenna finished his address by saying that the only way to avoid heavy taxation was for the nation to save. He moved a resolution that the meeting recognize that no sacrifice was too great to assure victory, and that it pledged itself to use all means to that end.

This foreword will enable the reader to grasp the situation in the British Isles at the present time, and to consider from a wider viewpoint a question that now confronts the renting and exhibiting departments of the moving picture business in Great Britain. The question involves a British blockade on all films of foreign make and on raw film stock.

A Newspaper Campaign in Favor of Prohibition.

While the government as yet has taken no action—or at least has made no announcement of taking such action—the newspapers owned by Lord Northcliffe—the Times, the Evening News and the Daily Mail, all of London—have been agitating in favor of such prohibition for some time past. The following letter from a civilian, named H. Grahame Richards, was printed in the Times:

With regard to your leading article, entitled "The Coming Taxes," will you permit me to point out that at present we purchase from America almost £2,000,000 worth of films per annum? An embargo on the importation of these films would result: (a) In an immediate saving of about £2,000,000; (b) in valuable economy as regards ship space; (c) in the expansion of a profitable industry in this country; (d) in the increased educational value of films, inasmuch as at least 60 per cent. of American pictures at present displayed in this country could be disposed of with beneficial results. I refer to those dealing with specious social problems and the exploits of Black Hand gangs, which appear to be having markedly deleterious effects on the minds of the rising generation. At the same time, stamp and license imposts could be increased on home produced and displayed films without serious inconvenience either to producer or spectator.

This letter brought forth the following editorial in the Times, under the heading, "Films Good and Evil":

In defending a dubious economy of £50,000 a year by the closing of museums, Mr. Asquith described it as "a comparatively small item in a large number of economies in a great variety of departments and directions." It is certainly small in comparison with the economy which a correspondent suggested in our columns yesterday, namely, the prohibition of the import of foreign films. The case against the foreign film, as Mr. Grahame Richards pointed out, is complete and unanswerable. We are buying American films to the extent of £2,000,000 a year at a time when there are only two legitimate objects on which English money should be spent. One of these objects is the promotion of victory in the field; the other, which is closely allied, is the promotion of a sound national spirit in the people at home. The importation of American films, so far from promoting either of these objects, is a direct obstacle to both. By sending money unnecessarily to America, the buyers of these useless films, and their accomplices who witness the display of them, depress the American exchange and so increase the cost of every useful article which we buy from America.

Nor do these films, obtained at such a cost, promote the national well-being. The majority of them are concerned with little that is of good report, for they portray an atmosphere of crime and intrigue and back-stairs humor in the crude colors of a sham romance. We should be the last to deny the value of the cinematograph in the social life of to-day. Even these American films, especially those which dramatize history, have a certain value at the right time and place; but there is plenty of drama and history in the making around us to-day for English people to play their part in without fixing their attention on these exotic productions. And their importation in ships badly wanted for other purposes must tend to exclude from public display the useful and patriotic films which the home industry is producing. In education, strictly so called, there is an unimagined future before the cinematograph. But to the failure of our education in the past, so far as it has failed, is due both the vapidity of mind to which the cinematograph in its debased forms is now made to appeal, and the insolence of the promoters which sees in purses temporarily swollen by the accident of war nothing but an opportunity of sordid gain at the expense of the public taste. It is very rarely that a Government can find ready to its hand so easy a means of promoting morality and the national causes by a stroke of the pen.

Notwithstanding that the Times editorial pronounced Mr. Richards' case against foreign films unanswerable, the editor of the London Bioscope (a trade paper) showed in the issue of February 17 that Mr. Richards was wrong in his figures and possessed of a childish knowledge of the industry.

Answering the point (a), he states that the gross value of imported films, according to the official estimate, is £900,000 per annum, and that, on this, £300,000 is paid as import duty; also that commissions, rent, advertising and other charges amount to about 75 per cent. of the gross value, "leaving, roughly, about £375,000 net profit to return abroad."

He cites an instance where a British importer of American films, during the period from October to January (since the film duty has been in force) had actually received from abroad £2,000 more than he had sent to America, this being accounted for by the fact that London, being the center of the world's film export business, the second-hand dealer who buys in England to send abroad never sends any money out of the country at all. And then he cites one firm's current orders, all of which bring money into the country, viz., 46,000 feet for Japan, 48,000 feet for Spain and the Philippines, 64,700 feet for France—with a further 46,000 feet to follow—72,000 feet for Scandinavia and Russia and 14,000 feet for Africa.

The point (b), which is childish, he dismisses with the remark that the few cubic inches occupied by a film in transit may be considered negligible as compared with ship space.

In answering (c), he shows that a film blockade would destroy rather than develop the British film-producing industry. In the issue of February 10 he shows that of the films available for use in British moving picture theaters 90 per cent. are of foreign manufacture, leaving only 10 per cent. to supply the necessary programs if the blockade were in force. If the importing of films were stopped, it is shown that there are only sufficient unreleased films to last six months. And this would lead to the closing of most of the picture theaters after the expiration of that time, as there are not enough British producers to keep the theaters going, granting even that patrons would continue attending the theaters as formerly.

But there is another question to be considered in this connection. Great Britain has not got a single manufacturer of raw film stock. The producers depend solely on imports. The present holdings are not large and would soon be exhausted if a blockade were enforced. Then British producers, exchanges and picture theaters would be forced out of business and the entire trade ruined.

It is estimated that £30,000,000 ($150,000,000) sterling of British money is invested in the moving picture industry in the British Isles; so that the loss, temporarily, would be great. Nearly half a million people would be thrown out of employment; 5,000 picture theaters would be closed and their owners made bankrupt, and the great masses of the people would lose their chief amusement.

In the light of all this it is astounding that a British producer of films should be in favor of a blockade on foreign films. Yet this is confirmed by a letter written by E. H. Montagu, European agent, in London, for the Selig Polyscope Company, and published only in part by the Daily Express (another of Northcliffe's papers) under the sarcastic headline, "Backward Britain." Mr. Montagu's letter, as published in that paper was as follows:

Letter of Selig's European Agent to the Daily Express.

Referring to the article on British films, published in the Daily Express on February 10, I am afraid you have been led astray owing to the fact that your article is based on an interview with a British film manufacturer, who has taken good care not to give you the real truth.

In the first place, I would like to point out that I am an Englishman, as are all the other agents for American films, and I think we are as patriotic a body as will be found anywhere.

With regard to the figures as to the value of foreign films imported from America being £1,113,000 for last year, I would like to point out that London has always been the center of the world's film trade, and it is from London the majority of American films are sold for Australia and all other British Colonies (except Canada), the continents of Europe, Asia and South America.

If the trade done in American films with these countries is taken off the above-mentioned figure, it will be easily ascertained that the amount of importations for Great Britain alone does not exceed £500,000, for the foreign and colonial trade, according to actual figures, amounts to over 50 per cent. of the total trade done here by agents for American films.

The "English Manufacturer" is also wrong in assuming that the photoplay has only existed in America for eight or ten years. Is he so short in memory that he cannot recall the first pictures ever shown in this country at a first-class theater? Does he forget what a feature for years the Palace theater made of the American Bioscope pictures, and how all classes of the public used to enjoy seeing them?

I think this was some sixteen or eighteen years ago. Personally I can recall no English pictures being shown at that period; and, if they were, they made no such impression, and were of little moment.

In the United States the film industry, according to official figures, is the fifth largest industry in that vast country. The Americans have specialized, they have seen the future in the business they have invested their money in, and worked for the future of their trade. The British manufacturer—and it is a Briton who says so—has, I am sorry to say, made very little progress. He had never, until the Americans had built up the cinema, seen any future in his trade. He was content just to rub along and make a bare living.

Many of the original British manufacturers, and the ones who made the best British films ten years ago have gone out of business.

I am indebted to William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, for a copy of the Times editorial and for the clipping from the Daily Express; also for the following excerpt from a personal business letter recently received from Mr. Montagu, which will be read with interest:

An Excerpt from Mr. Montagu's Personal Letter to William N. Selig.

I do not know whether your papers have said anything about the newspaper agitation over here to stop the importation of films into this country, but it has been taken up very actively indeed by the Northcliffe press, comprising the Evening News, the Daily Mail and the Times, and has been worked very well. Personally, I cannot see why they have taken up this industry in particular.: The amount of money remitted to America must be very small compared with the amount of money remitted from other industries. I enclose the editorial that appeared in yesterday's Times, which may interest you, and which shows you the line they are working upon. I also enclose a clipping from the Daily Express giving a letter I wrote them, which they did not publish quite in full.

The trade is getting out figures to show how small the amount at stake really is, and nothing approaching even one million, much less the two million pounds they talk of.

One never knows with a war on what may happen. I think a good way, instead of stopping the business altogether, would be to deposit the money here at the bank of England, and receive in return English Government 5½ per cent. bonds, which would not be saleable in this country until a year after the war. We should remit these bonds, which would, of course, be saleable on Wall Street at the current price of English government securities. You could either hold them or sell them, as you needed the money.

The exhibitors here are absolutely of the opinion that cinemas would not be able to continue if the importation of foreign films were stopped. I must say I feel positive they are right. My own idea is that within six months, 75 per cent. of the cinemas would be closed. The other 25 per cent. would manage to struggle on with old films.

Before closing this article, it is only fair that justice should be done the British producers of films who are not all actuated by the motives of "The Manufacturer" referred to in Mr. Montagu's article, in the Daily Express. In the issue of February 10 the Bioscope held that the British producer "with that large-minded generosity which is typical of our country has always welcomed fair and free competition as being the best possible condition for any industry."

In the issue of February 17 appears the following statement from the Hepworth Manufacturing Company, Ltd.: "We gladly welcome all competition. We do not ask people to see our pictures because they are British, but because they are good. Therefore we should look with disdain on any attempt to protect us against competitors in so far as the purpose was merely to protect us."

Chicago Film Brevities.

At an informal luncheon given at the Hotel Sherman Wednesday afternoon, March 8, by Aaron A. Jones, a Chicago committee was formed and also sub-committees to engage in the moving picture campaign on behalf of the Actors' Fund in Chicago. On the Chicago committee are: Aaron A. Jones, William N. Selig, George K. Spoor, Ike Van Ronkel, F. M. Brockell, Nathan Ascher, Alfred Hamburger, Fred W. Schaefer, Mark Heiman, James R. Quirk, Watterson R. Rothacker and William K. Hollander. On the executive committee are: Mayor William Hale Thompson, honorary chairman; Aaron A. Jones, active chairman; William N. Selig, treasurer, and James R. Quirk, secretary. Messrs. Jones, Ascher, Hamburger, Schaefer and Heiman pledge 10 per cent. of their receipts on May 15, the date selected for the raising of funds, promising also the same percentage of the receipts from about 110 houses belonging to them and those affiliated with them. On Thursday, March 9, 118 theaters in all were signed up to give the percentage of their receipts already stated. The Chicago committee expects to get the same percentage of receipts from over 600 moving picture theaters in Chicago. "New York guaranteed to raise $100,000," said Mr. Jones at the luncheon, "and if Chicago doesn't surpass that, then I'm mistaken about our liberality. Theatrical people are among the very first to respond to the support of a charitable cause, and I am sure the public will recognize this by helping us to raise a large fund for the Actors' Home on Staten Island, N. Y."

Illinois Branch No. 2 of the M. P. E. L. of America has issued the following call for a state convention: "To all exhibitors of Illinois: You are hereby notified that the state convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Illinois, Branch No. 2, will be held Tuesday, March 14, at Room 210, Masonic Temple, at 12:00 noon, prompt. As important matters relative to the National Convention to be held in July will be taken up, your attendance is earnestly requested." This announcement was not received at this office in time to appear in the issue of March 18, as it should have been.

The Paramount opening at the Studebaker on Saturday, March 4, was a big success. The house had taken on an attractive appearance and everyone was much pleased with the change. The new stage setting evoked numerous exclamations of delight, and the music accompanying the pictures came in for its due meed of praise. The Martin Ballmann orchestra furnished music that really interpreted the films, not a mere fixed program for the sake of music alone. Business has been excellent all through the week.

The Colonial management informs me that Triangle programs have been growing steadily in favor at that house, and that the receipts for the week ending Saturday, March 11, will show a considerable increase over the opening week. "The Raiders," directed by Thomas H. Ince, and featuring H. B. Warner, is the feature for the week beginning Sunday, March 12, and Keystone's "The Village Blacksmith" will furnish the comedy. Mr. de Manby is proving himself a worthy substitute for S. L. Rothapfel in the directing management of the house.

Delayed deliveries on steel and special equipment materials caused by abnormal conditions for which the war in Europe is directly responsible, makes necessary the postponement of the official opening of the new laboratory and studios of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company in Chicago, which opening was originally announced to take place early in April. The buildings proper are entirely completed, and the general equipment, such as perforators, printers, drums, tanks, etc., will be installed by April 15, but special cranes, carriers and labor-saving devices will not be delivered until a later date, and from present promises and indications it is Mr. Rothacker's belief that the new laboratory and studios will not be completely in operation until some time between May 1 and 15. In the meantime the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company maintains the present plant at top speed, and will continue to operate it until the very moment the new plant is ready for complete occupancy and operation.

An opinion, given by Corporation Counsel Ettelson, of this city, one day last week, caused Chief of Police Healey to notify commanding officers in the various districts not to interfere with the exhibition of moving pictures in theaters where prizes are awarded for the solution of mysteries. Mr. Ettelson holds that this form of advertising is not a lottery and that it is in compliance with the law. Some time ago a police order was given to stop the showing of pictures of this type, in the belief that it was a form of gambling. The Corporation Counsel holds that skill only is involved in such a contest.

A mysterious fire that started in the Argyle theater, 4930 Broadway, shortly after the theater closed Wednesday night, March 8, is being investigated by the police. Pedestrians declared that the theater was burning in three places when the fire was discovered. During the blaze several small explosions were heard, indicating that cans of gasoline might have been placed in the house. According to the police reports, there has been labor trouble at the theater since a moving picture operator was discharged. Since then an attempt has also been made to break into the house. The loss from the fire is estimated at about $10,000.

SIR HERBERT LEAVES LOS ANGELES.

Beerbohm-Tree, the Distinguished Actor-Manager, Says Goodbye and Is Given Farewell Dinner.

SIR HERBERT BEERBOHM-TREE, the eminent English actor, who has filled a photoplay engagement here at Mr. Griffith's studios, departed this week for the East.

Sir Herbert was given a sumptuous farewell dinner the day before he left. The dinner which was elaborately served in the Parlor F of the Alexandria Hotel, was a great success.

Douglas Fairbanks acted as chairman and during the evening he called upon the following for speeches: David Wark Griffith, De Wolf Hopper, Constance Collier, William Farnum, J. C. Epping, Dustin Farnum, John Emerson, Bennie Zeidman, Courtenay Foote, Iris Tree and Mrs. De-Wolf Hopper.

Mr. Griffith, in his address, said in part:

"On the eve of your departure, Sir Herbert, I, on behalf of the studio, call you our 'friend'; with more sentiment I could say 'love,' for, Sir Herbert, with your great democracy, you have won the love of the entire studio, from the executive down to the property men."

De Wolf Hopper added to his reputation as speech-maker with his brilliant tribute to Sir Herbert, as artist, comrade and co-worker.

Douglas Fairbanks, who has developed into a parlor magician, entertained the guests with some sleight of hand tricks.

In addition to those who made speeches the guest list included Vera Lewis, Jack Conway, Viola Barry, Eric von Stroheim, Clare West, John Fairbanks, Mary Alden, Charles Eyton, Winnifred Kingston, Frank Case, Mrs. William Farnum, Ralph Lewis, George Hill, Kathlyn Williams, Mr. and Mrs. Ihmsen, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Wells, Mme. Rabinoff and Douglas Gerard.

Douglas Fairbanks read this telegram:

> To Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree: Expressing the sincere feeling of the entire membership of the stock company of the Fine Arts studio, and of every employe, from the lowest to the highest, I want to assure you of the warm place you have won in every one of our hearts by your unfailing sympathy and democracy. We wish you a pleasant journey and an early return. FRANK E. WOODS,
> For the entire Fine Arts Studio.

Sir Herbert then responded to the requests for a speech and in part said:

"This telegram from Mr. Woods is very dear to me. I have experienced many eventful things in my career, but no event shall be treasured as much as my stay at the Fine Arts studio. I was very happy every moment, and greatly appreciated your courtesies and kindness. How can I be otherwise than happy, being a bohemian at heart myself? I admire the ideal democracy that obtains at your fine studio." He concluded his speech with a quotation from "Twelfth Night," "'Come what may, I adore thee so that danger shall seem sport.' I depart tomorrow but I shall return soon, my dear friends."

On the following day Sir Herbert was escorted by a party of his friends, headed by the president of the Triangle, Harry E. Aitken, to the Salt Lake depot, where he boarded the 2.25 train for New York. As the train was pulling out of the station two Fine Arts cowboys fired guns in farewell, while the bystanders cheered.

In reply to Mr. Wood's telegram, Sir Herbert, while on the train, sent the following:

> Frank E. Woods,
> I was deeply touched by your telegram last night, and by the feelings that prompted it. Will you kindly express to the members of the stock company of the Fine Arts studio, and to all the employes, my deep gratitude for the expression of their good will, and assure them of the joy I felt during my stay in the good fellowship and sympathy of the community? Pray, dear Mr. Woods, accept also my deep appreciation of your own unfailing courtesy.
> SIR HERBERT BEERBOHM-TREE.

Director John Emerson is now at work on the concluding scenes of "Macbeth," which will be released probably in nine reels, and handled as a special feature production.

Sir Herbert will probably return to Los Angeles in June to appear in another Fine Arts production.

KALEM ELKS BENEFIT.

The Film Men Pull an All-Star Program Winner and Deservedly Clean Up Big.

On Thursday night the Glendale lodge of Elks gave what they termed an all-star vaudeville for the benefit of the building fund of that lodge. "All-star" is a much abused word these days; but there has probably never been a time when it had a better right to be used than in connection with this entertainment. If the entertainment committee had made known in Los Angeles the list of talent that was to be represented on the program they could have sold every seat in the house at $5 each, and every purchaser would have received his money's worth. Even the big benefits in New York seldom gather a greater galaxy of stars than appeared on this bill and they never mentioned it in town. Just read this list:

James Neil and Edith Chapman-Neil appeared in "The Lady Across the Street," a one-act comedy by Julian Street, and in it they were supported by Frank Jonasson, Harry Williams, assisted by Harry McCoy at the piano, who put over a number of the song hits that have made him one of the most popular composers of the day. Frances Ring and Lawrence Wheat put on a corking one-act sketch by Hector Turnbull, "Oh, Doctor." They were assisted by Jack Ward, Thomas Meighan and Russ Powell, and landed the sketch a sensational winner. Ruth Roland, the popular Balboa star, surprised everybody by her singing. She possesses a beautiful voice and sang with an artistry that was delightful. Harry McCoy presided at the piano for this number. Miss Roland need never worry about what to do if she gets tired of the screen. Mae Murray, the famous Ziegfeld Follies star, assisted by Stafford Pemberton, put on some dance numbers that almost caused a riot, and Theodore Roberts stampeded the house with two dramatic readings.

Victor Moore did one of the turns that have made him famous, and George Melford and Tom Forman, with James H. Horne and Louise Mineugh appeared in Robert Hilliard's famous vaudeville playlet, "The Littlest Girl," by Richard Harding Davis. It was beautifully done. To top it all the orchestra under the direction of Julius Bierlich showed just how good an orchestra can be under competent directorship.

George Melford was chairman of the committee in charge, and he may flatter himself on setting a standard for entertainment that few cities in the East or West will be able to equal. The only bad thing about it was that he did not let the Los Angeles public know of it. There is a gold mine for somebody in a repeat performance.

James Horne and all the rest of the Kalemites were on the job.

LASKY FOOLS COURT.

Anita King, Forbidden by Court to Do Hazardous Fall With Automobile, Does It Before Attorney Serves Papers—Laughs on Court.

The other day, out in Hollywood, there was much laughter. Said gurgles were caused by one demure maiden, Anita King, who can pilot an automobile across the continent and still live. For the motoring story, "The Race," which features the intrepid Paramount girl driver, a car is supposed to race along the roadway, approach a river where a bridge has washed out, and leap twenty feet into the waters, with the girl at the wheel all the time. This was all very well, but Anita wrote to her sister in Chicago that she had to do this stunt for the camera. The sister thought driving across the land was risk enough for the nervy miss, so she wired her attorneys in Los Angeles to enjoin the Lasky Company from allowing Anita to pilot the car over the brink.

On the day that the leap was to be made, Attorney Neil

McCarthy, of this city, phoned the studio that he had secured an order from the superior court, enjoining the producers from allowing Anita to do the stunt. The person who answered the phone said, "Surely, come out and serve the papers, we will be glad to follow your instructions." BUT meanwhile, the company was out near a suburban town where a bridge had been washed out by the recent rains, and the scene was made without any accident, Anita at the wheel. By this time the attorney was stretching his legs under the table in Mr. Lasky's private office, waiting for the head of the concern to arrive so he could serve his papers. But, lo and behold, the company returned from the location and the papers were served but the stunt had been done, so there was nothing for Mr. Lawyer to do but shake hands with the cool-headed Miss King and return to his office.

THE CHILDREN'S OPINION.

City School Superintendent C. A. Olney and several teachers will be busy for some time finding out "what's what and why" in the motion picture world, according to the children of the city grade schools and the Intermediate High School.

As a part of the Child Welfare Week campaign, a prize of two dollars is offered for the best composition written in the grade schools and in the Intermediate High School on the subject: "What Kind of Movies I Like Best, and Why."

The plan of the child welfare committee is to get the child's viewpoint on a matter that is most important in the shaping of children's ideas of life. The composition contest closed today. The teachers of each grade school will pick out the two best compositions on the subject from that school; about ten of the best papers will be selected from the Intermediate High School and a special committee will then go over these best works from the young authors and select the winners who will receive, in good cash, enough money to see twenty more pictures, presumably of the kind they like best.

We will endeavor to present a copy of the prize-winning composition next week.

INCE BUILDS MUSIC STUDIO.

To facilitate the difficult task of composing music for the big feature "He Who Returned," Producer Thomas H. Ince has erected, in the mountain fastnesses of Inceville, an improvised projecting room, with adjoining quarters for the young musical wizard, Victor L. Schertzinger. The structure has been built with a view to providing the composer with accommodations that will best enable him to perform his daily duties in an atmosphere of absolute quietude, instead of being intermittently disturbed by the unavoidable noises about the studio.

Twelve reels of film spectacle, constituting the finished production of "He Who Returned," the mighty peace subject which Thomas H. Ince has been making for the past ten months, were delivered, this week, into the custody of Schertzinger, who henceforth will devote his time exclusively to the arrangement of incidental music, preparatory to the first public showing of the feature. The work has been given Ince's final stamp of approval and an early premiere is now practically assured.

Schertzinger is now engrossed in what he declares to be the most responsible task ever assigned him. Since the inception of the Triangle Film Corporation he has been composing the incidental score of each Triangle-KayBee subject made under the Ince supervision, but never has he tackled a work of such importance as that of writing the music for "He Who Returned." He says, however, that he is confident of being equal to the task and of producing a score that will be a valuable asset of the spectacle. He attributes his confidence in a great measure to the inspirational possibilities in the production.

"I have seen 'He Who Returned' a number of times," said Schertzinger "and on each occasion I have observed numerous features that had escaped my previous notice. From beginning to end it is replete with wonderful chances for beautiful music. And the welcome fact is that it affords opportunity for diversity in composition. The battle scenes are without doubt the most vividly realistic I have ever seen on any screen and in this frame of mind I know I can proceed without having to draw on my imagination. I feel that my work will be pleasurable, in fact, any composer finds his work enjoyable if he is enthusiastic."

No further plans have as yet been adopted for the initial showing of the big picture. Adam Kessel, Jr., president of the N. Y. M. P., is still in Los Angeles, holding daily conferences with Producer Ince and it is expected that a decision will have been reached within another fortnight.

HORKHEIMER NEARLY BEHEADED.

President H. M. Horkheimer, genial head of the famous Balboa film concern which is producing some of the biggest features now being released, came near losing his life this week at Long Beach, the home of Balboa.

Being unwilling to assign any one to a hazardous task which he would not undertake himself, he came within a few inches of being beheaded by an aeroplane, the cinematographing of whose flight he was directing on the beach. It was during an aerial race between Aviators Christofersen and Daugherty.

A Balboa truck, with a moving picture camera mounted on it, stood a short distance in front of the artificial birds. On it were, besides the chauffeur, Mr. Horkheimer and Roland Groom, the cameraman. When the gun announced the race on, the truck shot out at a forty-mile speed. On came the fliers at sixty.

For some reason Christofersen's forward planes did not work properly and his machine failed to rise rapidly. Overtaking the truck in a very few seconds the birdman sailed over it, not a foot above the top of the camera. Although the men ducked they did not believe at the moment it would save them.

The beach was lined with spectators. All held their breath for it looked as if a tragedy was about to be enacted. Even while he bent low, the cameraman did not neglect the "grind," thereby obtaining one of the most realistic close-ups of an aeroplane flight ever recorded on celluloid. It will be included in a forthcoming Balboa release and, as such, give those "out in front" the same sort of cold thrill that went through H. M. Horkheimer and his cameraman when both thought that their last moment had arrived.

Directors of the Long Beach Chamber of Commerce this week made an official inspection of the Balboa studio. They were amazed at its completeness. Although the plant has been in operation almost three years now, it was the first first-hand knowledge many of these business men had of the big industry. That which is near at hand is often so common that people fail to look into it. On the same basis, tourists know more about California than most Californians. And so with the moving picture studios, people from far away can tell you more about them than those living in the vicinity. Norman Manning, Balboa's business manager, escorted the visitors through the plant, after which they were entertained by H. M. Horkheimer.

SELIG PLAYERS GO EAST.

Thomas Santschi, Bessie Eyton, Leo Pierson, Eugenie Besserer, Cecil Holland and other Selig players making a party of twenty-five under direction of Colin Campbell, left for Chicago Wednesday last week. They are scheduled to appear in "The Crisis," a feature play to be produced at the Windy City plant. This is the first time charming Bessie Eyton has been out of her beloved native state. It's also the first time in seven years that Thomas Santschi has been east of the Rockies, he being one of the small band of pioneers who went with Francis Boggs to California in 1908.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

After several weeks of scene shooting away from the studio, William H. Thompson, the veteran character actor, who is now appearing exclusively in Ince-Triangle plays, returned to Los Angeles from the rocky coast of Monterey, in northern California, where he enacted a number of scenes for the current feature in which he is appearing as star. Mr. Thompson in this story by C. Gardner Sullivan plays the part of the keeper of a light-house, a role which offers him unexcelled emotional opportunities. The company is now engaged in making interiors on one of the stages at Culver City. Walter Edwards is directing the production.

Hooray! After a month's absence in the East Jackie Saunders is once more at the Balboa studio. There is joyful news for Jackie's fan followers. She brought back a score of complete outfits of new clothes. They are such stunners that each one will be shown on the screen in Pathe Weekly.

Dick Stanton and a gang of light men, flare holders and extras, together with a corps of cameramen under the eyes of Ed Uhlman and Fred Granville, photographed an out-doors night scene on Broadway.

The film shows an election screen on a building, with a surging mass of people in the street below. Traffic was interfered with and automobiles were forced to nose their way against and through the vast crowd.

One hundred and fifty extras, spread throughout the vicinity of the action, led the crowd of curious spectators, who, realizing that they were going to be "in the picture," took up the action with great zest. I am safe in saying, because I was in the open window with Director Stanton, and yelled myself, that this will make one of the largest and most realistic scenes of its kind ever screened.

The old saying is that "It's an ill wind that blows no good," but modernize it and we can say "It's an ill rain that brings no good," for "Flooded With Trouble," and "A Rainy Day at the Studio," are two comedies which will come smiling out of these recent rainy days. Rube Miller, director of the Vogue for Mutual, saw no reason why all that water should go to waste, so far as art was concerned. He hurriedly mixed up a lot of typewritter ribbon with some paper and a few thousand feet of film and made a film comedy.

Los Angeles has now a Colored Picture Show. For the past few years the colored population round and about Central avenue have clamored for a theater of their own. The Angelus theater at 934 Central avenue has been secured by two colored gentlemen, Messrs. Gordon and Williams, and will open under the new management Monday this week. It will be conducted in a high class manner, and at the opening prominent people have been requested to make short addresses on educational subjects.

Cobb, of Saturday Evening Post fame, and George Horace Lorimer, editor of said publication, and Charles A. Van Loan, the baseball writer, are taking a brief vacation at the Grand Canyon. Mr. Meighan had also intended to join the party and his trunks were packed ready to go when he was called to appear with Blanche Sweet in "The Sowers."

Hobart Bosworth gave Robert Leonard a punch in the eye the other day and knocked him out. It was an accident and occurred during a game of handball at the Los Angeles Athletic Club. Bosworth and Leonard frequently limber up after a strenuous day at Universal City by indulging in handball and other athletics at the Los Angeles Athletic Club and they were playing at the time with David Kirkland and Del Henderson. Leonard ran after the ball on Bosworth's side of the court just as Bosworth struck out for the sphere. His hand collided with Leonard's optic and the big director was sent sprawling over the court. He was knocked clean out for fully five minutes. When Leonard recovered consciousness he said: "If I could only get as much punch in my stories as Hobart Bosworth has in his good right hand I would never have to worry."

Director Henry McRae of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company's Pacific Coast studios, created a sensation in Hollywood one day this week when he turned some lions loose on the lawn of one of the finest residences. To see the kings of the animal world prowling about the shrubbery and gardens gave an unlooked for thrill to anxious mothers and nurses of the vicinity, and there was a quick departure from the streets, doors were hurriedly slammed and windows locked. Inventories were quickly made of the youthful members of the families and many were on the point of sending to the police for help, but it was soon found that Director McRae knew his business and there was nothing to fear.

V-L-S-E Program

Contains Important New Lubin and Vitagraph Releases—Edna May Featured Among Them.

FROM the V-L-S-E comes the announcement that the famous Edna May picture produced by the Vitagraph Company, in which the former star of the widely-known success, "The Belle of New York," is featured, will be available to exhibitors on April 10. This is the picture which Edna May is said to have received $100,000 for appearing in. Its title is "Salvation Joan," and gives Miss May an opportunity to again appear in the role of a Salvation Army worker in which she won such widespread success on the stage The picture is in seven reels.

General Manager Irwin also announced that the title decided upon for the picturization of Albert Payson Terhune's novel, "Dollars and Cents," which elicited so much comment when it appeared in serial form in one of the popular magazines, is "Dollars and the Woman." This has been produced by the Lubin Company under the direction of Joseph Kaufman, and features Ethel Clayton and Tom Moore. It will be released on March 20.

"The Fires of St. John," produced by the same company, which Edgar Lewis has been directing in Florida for several weeks past, and in which Nance O'Neil is starred, is scheduled for release April 3. The picture calls for the fullest play of the star's dramatic talents, and because of the powerful story is said to be one of the most forceful productions which the V-L-S-E has released thus far.

Lubin will follow these two features with another Daniel Carson Goodman story, entitled "Life's Toll." Many of the scenes in this production were taken at the Ice Gardens of the Biltmore Hotel, and pictures some of society's cleverest skaters enjoying their favorite pastime. Other scenes were filmed in the Metropolitan Opera House in Philadelphia. The story is a big drama of a young woman's betrayal and the punishment meted out to her traducer.

E. S. MANHEIMER LOSES SON.

Leon Manheimer, aged thirteen years, son of E. S. Manheimer, president and general manager of the Film Exchange, died on March 8 of septic poisoning. In the sudden death of his son, after a brief illness, Mr. Manheimer suffers an unusually severe loss, for the manly nature of the boy made him an exceptional companion, beloved by all with whom he came in contact. Leon was an athletic, healthy lad with a remarkably alert mind. Mr. Manheimer always regarded him as his dearest pal.

Porter Returns from South America

Special Representative of Famous Players and Lasky Companies Has Spent Four Months Studying Conditions.

WHEN E. M. Porter, of the Famous Players Film Company, arrived in New York on the steamer "Byron" on Sunday last, he had completed a four months' journey of investigation through South America as special representative of the Famous Players and of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company. Mr. Porter's investigation of film conditions in South America showed that the large majority of motion picture subjects now being exhibited in the principal cities were imported from Europe, and that only a few inferior films were being exported by American picture men.

Mr. Porter states that the American producer has a great many ill-founded illusions concerning the film condition in South America, which must be eliminated before he can adequately cope with the situation there.

"During the course of my stay in South America I visited most of the principal cities on the Atlantic coast," said Mr. Porter in discussing his trip, "including Rio de Janeiro, Buenos Aires, Santos, San Paulo, Montevideo, Bahia and Rosario, and I can safely say that the average motion picture theater in these cities compares very favorably with the houses in the United States.

"One of the peculiar things about Argentine is the fact that there are more 'cinema bars' than theaters. These 'bars' are cafes in which films are exhibited, and these replace the usual theater in many towns, outside of Buenos Aires especially.

"Another peculiar Argentine custom consists in dividing the performances into four sections, each running an hour. When you purchase your ticket you state whether it is for the four sections or, if desire simply to drop into the theater for an hour, you buy a ticket for one section.

"Each of these sections consumes about one hour's time. But the performance seems longer than that because the managers there divide a reel which we ordinarily term a 'single reel' into three parts. The lights are flashed up for an instant, and the spectator has the unconscious impression that the performance is longer than is really the case. This attempt to create the impression of greater length films proves conclusively that the time is ripe for the exploration of four and five reel features.

"In Brazil, the very interesting custom obtains of having a huge lobby in the first class theaters. Here the patrons sit and listen to an excellent orchestra if they arrive during the middle of a performance, as they are not permitted to enter the house proper while the show is in progress. So generally is this custom in force that it has become a daily habit to array one's self in one's best clothes and to display them to the admiring throng. It has become, in fact, a veritable 'peacock alley.'"

During the course of his study of motion picture conditions in South America, Mr. Porter took the occasion to introduce several Famous Players or Lasky productions to the theater managers.

"I took Mary Pickford in 'Tess of the Storm Country,' Geraldine Farrar in 'Carmen,' Pauline Frederick in 'Zaza,' Blanche Sweet in 'Secret Orchard,' William Farnum in 'The Sign of the Cross,' and Marie Doro in 'The White Pearl.'

"These pictures were all wonderfully well received, and in many instances I was told by various individuals that they had no idea the American producers were turning out pictures of this exceptionally high grade. It later developed that the exporters of the foreign made films which now practically monopolize the South American market have taken great pains to give this impression concerning American films.

"One of the most interesting exhibitions which I held was that in the New Theater in Buenos Aires. Arrangements were made to hold the entertainment in the afternoon, and invitations were especially issued to the officials of the city, the most important exhibitors, and members of the press. An orchestra of eighteen pieces was engaged to play for the performance, and everything was arranged in accordance with our best precepts.

"As every one knows who is at all familiar with life in Buenos Aires, society there must have its tea at exactly five o'clock. Nothing is permitted to interfere. I believe that if the city were burning down, society would repair to the big hotels which were not actually burning in order to have its tea. I therefore planned to have the performance over by five, but various things interfered and there was still another entire picture to be run at five.

"The greatest enthusiasm had been manifested by my guests, among whom were the mayor of the city and at least fifty persons who were prominent in society, but I was thoroughly prepared to have them depart at the customary hour. But not one of them stirred! Every person in the theater remained until six-thirty—a fact which the manager declared to be even greater proof of their enjoyment than the applause with which they received the films.

"Of course Buenos Aires is celebrated as one of the greatest operatic centers of the world where all the internationally famous opera singers appear. It is here that Geraldine Farrar has scored one of the most distinguished successes of her phenomenal stage career. Particularly did she triumph in the operas 'Carmen' and 'Madame Butterfly.' It was natural then that Buenos Aires should have been delighted with the Lasky adaptation of 'Carmen,' in which the star repeated the triumph which she had previously scored in the opera itself.

"When it was learned that the Famous Players had made a photoplay adaptation of 'Butterfly' with Mary Pickford in the title role, there were many protests because the film had not been included in my list."

Though he was not yet ready to discuss the business details of his trip and the resulting arrangements, Mr. Porter declared that he considered the journey an unconditional success and that the information which he was able to gain at first hand was far more valuable than that which he had received from many sources before his departure. The films which he showed were everywhere pronounced to be infinitely superior to those which the managers were exhibiting, and it was only with the greatest difficulty that he was able to convince his spectators that the particular films which he had taken with him did not represent the exceptional but rather the average productions of the Famous Players and Lasky Companies.

Vivian Rich in "The Silken Spider"

JUST at this time, with the newspapers of the country carrying graphic stories of young women who, in a moment of trustfulness, yielded to the lure of an insincere love, the message of warning eloquently enacted by Vivian Rich in the three-part "Flying A" feature entitled "The Silken Spider," will be welcomed by indulgent fathers and mothers as a timely guiding message to innocent daughters against the remorse-building crimson path.

Vivian Rich.

Vivian Rich portraying the part of a motherless girl in an environment of luxury and high society, through whose veins courses the red blood of vivacious youth, in her search for life at its best, yields to the "lure" of an insincere man, and drains the cup of veiled poison, learning too late of her misplaced confidence. Disowned by her stern father, the young woman is saved from a tragic death by her hands through the interest of a young minister who proves to her the honesty of his love.

With Miss Rich as the daughter, George Periolat as the father, Alfred Vosburgh as the minister and Louise Lester as the young woman's stepmother, the cast is complete, and their efforts and abilities give to the screen a moral masterpiece, which was released March 7.

IDA MAY PARK'S LATEST—"THE FULL CUP."

Ida May Park, one of the Universal scenario writers, has written a story which at last satisfies her severest critic, namely, herself. It is an original five-reel feature, called "The Full Cup," and is being produced by Joseph De Grasse. For some time Lon Chaney, Director De Grass's talented character actor, had been importuning Miss Park to create a strong Italian character for one of her stories, and Miss Park has made this son of Italy the central figure in her story.

Lasky Defends Position

In Pictures Exposing the Evil of Drink Facts Are Not Distorted as Claimed by Liquor Association.

IN the resolutions unanimously adopted at the twenty-third annual conference of the National Retail Liquor Dealers' Association at Washington, D. C., in February there appears the following:

"Another unfair and dishonest advantage that is being perpetrated upon the liquor business is that of the moving picture industry. In the vast majority of displays of moving picture films portraying conditions surrounding the retail liquor trade have been so preposterously, untruthfully magnified by those operators who are paid vast sums by the opposition to our business for the purpose of developing to an unreasonable degree of untruthfulness displays of scenes of actual occurrences in legitimate bar rooms."

In view of the fact that one of the most widely discussed photoplays which bore on the evils of drink was "Kindling," produced by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, Samuel Goldfish, executive head of the Lasky company, states that he believes a denial that any ulterior motives prompted the production of this picture should be made in justice to the hundreds of exhibitors who are showing "Kindling" in their theaters.

In this Lasky production there is shown some of the degrading effects of unrestricted liquor traffic in the slums. The Lasky Company took every precaution that the scenes depicted, which now seem singled out for attack, should not lose their effectiveness by exaggeration and untruthful representation. Even before the photoplay was shown to the public several sociologists viewed it and enthusiastically indorsed all the scenes of tenement and street life.

Other producers besides Mr. Goldfish have voiced similar opinions since the widespread circulation and distribution of the reports and resolutions of the Washington conference.

DOROTHY GALLAGHER HURT.

Miss Dorothy Gallagher, who was recently engaged by David Horsley to play the part of Kara, the squaw, in the five-reel production of "The Hidden Law," featuring Margaret Gibson and William Clifford, was seriously injured while on her way to the studio on the morning of February 22, necessitating her withdrawal from the cast.

CLAWSON REJOINS UNIVERSAL.

Elliott J. Clawson, well known in Los Angeles photoplay circles, this week joined the Universal City scenario staff.

Prior to this move, Mr. Clawson was in the employ of the Morosco Company, where he was engaged to write feature scenarios for that company's production. Among the latest of his stories of note is "Madame La Presidente," in which Anna Held was featured.

Mina Jeffries

MINA JEFFRIES began her screen career as Mina Cunard, for she is the sister of Grace Cunard, the Universal actress-directress. Mina was born of French parents about twenty years ago. Like her sister she was educated at Columbus, O., She had no yearnings to go on the stage, such as assail so many school girls, although she was always interested in the theater from the point of view of the audience. Although she had had no previous training the family talent stood her in good stead, and her roles are growing in importance all the time.

Mina Jeffries.

She made her screen debut under the auspices of Francis Ford, who is co-director with Grace Cunard. One of her recent parts was in the Laemmle release, "The Living Lie," a three-reel drama of the Paris Latin Quarter, in which she did some fine work in the leading feminine role. She also appeared in the leading role in "The Quarter Breed," a Western three-reeler. Miss Jeffries is dark, with large expressive eyes, which betray her Latin ancestry, and has luxurious dark curls. She is an ardent sportswoman, a great rider and a good shot. She loves clothes and she knows how to wear them. Her French ancestry is apparent in the way she puts them on. She likes Western roles, too, in which she lays aside fashionable gowns for short skirts and simple shirt waists, and she looks just as swell in them as in the more elaborate garments.

CUB PLAYER'S BEREAVEMENT.

Following closely upon the death of his infant son, Louis FitzRoy received word of the death of his father at San Francisco, February 22, and immediately left for that city to be present at the funeral. Mr. FitzRoy is playing character parts in Cub Comedies and is also assistant to Director Milton Fahrney.

HOME OF DAVID HORSLEY, LOS ANGELES, CAL.

Though engrossed in operating his producing companies, contriving new mechanical devices, running for Congress, fighting censorship and doing numerous other things, David Horsley still finds a few moments to spare to look out for his personal comfort. Just now he is settling down in his new $50,000 home in Los Angeles.

Mr. Horsley says it is so cozy that when he leaves it, even for only a few hours, he experiences a sense of self-denial. It is a beautiful home. It is located in Gramercy Place, one of the finest sections of the city. The building itself is large and comfortable-looking, surrounded by broad lawns artistically laid out and dotted with trees, shrubs and vines. The interior has been furnished after Mr. Horsley's own idea and imparts an atmosphere of quiet coziness.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

THE town perambulator has before him a letter from a Middle West journalistic friend, who takes exception to one of our recent statements that the newspapers "reek with filth." He says the statement should have been qualified—that some newspapers, etc. This qualification he asks in justice to his own publication and others he has seen, although he admits that his time is too much occupied to admit of inspection of all newspapers. We cheerfully submit to his demand for an apology and agree to an amended statement that there are some newspapers that do not "reek with filth," just as there are moving pictures which partake of the same state of purity. Our western friend is one upon whose corns we did not intend to tread. Our remark was an artillery discharge against the general charge made by the pro-censorship people that moving pictures "reek with filth." So that our friend of the West may know just where we stand we will say the greater the circulation, the greater the capitalistic backing, support and patronage the newspaper has, the more filth may be found in its columns if officially censorized. Its wide-spread publicity and prominence is taken as a license to delve to the very depths of every family in the universe. Suits for slander, divorce and breach of promise are treated as natural adjuncts to that license. The lives of the participants, from birth to date of litigation, are dug up, turned over and put in print remorselessly, and the prints go into the households to be read by the father, mother and child without the least compunction of conscience on the part of the publisher, or the law-makers of the land. Even the so-called reformers read the accounts with avidity. They tell you they have a reason for doing so. Some say just such accounts based upon facts taken from real life gives them inspiration for sermons and guide them in their teachings to deter repetitions. We have known theological students who claimed that their tuition could have but one real finishing touch to qualify them for their calling, and that was practical experience in the field against which their life toil was to be directed. In fact, we have known certain members of the ministry to make the same declaration, and some very prominent members, too. Those of the latter who sought the field of work have, as a rule, either fallen helplessly by the wayside, or have received such a jolt from their supporting congregations that they quickly receded to their legitimate work and are now standing in their pulpits and by the Good Book. The students, as a rule, have managed to "get away with it."

But the (some) newspapers go on forever. They dig in the mire and turn up the filth. If a clergyman attempts to do likewise he is quickly written up as a trespasser and told to mind his own business. The law-makers take no hand to stop or curb the newspapers. The courts do nothing, and can do nothing, until there is a complainant. The newspapers have absolute license—the motion picture is allowed a bare existence. There is but one thing that stands between filth and its free publication, and that is not based in law, but on a court rule. "Sealed by order of the court." And it is in but rare cases that such orders are secured and the newspapers thwarted. "Sealed (or cut out) by order of the Board of Censorship" is the fatal hand that is arbitrarily laid upon the motion picture, backed by law. Is it fair, just, or equitable, that the illustrated press should be thus shackled and the remainder of the press allowed to go "scot free"? They speak of "the power of the press." It can exercise a stupendous influence for right, and frequently does; but unfortunately the power of the press in modern times has become an instrument of suppression of principle. Men who have done wrong, and are doing wrong, dare not come to the front, in spite of their conscience, fearing exposure which a well constructed press can make. Newspapers are no longer mere purveyors of news; but detective agencies with a license created by custom to make public all they know. They give the ins and outs with impunity and defy interference. If a law-maker attempts to curb that license the newspaper inspires a political movement that sooner or later makes him a political mummy. If the motion picture attempts to tell its story of human nature it is pounced upon by the Board of Censors. If by accident the picture gets by this board the exhibitor is pounced upon by the police, the Society for the Prevention of Crime, the Anti-Vice Society, the Board of Health, the Building Department, the Fire Department, the Board of Underwriters, and, if all these fail, the Bureau of Licenses puts him out of business. And behind all of this is the slimy hand of the so-called reformer who hoists his flag on the Fourth of July and shouts himself hoarse in the cause of "freedom of speech and a free press." There are newspapers that do not reek with filth either in the print of their columns, or the policies upon which they are conducted; and it is noticeable that the newspapers which do not come under this classification are those which have studiously avoided discussion of the constitutional status of official censorship.

There is one thing our western journalistic friend writes of which is entitled to some thought on the part of the publicity departments connected with the companies making moving pictures. He says the publicity men waste a lot of time and space by long synopses of subjects. These advance notices, he says, often unnecessarily take up valuable time of reviewers who wish to be fair and liberal, but must be guided by allotted space. Some "write-ups," he says, are so ingeniously constructed that they cannot be properly blue-penciled and it is necessary to construct a new one from them. "The short, snappy stuff is the stuff that gets through the sheet," says the writer. And he is pretty near right. Next to the steady and well-paying advertiser the best friend of the printer is the press agent who knows the shortest way home.

The chief topic of conversation in moving picture circles during the past week has been the contract Charley Chaplin is reported to have signed for the ensuing year. It is stated he is to receive a bonus of $150,000 and $10,000 per week, making a total of $670,000 for the year. Of course, there are many who say the real figures have been greatly magnified for advertising purposes, while others say that if he is to receive but $250,000 for the year he is more lucky than Rip Van Winkle was. Not having any personal knowledge of the reported contract, and not being connected with any of the parties connected with it, I am unable to say what Chaplin has signed up for, but from an opinion expressed to me by an old-timer in the moving picture business, I am inclined to believe that Chaplin is to get a sum nearer $600,000 than the smaller amount named.

This is what the old-timer said: "You may all doubt and smile about what Chaplin is to get, but you cannot get away from the fact that he has made himself the highest-priced man on the screen today. I don't care what he was, or what he got, on the stage. It is simply a question of what his screen value is today. He is worth $10,000 a week to any company that understands its business. The Chicago company that had him last year admits that after paying him an unprecedented salary they cleared $1,200,000 on his pictures, and it is said they still have in hand a number of subjects that have never been released and which will be "velvet" to them. No one claims that Chaplin is a great actor, yet the greatest actor that ever lived could not command the salary he can. If I was in a position to handle him and could clear $1,000,000 in a year I would cheerfully give him $500,000 as his bit. You must understand that enormous returns have been received on Chaplin pictures that cost but $1,200 to $1,500 to produce, and perhaps less. Many pictures produced during the past year have cost $30,000—perhaps much more—and the returns have not been near the sum received for the Chaplin pictures. The secret of the Chaplin success has been the filling of a great demand at minimum cost. The Chaplin pictures have demonstrated one thing to the moving picture world. The moving picture actor has but one standard to go by in fixing his value. It is not his experience or ability as an actor, but the amount of money his pictures draw. This is a cue to both producers and actors. It is not the acting, but the action. Every move must be studied to catch and hold the public eye and make up for the lines that are unspoken. Some of the best Chaplin successes are founded upon the most flimsy sketch stuff of a generation ago, yet Chaplin has by action—and continued action—made them mints. I will go still farther in support of my claim that Chaplin is worth $10,000 a week and concede that his pictures will drop off a third during the ensuing year. This would leave the net profits of the producers about $800,000. Take out of this $670,000 for Chaplin's bonus and salary (disregarding the fact that last year's quoted profits were in excess of the salary paid Chaplin) and the producer has a net profit of $130,000, or close to 20 per cent. on the amount paid Chaplin."

Spokes from the Hub

By Marion Howard.

AT THIS writing the Hub is enjoying two rare treats in "Diplomacy" at the Park and "What Will People Say," at the Fenway. Marie Doro and her new "hubby," Eliott Dexter; Frank Losee, George Majeroni and the entire cast have all been heard on the oral stage in "Diplomacy," the first two with the all-star cast featuring William Gillette and Blanche Bates. This is one of the most effective screen versions of all, and a credit to the ones who made it. As the play concerns international spying the theme has added interest at this time. The "Newlyweds" played their former parts without a flaw, and it was a joy to watch them in the big scene. Petrova, in "What Will People Say?" again fills the eye and we do not miss the words one little bit, such is her power in pantomime. Fritz De Lint as the young naval officer made a big hit here, and Fraunie Fraunholz in a difficult part was the artist all through—but what a bout that was between the men in descending the stairs taking the rail along! A man who looked like a prizefighter sat near and "whooped her up" with a shout "Get him, Boy!" and how he did chuckle when the fight was over. All these interruptions only add to the "gayety of nations" and do no harm when they arouse the house to laughter. Petrova wears stunning hats, but they seem out of place at a private ball. I want to pay tribute to Alice Blache for her work in directing this film, with so much consistency and beauty of detail. Again we see the pets—this time a small black kitten held closely. The play might have been called "Mrs. Grundy." Comedy is furnished in the house party episodes around the kitchen scenes participated in by the guests as servants were minus.

It is good news over here to learn that H. Cooper Cliffe has returned to an earlier love—the Metro family—and that he will once again be seen with Ethel Barrymore, for we recall vividly his fine work in "Final Judgment." He made himself solid round here in the speaking play years ago and more recently as "Nobody" in "Everywoman."

* * *

The Park is giving us the Burton Holmes series of travel pictures and it is a joy to see them. Last week we were taken up the Hudson to West Point and saw the work of the cadets in their various evolutions. There was unusual enthusiasm in the house, especially when the colors went by.

One of the best pictures shown us of late was "He Fell in Love With His Wife," one of E. P. Roe's best sellers and admirably done by Florence Rockwell and Forrest Stanley, who had an altogether different part from his last here—the priggish clergyman in "Tongues of Men." The matinee girl fans did not relish the fate of Page Peters., who is a favorite, and one impulsive one exclaimed "How horrid to throw him over that cliff, it must have hurt him terribly." Why undeceive the dear creatures! Romance and sentiment abound and the poor widower's experiences on the servant girl question were intensely amusing, Lydia Titus with one exception taking the lead in character work, and that one was the slavey, who had no mention in the cast but who well deserved our pen praise for not overdoing it. The farm scenes were exceptionally good and great praise is due the director for careful attention to detail. One thing marred the production and that was the hideous lines spoken behind the screen, and frequent exclamations. This is an added nuisance at this theater and not duplicated elsewhere—happily. We want our pictures in silence save for the music and that should be toned down. This house has an exceptionally good organ.

I saw a dear little short subject the other day called "Golden Lies," an Essanay offering with Bryant Washburn doing a fine bit of work in the line of self-sacrifice in order to prolong the life of the woman he loved and who had been stricken blind. She, however, did not return his affection; in fact, did not know of it, being in love with his scapegrace brother, a cad of a chap, who deserted the girl when she was stricken and went out of the country. She, not knowing of this, began to decline rapidly and nothing would console her, so a plan was concocted whereby the brother masqueraded as the lost one, wrote letters to her and wedded her. All came out happily, thanks to the girl's intuition. I would advise young folks to see this for its lesson.

The travel films are a delight always. I hope the picture showing the President and Mrs. Wilson entering and leaving Memorial Continental Hall in Washington will be seen by the D. A. R. everywhere, as the building was built by and for the "Daughters" all over the land. The party enters between the Virginia and Massachusetts column—two of the thirteen representing the original colonies and which face the Pan-American Building. They leave by the main entrance and one gets a fine look at the First Lady. As they vanish we are shown that eccentric person, Dr. Mary Walker, congratulating a young girl on having won the prize for her paper on "Preparedness"—the subject before the meeting indoors that day.

When we see the names of William or Dustin Farnum in a cast we may be sure of something well done, so I was prepared for the treat given us in "Fighting Blood." Particularly good is the photography, for we never once got away from the atmosphere, and a debt is due Director Apfel for the multitudinous details. There was a lot of human nature and red blood all through. The one thing that impressed us was the sudden conversion of Big Bill, capitally done by Willard Louis. This happened as a result of a fight with the parson, who is full of fighting blood (rightly inherited from his forbears) and is an athlete as well. No one previously had dared tackle Bill, who became after this the best friend the parson had during trying times. It had a good ending and there were many side scenes dealing with the story worthy of special mention.

In showing fashions why not select pretty actresses all the time and not those lopsided models who are too self-conscious by half. Recently we were treated to a sight of Arline Pretty showing the new high hats and she did walk offstage like a human being. Then we saw Lillian Walker ("Dimples") of "Green Stocking" fame wearing stunning gowns gracefully and smiling naturally.

In addition to one long subject, usually a Paramount, the Exeter theater is running short Universals on Sunday nights to large houses. Recently we saw "The Widow's Secret." J. Warren Kerrigan, who took the leading part, did it well. Mary Talbot made the mother stand out prominently, and the visions of her early married life were presented in a natural manner. The play is full of mother love which prevailed over all else,. including the wiles of a naughty siren. It is an old story well told, and one will not soon forget the closing picture of mother and son. On the same program we were shown a Pathe colored reel of Northern Holland with those wonderful windmills and picturesque water ways—to say nothing of the Dutch kiddies in quaint attire. The coloring left nothing to be desired—except more of them. Then we took a trip to Japan and saw some beautiful dances by the geisha girls, one with flags. For a comedy we had "The Whole Jungle Was After Him," a take-off on the man who brags of his alleged hunting in the wilds. In this we had a glimpse of the Universal City caged animals and during the story of the man (Othello fashion) the scenes were depicted showing that about all the wild animals in sight were killed by him. His room was decorated with skins (hired from a dealer) to give zest to his tale of conquest. Doubt was engendered in the mind of the heroine, out for a brave man, and so she called next day with a real tiger much to the embarrassment of the man who faced the jungle terrors (in his mind) and proved his undoing. Not much to write about, but it was too well done to be overlooked and showed skill in directorship. "Esmeralda" was the long story, and "Little Mary" has a strong following—no matter what she plays. Another good reel was "Her Steady Carfare," a neat little comedy naturally well done, especially by young Ray Gallagher and Betty Compton, a dashing pair.

GAUMONT SIGNS MISS GERTRUDE McCOY.

To its list of screen artists of stellar magnitude now at its Jacksonville studios, the Gaumont company now adds the gifted Gertrude McCoy. Miss McCoy is a great motion picture favorite both in this country and abroad, and her acquisition adds material strength to the roster of Gaumont players. The announcement of Miss McCoy's engagement does not come altogether as a surprise, since it was recently stated that the Gaumont policy in its five-reel productions would be to star photoplayers already famous upon the screen.

An Argument Against Federal Censorship

(From the Chicago Examiner, February 21.)

PENNSYLVANIA has a state board of censors for moving picture films. Recently these sapient guardians of the public ordered the Chestnut Street Opera House, in Philadelphia, to cut out seventy-five feet of film because they contained pictures of Kaiser Wilhelm and Field Marshal von Hindenburg. The board of censors says that it acted under authority of the statute prohibiting scenes that are "sacrilegious, obscene, indecent or immoral or that tend to debase or corrupt public morals."

The first impulse is to laugh at the ridiculous officials who are able to discover something sacrilegious or obscene or injurious to public morals in photographs of the German Emperor and his celebrated Field Marshal. By the same ridiculous mental process another equally absurd board of censors would forbid showing photographic likenesses of King George or King Albert or President Poincare. In fact, there would be no limit to the asinine decree a sufficiently asinine board of censors might promulgate.

It is for this very reason that the Examiner earnestly protests against the bill in Congress to establish a National Board of Censors of moving pictures. We maintain that the freedom of occupation and the liberty of publication would both be violated by such a censorship, and we cite this very Pennsylvania incident as ample proof that such violations of fundamental constitutional rights do actually occur when a small number of citizens are given arbitrary power to control the amusement and the instruction of their fellow citizens.

There is no reason to doubt that a federal board of censors would be just as arbitrary as a state board of censors. For it is the inevitable result of bureaucratic authority that the bureaucrats become species of petty tyrants—a sort of two-for-a-cent Czars, who usually wind up by adding corruption and bribe-taking to their pompous and absurd exhibitions of irresponsible authority.

Now the moving picture is at once a school, a university and a public press, and by every dictate of common sense, as well as by the commands and guaranties of the Constitution itself, it should be left at perfect liberty to exercise its tripartite function of amusing, informing and instructing the people. The laws which regulate other schools and other publications are in full force to regulate the moving pictures, to punish license and obscenity and viciousness—and those laws are ample and sufficient as they stand, without any censorship whatsoever.

We protest against this proposed censorship of the moving picture press on the same identical grounds upon which we would protest against any proposed censorship of the printed press. The constitutional arguments against one are on all-fours with the constitutional arguments against the other. But the moving picture is not only an entertainment and an instruction. It is also a moral force. It makes people innocently happier. And innocent happiness is as important to the best development of fine character as any other influence or virtue. More especially is the usefulness of the moving picture evident in the smaller communities, where, from the very force of the circumstance of minor population, the broadening influences of life have been somewhat lacking. The residents of these smaller communities now have brought directly to them the liberalizing effects of travel, of foreign scenery, of the customs and habits of other peoples, of the social conditions of the wide world. We can imagine nothing else so liberalizing, so instructive, so formative of character.

To be thus liberalizing, thus uplifting, thus popular, the moving picture must tell the truth and must be ALLOWED TO TELL THE TRUTH. And it will NOT be allowed to tell the truth if it is ever subjected to the restrictions of narrow-minded and stupid and bigoted and arbitrary censors. As Thomas Jefferson wisely and nobly said, the best governed people is the least governed people. Our famous Declaration affirms the right of every human being to "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." And every one of us has the inalienable right to choose the happiness that suits him best, subject only to the rule that he must not injure others.

So we have the guaranteed right to read and to talk as we please and to believe as we please and, as a natural corollary, to seek such entertainment of the eye as pleases us in the moving picture theater. This is not a privilege, conceded by any Congress or granted by any board of censors. It is an inherent, inalienable, natural right, a part of our existence, born with us into the world.

Just as each one of you has the absolute right to select and to read the newspapers and magazines which best please you, so each one of you has the absolute right to choose for yourself what moving pictures you will go to see. The only rightful board of censors is the public itself. And it is a board of censors which can be thoroughly depended upon to make bad pictures unpopular and financial failures.

The whole theory of our national life is that the majority of the people know what is best for the people and are entitled, of right, to have their way. The theory of a censorship is that the majority of the people do not know what is good for them and must not have their way, but the way prescribed for them by a handful of wiser overseers. We shall resist that un-American theory of government and social life, in whatever form it shows its ugly features, as long as the Examiner is printed. In the name of individual liberty, in the name of the constitutional guaranties, in the interest of good citizenship and of public happiness and education and advancement, we protest to Congress against this undemocratic, un-American, reactionary, bureaucratic proposal to institute, in this free country, a Russian censorship over the amusements and instructions afforded to millions every day by the admirable device of moving pictures—the most effective entertainers and teachers the wit of man has ever conceived.

METRO ACTOR INJURED.

Niles Welch, the popular juvenile actor, is in Fordham Hospital, New York, suffering from injuries that almost resulted in his death. Mr. Welch is working in the Metro production, "The Kiss of Hate."

Mr. Welch was playing the role of a Russian soldier in the hills of Westchester. He was directed to hide behind a huge boulder and when another player came along on horseback to spring out and stop his horse. Mr. Welch did as he was directed, but as he sprang out to grab the bridle rein the butt of the rifle the rider carried struck Mr. Welch squarely across the forehead. He fell to the ground and was unconscious for five hours. Both of Mr. Welch's eyes were closed within a few minutes, and for a time it was feared that he had sustained a fractured skull.

Mrs. McGabb Comments.

(Mrs. McGabb and her bosom friend, Mrs. Simms, invest ten cents each, saved by shopping for bargains, in a picture show to "rest up after the battle.")

Mrs. Simms.—Ain't this a grand thee-ayter, Ella! Look at them artificial flowers planted in front of the curtain! Ain't they natural!

Mrs. McGabb.—Yes. That makes me think: I wonder if them red artificial roses I got to re-trim my hat are goin' to clash with my cerise dress—the one I wear Sundays. You know, I didn't think of it until this minute. I meant to of got blue, but they were eleven cents apiece and the red ones only nine, and, besides, the color was brighter in the red ones. Dear me, I hope I'm not goin' to have to trudge way down town here again to change 'em!

Mrs. S.—Listen, Ella, the people right in back are talking about you!

Mrs. McG.—Talkin' about me? Well of all the fresh things. I s'pose makin' remarks my bein' so stout?

Mrs. S.—No, only you've forgot to take off your hat!

Mrs. McG.—So I have! And, Josie, I just pinned that hat right on my head when you run over to ask me if I'd run down to the stores with you, and I ain't combed it since breakfast! Oh, well, nobody knows me in here, and if they don't like the looks they can look at the pictures. That reminds me: I meant to of got a frame for that picture Henry had took in his lodge uniform so's we could set it on the dining-room mantel. I never see him look so grand as he did the night he come home with it on after the parade. If we should have war he'd make a grand general. It had gold lace—that makes me think: did you see that lace they had for nineteen cents a yard? If I'd known a blessed thing I could have done with it I'd got a yard. I wish now I had; it might of come in handy for something.

Mrs. S.—Look, Ella, ain't that ballroom scene swell! Did you ever see such gowns! I wonder if they're made of real expensive material or just some cheap stuff made up to look rich in the pictures?

Mrs. McG.—That reminds me: those gowns we saw in the store for $11.98! They looked real good in the showcase, but when I had that red-haired clerk take one out for me to look at do you know, Josie, it almost come apart in my hands—and I was only pullin' on one of the seams to see how stout they were sewed. It ripped a good inch, but her back was turned, so I didn't let on. And, as stout as I am, get me into one of them cheap gowns and I wouldn't dast stoop over in it. But I wouldn't buy one anyway at that store. I bought a summer dress there once and it was a little mite too snug for me in the bust and hips. I only wore it two days and half the seams was ripped out, and just because I forgot to put dress shields in they wouldn't take it back!

Mrs. S.—Ain't this scene pretty, Ella! He's come out on the balcony lookin' for her. I wonder what he'll say when he gets around the corner and sees her huggin' and kissin' that other man! I wonder do they take these pictures by real moonlight?

Mrs. McG.—I don't know, but if my young Willie was here he could tell you. It's amazin' how much that child knows about movin' pictures! How he picks it up I don't know, but he can tell you who the different actors are even if they have whiskers one minute and the next minute nothin' at all. Which makes me think: did you see that gown that woman was tryin' on this afternoon? The "V" come down so far in the back that it almost met the one comin' down in front. Of course, I couldn't wear one of them anyway in the winter with my red flannel underwear which I have to keep on on account of my rheumatism; but it would be all the same if I did. I'd be blushin' so that no one could tell but what I'd kept it on.

Mrs. S.—Oh, look, Ella—they're fighting!

Mrs. McG.—I've had all the FIGHTIN' I want for one day! The way those women acted around the counter that had them waists on sale for eighty-seven cents! I'll bet I've got black and blue marks all over me. They didn't have no more manners than a goat. Why I had to push a woman with all my might sos' I could get that size 42 before she got her hands on it. Good Grief, Josie, five o'clock. If we don't get out of here my Henry won't have no supper and he'll be cross as a bear! I like this place, don't you? It's so restful in here after a day shopping.

Mrs. S.—How did you like the pictures?

Mrs. McG.—The pictures? Good Land, Josie, I don't believe I remember what a single one of 'em was about!

HUMANE MOVING PICTURES.

THE American Humane Society, together with the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, recently offered a prize of $25 for a moving picture scenario which would best inculcate lessons of kindness to animals. Out of nearly fifty manuscripts received from writers in all parts of the United States, the one written by F. P. Swain of 177 St. Botolph street, Boston, was awarded the prize by the committee. The story centers in "Danny," a little "newsie" whose impulsive kindness is expressed in his dramatic efforts to protect dogs and horses. This picture, while commendable to the benevolent interests of the Humane Society, is also an acknowledgment by them that the moving picture is the greatest educational force they can use besides being the most powerful propagandist for their noble purposes, making the moving picture the educator of humane deeds.

Manufacturing Educational Films.

We are in receipt of a most welcome letter from J. T. Edwards, F.R.G.S., of Alameda, Cal., in which he gives particulars of a new enterprise for the production of films suiting all classes of educational work. The enterprise is indorsed and encouraged by many educational authorities in many parts of the country. "The work in the studio at Alameda is devoted exclusively to scientific and educational purposes—the object being to have this type of motion picture made in surroundings that are in keeping with the importance of the work; also to have different departments of education and science in the charge of persons whose knowledge is essential to this type of film," says Mr. Edwards. "Apart from the work in connection with the production of films, it is our intention to collect from the various scientific and educational societies throughout the world copies of films that would be of interest in this country and as far as possible to exchange our films for theirs—thus giving publicity and an exchange of ideas which cannot fail to be useful. Films under construction at this moment are a film dealing with the Montessori system, showing the entire work in connection with it, forming a most interesting and beautiful film in connection with the development of early childhood. Another subject is a film dealing with the geography of the State of California, particularly intended to show the navigable rivers, mountain ranges, means of communication, the area given over to cultivation, etc. These pictures will be of considerable interest and value in connection with geography."

Mr. Edwards favors us with a number of photographs of the studio and workrooms of the new plant. From these it is evident the concern is a most thorough one, well equipped and up to the times in every respect. We wish them every success in the venture and are glad to record another distinct advance in educational moving picture manufacture.

Educating Commercialism.

It is no new thing to read of moving pictures being used for commercial purposes. It is, however, somewhat new to find that they are being used in a sort of educational propaganda along distinctly commercial lines.

For the purpose of bringing New York more prominently before the people of South America a series of pictures are proposed which shall so present the city and its surroundings as to make it both attractive and alluring for either pleasure or business. According to the published idea, a certain New York hotel is arranging a scenario which shall serve the purpose of advertising the hotel as one of the most suitable stopping places in New York and it is also having views of the city shown upon the screen. As is common under such circumstances the plot is woven around a love theme and introduces a newly married pair from South America who make this hotel their stopping place. Their program of visiting New York is necessarily a most thorough and elaborate one. It is the purpose of the owners of the film to have it shown well throughout South America for the manifold purposes of causing other travelers to both visit New York and stay at the same hotel; no doubt this plan will have its good results. It is stated that a young man conversant with the South is to "cover" the country, making a visit to every possible theater and hotel where publicity will avail.

Thus the drama, the moving picture, scenic attractions and commercial advantages are interwoven in one common cause for mutual advantage.

Educational Value of Sunday Exhibitions.

It seems worth while to refer again to the question of Sunday picture exhibitions, only because it is very evident that the true and educational value of the moving pictures are being much hindered by a constant bickering over this matter. At the present the writer has before him about a dozen newspaper items from as many different parts of the country which have as headings "Opposition to Sunday Pictures," "Crusade on Sunday Movie," "Quarrels Over Sunday Shows" and "Victor in Sunday Movie Case." All these titles are a sad reflection on the whole matter of the proper use of Sunday moving picture exhibitions, and cannot fail to have a prejudicial effect upon the desired advance in the great benefits which we are always claiming for the moving pictures. Moreover, those who engaged in provoking these controversies should stop to consider to what extent they are helping or hindering the better growth both of the picture and the opinion of the public relative thereto.

In the first place it is a pity that the undesirable designation of "movie" should be attached to a Sunday exhibition. It is at the least undignified, if not positively vulgar, and is therefore entirely opposite to any educational purpose which a Sunday exhibition is sought to convey. If exhibitors will see to it that this word is abolished in so far at least as it is used with reference to Sunday exhibitions they will have taken the first step toward that respectability which they profess to acquire. This should be done in a positively open and if necessary an advertised manner. Refuse to have a Sunday exhibition slandered as a "movie." In the next place, let it be an ambition of exhibitors that the Sunday program shall be of such a nature that even the most fastidious cannot criticise. Safety lies here in the fact that educationalism must be the fundamental principle of that program. After this the most important thing is to endeavor to plan for and to earn the support of those of diverse views rather than to antagonize them. The law courts are poor places from which to secure good feelings in a small or even a large community. To seek for and to establish a community spirit is the best and highest ambition of those who are not in immediate accord on the question of Sunday exhibitions. There is no law on this matter which is of universal application. The city differs from the town, and the town from the suburb, and yet there is a law of adjustment which is very wide and capable of every possibility which can be used where there are wisdom and toleration. The old "Get Together" principle is one which has done much good. It is better therefore that the moving picture shall be taken from the court of quarrels and established in the court of harmony. These comments are written with the firm conviction that the question is one for the advancing of the best good of the moving picture, which is here especially along educational lines.

THE SILVER INDUSTRY AND THE MOVING PICTURE.

That the Silver Industry is important to the moving picture industry is emphasized by the "Metal Mining Industry," which states: "There are about 20,000 picture houses in the United States, using approximately 120,000,000 feet of film regularly. The average life of a film is but several weeks. Silver salts, used for sensitizing, are lost forever on being exposed to the light. It is estimated that 15,000,000 ounces of silver a year—equal to Utah's total production—are used for this purpose. A combined industrial picture, showing the silver industry and the moving picture industry would be another valuable addition to the Industrial series."

Advertising for Exhibitors

News Posters.

WILLIAM LORD WRIGHT, of the Selig Company, sends in a very attractive poster gotten out for the Selig-Tribune news film. The poster is a one-sheet evidently patterned after the contents bill of the London newspapers, but more carefully done and printed in red and black on white, about the most striking combination possible. It stands out well from the pictorial paper with which it may be surrounded and it gives a rapid and comprehensive survey of any number. As evidence of the care shown in its preparation, the bills are not dated, so they keep alive (as much as a news film can) for those who use a delayed service.

It's N. G.

Bill ("William") Swanson got the National Guard of Utah to work in with him on "The Battle Cry of Peace." To him it was an advertisement for the film and to them it was a means of recruiting and advertising the Guard. All they did was to keep a rapid fire gun in front of the house and have some of their men there to distribute preparedness circulars. But don't ask your own militia to help you advertise the film. Offer to help them advertise the guard.

Doesn't Like Snakes.

Here is a letter from Steve Farrar, of the Casino, Eldorado, Ill., which is worthy the attention of manufacturers. He writes:

> I want to ask you a question: why in all that is for the betterment of the pictures, do producers allow their directors to use snakes in the pictures they produce? It seems that directors right now have the "snake craze." This week I have had three films with snakes used in the stories, and to top it all off in "A Night in the Show" last night there was a whole basket full of them for Chaplin and the company to play with. I know from experience that snakes on my screen are repulsive to at least 90 per cent. of my audience. I know of one case where a woman was a regular patron of mine for years, and one night she saw a film with a whopper of a snake in it, and for six long months she never came near a picture show. I have yet to see a picture where it helped the plot to introduce a snake in it. How do you feel about it?
> Well, business is good, but I am working myself to death. I am depending almost entirely upon hand bills of my own make up for advertising. By experience I have found that this kind of advertising appeals to my class of patrons more than any other kind I can use. You will notice that I put a big scare head on my bills and then follow it up with some descriptive stuff; if they don't want to read all the bill, they can get what is on at the Casino by just a glance at it.

We have explained to Mr. Farrar that there are few inventive directors and that when one of them gets a good idea all the others copy it, which is why the pictures are not so good as they used to be.

Steve is friendly with his opposition and they scrap in a nice sort of way that entertains the towners and does not hurt anyone, so when his competitor started "The Girl and the Game," Steve dug up a Kalem Helen Holmes and advertised her as "The Game Girl," putting one over very neatly. He is using attractive lines on his bills, but he does not get vicious or lurid. He does not overstate or misstate. He just gets a startling headline and then tells the facts, laying the emphasis on the comedy or the sensation in the pictures. This is better for his coal mining clientele than would be a more polite form of announcement.

Graft?

Looks like Tom North was getting to be a real newspaper man. Get this from the last issue of Pals:

> WHAT GROWS IN YOUR SECTION?
> This office was the recipient of two boxes of the best apples we have ever had a chance to eat, and while we have always had a soft spot in our hearts for PAL Mercy, it was nothing as compared to the feeling we have for him now. From now on he is "declared in" and we are all for him stronger than ever. Thanks PAL. We sure enjoyed them.

And at that he is entitled to all the fruit as well as the bouquets that came his way. That tricky headline is commended to other exchange organ editors.

Anniversing.

The Square Town Electric Theatre, Brooklyn, Mich., has been celebrating its fifth anniversary. Apparently they sold a course ticket for the three special programs for twenty-five cents, though no explanatory letter accompanies the ticket. They also use a souvenir folder, printed on excellent stock. The front is well displayed, but the printer evidently had no fancy faces for body type. For an anniversary try and get something a trifle more ornamental than a straight roman, but on the other hand curb the printer's tendency to use a face so ornamental that it cannot be read in the mass. The only real comment that is to be offered on this program is that there is nothing beyond the title page to signalize the anniversary. Some sincere little message of thanks to the patrons would have carried weight. The Square Town has been an infrequent visitor of late. They used to be welcomed quite often.

Enjoy a Look.

When you plan a program take some copies of the department over to the printer to give him an idea of what you want. Lately we reproduced the inside pages of the Lehigh Orpheum, South Bethlehem, Pa., but here is a recent front page that needs only the dated days and the town name to make it complete. Add those, but note the excellence of the display. The design is drawn, but a really clever printer can get almost as good an effect if he has something besides letters in his cases.

Considerable Presswork.

It has been told that the Franklin, Oakland, Calif., gave a special show for the naval cadets at which the Mayor and other notables turned out as a reception committee, but from later papers that Rex W. Midgley sends it would seem that the press stunt has a snapper. The Mayor ordered out the police and gave the order to the Chief. The Chief went to the Commissioner who said he was not going to turn out the police every time the Mayor wanted to get into a moving picture, and now the whole town is talking about it and of course the Franklin, as the innocent cause, gets part of the mention. The house stands to net press work that will be measured in yards instead of inches.

Started Right.

Stage and Screen, a new house organ published in Bath, Maine, in the interest of the Bath Opera House and Columbia Theatre, was born with teeth and whiskers. The first issue is as neat and as newsy as many sheets are after considerable experience. It is a clean looking sheet. When you see it, you think you would like to look it over—and so you do. Then you ask for the succeeding issues. There is a complete absence of the breaks that might be expected in any first issue.

It talks about the house and the attraction and gives some general talk, but it is all done readably. There is a lack of superlatives, but a note of sincerity that is far better. You feel that the offering must be good and yet "splendid," "marvelous," "gigantic" and the like are missing. In the first issue there is an appeal for assistance of the patrons in making the houses to their liking. It is so well worded that it may be of use to others who know what they want to say without knowing how to say it.

> No doubt there are little things which arise from time to time which you think we should know, should do or should not do. It is those little things we want to know about. If there is anything connected with our theatres or our productions which can be improved and made more to your liking we want to know it. That's why Stage and Screen urges you to send to the management such suggestions as you may have. They will at least have careful consideration, and if they can be adopted rest assured they will be; if they are not feasible we shall be only too glad for an opportunity to explain why your ideas are not put into practice. In other words, we not only desire your patronage and good will, but we want your co-operation as well. We want every reader of Stage and Screen, and every patron of the Bath Opera House or Columbia Theater to take a personal interest in us and our offerings.

An appeal like that reads as though it were meant and not put in merely to help fill up. About the only thing that the paper yet lacks is an editorial department. This would give a real return in effect if done along the same lines.

Helping the Cranks.

With the majority of the exhibitors trying to do away with offensive censorship conditions, others seem to be doing all they can to aid those who contend that there should be censorship. Look at this advertisement which is taken from the house organ of a man who should know better; a man identified with the exchange and for a time the manufacturing end. It may make him a few dollars and cost him, and others, hundreds. "Inspiration" is not an exploitation of nudity and the picture is apt to disappoint those who are attracted by the advertising.

Putting on Style.

The neatest book of samples that has come to us in a long time is sent in by Geoffrey Jefferson, Winona, Mich., who has been running pictures in the State Normal College at Ypsilanti, Mich., on Fridays and Saturdays, but the teachers wanted an all-educational program and we gather they are running the show themselves. He sends in a scrap book neatly lettered in pen work, quite a work of art, but he is not showing off his pen-craft as much as his advertising. He writes that he has tried to make them different—and not black. The avoidance of too heavy type faces is desirable, but Mr. Jefferson does not seem to have caught the trick of putting a punch into his advertising. He gets a good display, and in this the compositor seems to have worked in with him, but he trusts too much to titles and to his press work. One four column advertisement, eight inches deep, carries only this:

The SPLENDID SUCCESS of the Pease
Auditorium
Photoplays
Last Friday and Saturday evening is
A PROMISE of what is coming next Friday and Saturday.
THE LION OF VENICE
Friday
THE BANKER'S DAUGHTER
Saturday

Of these lines "Splendid Success," "A Promise" and the two titles are in large type. To back this up the press matter reads:

> "The Lion of Venice" and "The Banker's Daughter" are two entertainments certain to prove attractive. The former is particularly interesting for several reasons. The scenic effects obtained by Kleine in his production of the play are drawing cards, and is the the very setting of the drama—Venice, Italy. The fact that it is now within fifty miles of the great European conflict is an added point of interest.

There is not enough here to pull people in. There is nothing said to create a desire to see the performance. That there is fighting going on a half a hundrd miles from Venice will not enhance the entertaining value of a play supposed to be located in that city. Nothing is said as to the nature of the play attraction. There is no punch line. Twenty-four column inches are used to tell two titles and nothing else. Advertising serves two purposes. It tells what you have and it makes people desire to see your attractions. There is neither punch nor pull in an advertisement that merely tells you to "Buy your tickets now for Officer 666." It does not tell that the farce is a big Broadway hit, that there are six hundred and sixty-six laughs or anything of that sort. It merely tells you to buy tickets, but does not tell you why. Mr. Jefferson does as well as the regular photoplay theatre in the town, which has the same bald style of announcement, but by doing better he could have a house of his own.

Udell's.

Dave Udell sends in some more of his advertising matter for the Majestic, Paxton, Ill. One of the advertisements is introduced here because the display helps the text. Mr. Udell works in with the printer and most of his stuff shows up unusually well. In addition to the copy

People will say, "Bread, meat, fruit and vegetables are necessities of life." They are. So are homes, railroads, telephones, telegraph, etc but the real, true and genuine necessity of mankind is Pleasure!

Without pleasure a community becomes deadened, hopeless and ignorant The person who has no pleasure usually dies young and is subject to all sorts of diseases.

The greatest means of furnishing pleasure is the properly managed moving picture theatre.

shown here he sends in other good starters, most of them following the form of the reproduced advertisement and giving the top of the space to the attractor and the remainder to the house announcement. One reads:

Apple Butter, Limburger Cheese, Corned Beef and Cabbage; Also Onions

> You couldn't sleep very well at night with a piece of Limburger cheese under your pillow; still they say it isn't bad stuff to eat.
> There is nothing better than APPLE BUTTER when it is served up right and flavored according to your grandmother's dictations.
>
> CORNED BEEF and CABBAGE for breakfast, dinner and supper, year in and year out, perennially forever and ever, become decidedly awkward and hard to take on.

Equal Dispensation

> Of food, no matter how small the quantity (smaller the better), keeps the liver parallel and the appetite aforemast. Your sails can stand more fresh air seasoned with a little onion—especially at this time o' year. And so on—you know—really.

An Educational Reel, a Good Human Interest Drama And a Lively Comedy

> Composes an excellent amusement bill o' fare. You cannot become tired of one and the same thing—the minute one thing commences to bore you "to death" something else takes its place.

For Example.

> Tonight we have THE ANIMATED WEEKLY, current events, war news, Hy Mayer's cartoons, etc.: "THE MASKED SUBSTITUTE," a two-reel drama featuring Wm. Dowlan and a cute comedy, "SAVED BY A SHIRT," with Billie Rhodes and Ray Gallagher doing the saving stunt. This makes a diversified program consisting of many features.

This is no more than saying that the house offers a well balanced show, but it says it in a way that sinks in.

Nothing Doing.

H. B. Gray, of the Royal, Carroll, Iowa, sends in a program for suggestions, adding that the printer is human and willing to change to get the best results. We'd like to give Mr. Gray a whole lot of suggestions, but about the only real comment we can offer is that he slip a piece of lightface rule under each dated day. It would give a little touch of finish. The rule should be less than one point. Outside of that the only comment is that it is not a vest pocket, being too large to go into the pocket without folding, but that is merely a quibble. It is 4 by 5½ inches, light blue stock printed in green. The front is nicely gotten up, though the top line might be a shade smaller to permit the house name a little more white space. The hours of performance are boxed in and the admission prices are below this. The box serves to throw up the time table and at the same time obviates the necessity for cut off rule, always objectionable on a front page. Inside each day is paneled and on the back is a little smart house talk. Both Mr. Gray and the printer have done their best and they can stop worrying. It is only their second issue, but it is about as good as they can make it. Mr. Gray says he reads this department every week. Evidently he not only reads but understands it.

Just One Need.

The Lyric, Covington, Ky., sends in a copy of its house organ, a sixteen-page booklet called the Reel Revue. It offers plenty of general reading matter along with the talk of the current films, but so pretentious a sheet should have an editorial page. There is too little house talk, though they play the films up well. The film subjects are by no means all there is to a motion picture theater and some space should be taken each week for chats about house policies and kindred topics. People may like a house without knowing precisely why. Tell them that they may tell others intelligently. Give them definite reasons and then when someone else wants to know what sort of a house the Lyric is, they can pass the reasons instead of merely saying that it is "pretty good." The formal program should be thrown down and a better arrangement made. It is a good plan to use trade mark cuts where they will work in well, but the arrangement here is not good. The cut overbalances the small space allotted each day's attractions and the result is poor largely because there are seven cuts on three-fourths of a page.

Getting Busy.

Steve Farrar wrote that he was using only dodgers for the Casino Eldorado, Ill., but at his house in Harrisburg, Ill., the Orpheum, he is using page advertisements to get things started, with Triangle, V-L-S-E and Fox plays and what he calls a "real" orchestra. That is going pretty strong for a 9,000 town. It is a well planned advertisement, not showy, but large and legible, though one slip is in using the name of the house but once and that only in a six line letter. It is a good plan to use the house name top, bottom and in the middle where there is plenty of space and to make it stand out, either through the use of a large face or through the handling of white space. Outside of that it is decidedly well done.

Stunt Stuff.

Here are a couple of stunts from the V-L-S-E Clansman. If L. J. Scott isn't careful he'll have Kansas City down on him. We refuse to believe that the Kansas Citizenesses all wear knee skirts, and we do not believe in asking the patrons to ballyhoo for the house, but the suggestion that girls be hired to wear green stockings is a good one, particularly if they wear long skirts but hold them in such a way that it is clearly apparent from the front that the color may be determined from the rear. Then let them wear signs on their backs. "Rubber! If you want to see Green Stockings, go to the Dash theatre."

> A little help from some of the girls who attend your theatre will enable you to clean up on "Green Stockings." If you know them well enough to ask a favor, well and good—if not, then advertise for a dozen young girls. Offer any reasonable inducement to get them to wear the "Green Stockings" you will furnish them for a period of three days prior to your exhibition date. With dresses at the knee length, as they are now, everybody in town will be asking everybody else. "What the dickens is every girl in town wearing "Green Stockings for?" It will do the business—take my word for it.
> Every time you use a new idea in advertising you strengthen your hold on your patrons, as well as increase their respect for you as a live wire.
> Here's a bet you can't afford to pass up.
> Every girl dotes on keen shoes and never has too many pairs. When you start to push "My Lady's Slipper," go to your leading shoe man and arrange to pull a "Cinderella contest." It may not be entirely new in your locality, but it will make a hit.
> Select a small size of the swellest pair of slippers in his stock—preferably a new style. Fix up a beautiful window display with the one small sized slipper, the central figure.
> Offer the pair free to the girl who can wear it.
> The merchant will no doubt gladly furnish the slippers if you will advertise it Call it "My Lady's Slipper" contest. Decorate the window with photos from the play and pictures of Anita Stewart and Earle Williams. Close the contest the day before you show the picture and your newspaper will feature the contest and the winner. You will have everybody in town talking about it, and the merchant will sell every pair of slippers of that style.
> How about it?

Building Up.

The Rowland and Clark theatres have been adding to their string and the newly opened Strand in the Oakland section of Pittsburgh is the newest to come in on their combination program. The first issue is marked by a salutatory in excellent taste, dignified, but cordial and sincere, and then they run their houses to match the program outlined. In a recent issue of their Regent program they print a letter from a woman asking that the program be sent and saying that she goes to a house nearer home but pays carfare equal to the cost of admission to go to the Regent because of their better programs. That is the sort of advertising that counts and the omission of the name of the other house makes it clear that it is not a rap at an opposition theatre. That's the sort of testimony that counts.

The Bleich Secret.

George A. Bleich of the Empress, Owensboro, Ky., is a born manager, a man who does things well instinctively and who has developed that instinct into an art. He holds the confidence of his patrons and he does it by playing fair with them. Note this extract from a recent program:

> NOTE!—No extra admission price will be charged for this attraction. While the picture is a new one, is in big demand and is costing a big rental sum, and while I know double could be charged and secured easily, it is never my purpose to charge extra except I give you real value. "Jeanne Dore" is a good picture, it is NOT poor, but it is far from being great. Without Mme. Sarah Bernhardt it would be ordinary. Hence, no advance.—BLEICH.

Then when he does put the price up, he does not have to argue with the entire town that it is worth the money. They feel that it must be because he has said so.

He takes particular pains to advise his patrons as to the starting times. There is a schedule of starting hours and any departure from that time table is printed in the announcement of that particular subject. As he is running all features, this is important. Few managers realize that they can get the best out of their features only by telling their patrons when the first reel will be run. Many persons stay away from feature houses merely because they can never be certain when they can start with the opening act.

Three-House Now.

The Trail Magazine, the house organ of the Star, Trail, B. C. has been changed over to the Owl and will include the other houses of the O-Row-Nay circuit, the Orpheum, at Fernie and the Gem, at Nelson. The new issue is a 9 by 12 inch four pager and it will take a little time to get it in swing, but with a three house support it should be no time at all before it come into an eight or twelve with a real news value. One paragraph stands out in the initial issue. Here it is:

> Nelson will be visted, on Feb. 7th with "The Birth of a Nation" film. While this will NOT play our theatre, we are glad to commend it as a wonderful example of the Motion Picture Art. People who see this will understand what we mean when we advertise—"Not 'Movies' merely, but 'Honest to Goodness Photoplays'."

It takes nerve to praise the other show, but it pays if you are big enough to come out and boom for something big even if you do not have it yourself.

It is much the same spirit that prompts N. M. Trafton, who was credited with getting out the Trail to write in and give acknowledgment to W. A. Burton, who actively edits the sheet. With the three house combination and three towns to draw to, they should be able to get enough advertising to get out something more than a house organ. They can make it a local institution if they run it as they did the Trail.

A Good Yellow.

N. A. Goodridge, of the Thompson, Denver, sends in a couple of programs for criticism. They are four pagers, three by six and one-half, yellow stock printed in red. The combination is good only when the stock is right. Most yellows are a sickly shade, but here the stock is brilliant and showy and with a strong red ink it stands out well. The right shade is about that of the Spanish flag and if it starts to run off into a green it is better not to use it, for nothing is worse than a greenish yellow unless it be a yellow-green. The program is not elaborate, merely announcing the titles and the dated days, as a rule, but it works well and does all that is required of it. The back page is reserved for house talk or underline as choice dictates. It would be a good plan to split the page and run a short but strong house talk each week, setting in an eight point. The front page carries a cut of some player of the week and comment on the play, but this front page item does not add "to be shown here Wednesday" or whatever the day may be. It is not really necessary, but it would help a little.

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticized, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is enclosed.

Something for Nothing.

LATELY one of the popular magazines wrote up a woman who has made a quiet but decided success of her work. It gave her address. Immediately she was made the target by literally hundreds of boobs. She writes:

> The letters were interesting in a way. I never realized how "light" an opinion was held of the work, before. With about three exceptions, the people who wrote treated the work as a huge joke—with a check attached. A few letters showed a serious idea of the work and hence my request for some slips about your book, which I can enclose. I have written "get Technique of the Photoplay and study it" until I can write it backward with my eyes shut. And the mournful part of it is that I am now getting answers to most of the letters I wrote and a great many of them say accusingly "I can't afford to buy them books I seen advertised. Won't you learn me to write?"

And there you are. They cannot afford to sink money into a text book, but they can waste postage chasing after prominent writers and ask them to stop their profitable work and conduct a free school.

Half the time the people who write never mean even to try. They just like to write letters. This may not be understandable to many, but it is a fact. They have no correspondents. They like to get letters. It makes them seem important in their little country town. The successful playwright owes it to those who have helped him to pass along that aid, but he is not required to reply to every boob who in some manner comes into possession of his address.

Perhaps You, Too.

Herbert Blackman, enclosing a clipping from one of Herbert Kauffman's editorials in which the latter says "Since you have regularly received the same verdict of incapacity, why not begin to wonder if you aren't wrong?" adds his testimony:

> It is not hard to remember back to the days when I felt that the editors were all a set of bone-heads or thieves or worse. I was a long time learning the truth of the stuff in this little article. But I never won any success until I decided that the kicks I was getting in the "Bump Academy" were all deserved. I still get these kicks—plenty of them. But now, they mean to me that I am on the wrong track and I welcome them just like an engineer welcomes the red flag that saves him from a wreck. The guy who swells up when he gets a bump in the writing game ought to be disqualified. Selah!

Mr. Kauffman was not writing about photoplays, but he hits right where the photoplayers live. If you can't sell scripts it may be that the scripts and not the editors are wrong.

Once More.

One of the New York City branches of the Y. M. C. A. is to have a school of photoplay under the guidance of Henry Albert Phillips. In the press work sent out Mr. Phillips uses the same old gag: "I can teach anyone how to write a good photoplay," he burbles, "but since I am speaking for publication I want both to limit and expand the significance of that statement." Mr. Phillips can neither limit nor expand his statement. He cannot teach "anyone" to write a good photoplay. That is all there is to it, and the several hundred words he adds do not help at all. He can, because he is competent, guide the development of those who are qualified and earnest, but a Y. M. C. A. should not get itself into a class with the fake correspondence schools with any such misstatement as that "anyone" remark.

Ones.

Just because you know that nothing but five reels are in demand now, do not lose the trick of writing to the thousand feet limit. The time is coming when we shall have those back and there will be just as agonized a demand for these as there was for the five reels when the book and play supply began to give out. To keep up with the procession you must learn to write any length required, for there will probably always be a fluctuation in the market. They get tired of fives and turn to ones. In time they get tired of ones and turn to fives, just as slapstick lately had its second time on earth and is due for another widespread revival in 1918.

Starting Off.

Did you ever see a professional diver enter the water from the edge of the tank? There is no splash, just a clean-cut cleaving of the water. That is the way the author should slip into his story. There should be no fussing and fooling around, no labored explanation nor minstrel parade of characters. The explanation of the people and the premises should be given in the action and not before that. If you really are an author you can do this. If you cannot, you are not yet an author.

Listen to This.

When you are positive that there is something wrong with the editors because they do not take your stories, stop and wonder if there is not perhaps something wrong with you. Perhaps you are in the same boat a correspondent was a few months ago. He tells his own story:

> I feel greatly indebted to you for what I can realize is the progress I have made during the year I have been working—not such a great progress, perhaps, but enough to enable me to start off the second year with the sale of a five-reeler for $200, which probably is not a big amount to the real writers, but is certainly most encouraging to one who had grown very much accustomed to the printed rejection slip.
> After about six months of fruitless work, I became convinced that the real trouble with me was that I had no conception of the fundamental principles of the drama and the story building art. I, thereupon, quit sending out any stuff for several months and studied drama. Since then I have read some fifteen books which treat of the technique of the drama and short story, the most valuable of which, to me, was William Archer's "Playmaking." Another excellent work I have just completed is Chandler's "Aspects of Modern Drama."

It may not be a study of dramatic technique that will pull your stuff through, but if it does not sell there must be a reason, and it is up to you to find out. You cannot do this by sending to a revision company. All they will tell you will be to send them three and a half for revision and two dollars for typing. You must locate the trouble yourself and find out wherein your stuff fails. If you will find and mend the break you can sell, even to the five reel length.

Fancy Work.

Too many of the features resemble a patchwork quilt more than they do a play, but that is no reason why, in your scripts, you should carry to an excess the use of cut backs, close-ups, vignettes and all the rest. When a jobber finds that his goods are not selling on their merits, he does them up in fancy wrappers and gets rid of them. In the same way the producer tries to cover up his lack of story with a multitude of effects. Do not follow a bad example and do the same thing yourself. Write a story and you will not need to resort to such things.

Loose Leafs.

Although we told novice writers to keep away from the loose leaf style, they are trying it and one enthusiast sends in seven different forms, and then, just to show he knows all about it, he writes two or three short scenes on one page to "save room." A scene to a page is a scene to a page and not several scenes to some pages. Loose leaf stuff will not impress the editor unless properly and perfectly done and the proper way is the most simple. We use only one style of printing for cast, synopsis, costumes and scene plot, one for inserts and leaders and one for the action, three in all. Three colors are used, cherry for the advance information, white for the action and green for the insert sheets, the colors being employed to show visually the difference, a green sheet shows itself to be an insert for the scene that follows. Loose leafs should be used ONLY when asked for and not as a regular submission. They eat up paper at an alarming rate, particularly when a carbon is supplied, and a carbon should be supplied. A four hundred scene play will use close to a thousand sheets of paper. Don't fool with the loose leaf until you have not only arrived but have made it evident that you have come to stay. Then you will not need advice.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to the editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surpised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 129.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

How many sprocket holes are there to each ¾ inch of film? Ought all sprocket holes in all films to be the same shape and size? What shape do you think best, and why do you think it best? What thickness of film do you find to run best on your machines? What is the effect of thin film stock?

Operators' Union Directory, I. A. T. S. E.

Notice:—Each union is entitled to have its roster of officers, meeting night, etc., listed here once per year, free of cost. Preserve this list as it will not be republished. The mail address of the secretary should be included, and the address of regular meeting place, if any.

Local Union No. 182, Boston, Mass.

James F. Burke, president; Nat Max, vice-president; P. J. Young, financial secretary; John Fullick, treasurer; William C. Franke, business agent, and recording secretary, 119 Pleasant street. Meetings held first and third Fridays of each month, at 119 Pleasant street.

Amberlux Lenses.

The more the writer examines into the performances of the "Amberlux Lens," the more he is convinced that it has considerable very genuine merit. It is one of the few moderate-priced things that seem to really deliver the goods, in that it softens the light without destroying its brilliancy. As I have many times pointed out, the attempt to soften the light by means of coloring the condensing lenses most decidedly is not a good proposition, nor have I ever agreed very heartily with the tinting of screen surfaces, but the Amberlux lens seems to obtain the desired result without objectionable cutting of light brilliancy.

Well, this is a new one, and I guess, in view of the desperate situation of Brother Stricker, we will have to get enormously busy. Isn't it perfectly awful, Mabel dear, when even the rats evince a desire to absorb projection lore.

Now Wadda'y Tink o' Dat.

John Kinney, Amsterdam, New York, says:

> Could you tell me the best all-round book on moving picture operating and electricity? I had one of your books in New York, but let a young man friend have it, and it failed to come back. Do you think it is all right, and will answer the purpose? Do you know of something better? Please, as a great favor, let me know at once.

Now here is a good neighbor who deliberately invites me to use a hammer on my own proposition. Fine stunt that would be, wouldn't it? You might get me to look into the business end of a gun all right, but I'm darned if I'll pull the trigger at the same time. Seriously, however, I don't know of any work calculated to be of any large benefit to the moving picture operator in his practical every-day work except my own handbook. I should say that it certainly must be all right, because, though there were 10,000 copies of the last edition sold, there has never been a single kick registered by a purchaser. The second edition is, however, exhausted, and the new one won't be out for some weeks yet. I would advise you to get the new edition of the Handbook and Hawkins' "Electrical Guide." That combination constitutes the best operators' library I know of. Those who wish to go further may, however, add "Optic Projection," price $3.00.

New Sheet Steel Operating Room.

The Grinden Art Metal Company, Brooklyn, has evolved and is now ready to place on the market an all-metal operating room. They have presented this proposition to the Department and we have carefully examined into it; also we have watched the room assembled and disassembled.

The room is made of No. 18 and 20 gauge soft sheet steel, and is really a remarkably clever piece of work. By a series of semi-automatic locking devices two men are able to put the room together, complete, including the door and its spring, in less than five minutes and two men can take it down (sounds incredible but nevertheless true) in three minutes.

From this don't get the idea that it is a flimsily constructed affair, however, for when assembled the construction and locking is of such ingenious character that the room is very solid and rigid.

At present the room is only designed for traveling exhibitors. Boxed for shipment it occupies a space approximately six feet, six inches long by two feet wide by about eighteen inches thick and weighs approximately 550 lbs. I can recommend this room to the consideration of traveling exhibitors.

The Grinden Company are considering placing the room on the market for permanent installation, but before I could recommend it for that purpose quite a number of changes would have to be made, and moreover I would have to see the room tested in an actual theatrical installation. The two points I am not certain about is whether or not it would be warmer than some other type of room, and would it be more noisy, or in other words act somewhat as a sounding box. I dont mean to say, or even insinuate, that this would be the case, but merely that these are two points which only a practical test could clear up. I don't think however, that either one of them would apply to any appreciable extent to the traveling exhibitor's room, because the traveling exhibitor's operating room is of necessity very small, and as a rule cannot be connected to the open air for ventilating purposes. It is therefore, in any event, rather warm, regardless of what the character of its construction may be; also the traveling exhibitor's operating room is too small to exhibit sounding box effects in any appreciable degree.

Prepare for the Worst.

Leon Brantley, Nacogdoches, Texas, says:

> Well, I have finally mustered sufficient nerve to "go to" those questions. Here are my answers to 118 and 119. And now prepare for the worst—I am going to try to answer some more; also I shall not get angry if you merely laungh, and throw these two in the waste basket. The poor waste basket has got to be used for something so ——.
> I have only one complaint to make, and that is the condition in which we receive our films from Jacksonville, Texas. It is something awful. Nothing unusual to find from twenty to fifty feet of a reel wadded up in the bottom of the can under the other reels, and we literally never get a film that has been rewound. The following expresses my opinion better than I can write it: ! ! % — & ' (*) ?.

Brother Brantley, if I had you here I would call you names! Here you bring to my attention a particularly atrocious case of exchange mismanagement, and don't say one confounded word which will enable me to get after the thing. Why in the name of Gehenna didn't you tell me whether it was General, Universal, Mutual service, or what? Then I could grab off a handful of Mr. Exchange Manager's hair.

As to your answers to 118 and 119 they showed you to have a very good idea of the points involved. But don't send your answers in so late. Get busy—and that applies to some of the rest of you, too.

Springfield, Illinois.

At Springfield, Illinois, I was met by a committee headed by Brother John Caldwell, President Local Union 323, and made comfortable at the hotel, Springfield has about fifteen photoplay houses, most of them of the "store room" type. Many of these stand in need of very decided improvement, both as to interior decoration, operating room, operating room equipment, and results on the screen. It seems to be the old story of too many small houses. There were, however, two, of those I saw, which could be justly dignified by the term "theater," one of these being a large, tastefully decorated ex-vaudeville theater. Its principal trouble lies in the very steep angle of projection, made necessary by the placing of the operating room at the top of the balcony. Its manager is, however, trying to overcome this handicap and doubtless will succeed, at least to some extent.

I am told that every manager and operator in the city was present at the meeting, and they certainly listened with close attention to the hour's talk I gave them, although some pretty plain language was employed in the endeavor to awaken them to the importance of high-class projection, better equipment, and less damage to the films.

The committee who had the affair in hand consisted of John Caldwell, President Local Union 323, Elmer Harris, Frank Palmison, Walter Bryner, George Hopper and John and William Hopper.

St. Louis, Mo.

For a long time I have had an idea that the St. Louis men, taken as a whole, were not overly cordial to the editor, or the department. I found this to be the fact, but believe that a personal meeting and exchange of views has altered this attitude, which was the result of a lack of understanding of what we are trying to accomplish. I find this almost invariably to be the case, by the way, when an antagonistic feeling exists. Once let the men get a clear understanding of our views, aims, and purposes and, except for a negligible precentage, I find that not only does resentment and opposition cease, but friendliness and a desire to co-operate takes its place. Now don't misunderstand me with regard to St. Louis. I already had warm friends in that city, but I now have many more.

At the depot, with the glad hand of welcome, I found International Vice-President Canavan and Brother Sam Caporal, fully equipped with a four-wheeled consumer of gasoline, owned, by the way, by Friend Caporal—class to St. Louis operators, huh! Secretary Stone was to have been there, but got tied up at the last minute.

Thanks to Ray D. Lillibridge of the village called New York, I received at Chicago a card entitling me to the privilege of the Racquet Club, but upon discovering that this was the St. Louis millionaires' club—the very ne plus ultra of St. Louis swelldom, I, while feeling duly grateful to Friend Lillibridge for his kindness, promptly vetoed the proposition in favor of that old standby of the traveler, the Planters Hotel, which is plenty good enough for any ordinary quill pusher, and possesses the advantage of being near union headquarters.

At the office of the Local Union No. 143, I met Brother A. L. Stone, secretary, whom I am proud to know for the reason that he is a broad-minded, broad-gauged man, and, by the way, I have met many of that kind on this trip. In fact, I have been very greatly encouraged by the improvement in projection everywhere, and, more than that, by the distinct improvement in the men themselves. Instead of the usual more or less (usually more) irresponsible, devil-may-care bunch of overgrown kids, which was the rule a comparatively s ort while since, whose conversation mainly consisted in more or less vulgar profanity, and whose most serious occupation seemed to be to upbuild and maintain a reputation as consumers of malt liquor in quantities, I found a large majority of the men to be sober-minded, clean-cut fellows having respect for both themselves and their profession. There is still, however, a large number of operators who have but a faint, hazy idea of the height, depth and breadth of their calling and of their responsibilities to the public and the industry. That is to be expected. These men blunder along by rule of thumb. True, many of them get fair, or even very good results on the screen, but usually these results are obtained at unnecessarily large expense; also, as a rule, the results thus obtained could be considerably improved, and the better results secured at a material reduction in operating expense.

St. Louis Union Officers.

Seated—Wm. F. Canavan, International Vice-President and Business Agent L. U. No. 143, and John Nick, member Executive Board, L. U. No. 143.

In the evening, Brother Canavan and I visited a few of the downtown houses, in some of which I found the very limit in absolutely rotten operating room equipment and conditions, with the to-be-expected poor results on the screen. In all the downtown houses I saw, the screen result could be much improved. Those operating "rooms" (God save the mark) I saw were unspeakably dirty, had, in some instances, iron-covered floors without even the suspicion of an insulating mat, small, badly placed observation ports, and the "equipment"—Oh, well, it is a joke to call it by that name. I found one pair of Edison Model B heads with the old, small lamphouses, and four-legged wooden machine tables. In fact, that was all the kind I did see downtown, though I only visited two operating rooms. One of the "theaters" I viewed ought to be promptly closed by the Board of Health. The stair was frescoed (beautifully frescoed, if you admire that variety of art) with all the varying tints possible in tobacco juice. The floor was literally filthy. The picture was "fuzzy" and far from even an approach to brilliant, though the operator was getting much better results than there was any reason to expect under the conditions. For myself, I would not work in that nasty hole, miscalled an operating room, with that utterly impossible equipment, for any money that you could name.

In my visit to the downtown houses I met Brothers Lee Coombs of the St. Charles, C. J. Mulcahey of the Broadway, and Jim Word of the Dixie. The latter house has the screen at the front, between the entrance and exit doors—a highly objectionable arrangement, once required by a crazy St. Louis ordinance, now, thanks be, wiped off the books. The "equipment" consisted of two Edison Model B machines, bought second-hand recently, installed in a—a—a—well, I haven't a fit name at hand, but really I lack the nerve to call it operating room. You reach "it" by a ladder consisting of two rough 2 x 4's, across which have been nailed wooden slats. This grand staircase is just leaned from one floor to the other, without being fastened at either end. Quite classy! Brother Word's second-hand projectors are driven by two small motors and the whole "rigging" came with outfit just as I saw it. Brother Word carries the machine crank in his pocket. Why, do you ask? Well, it's like this. The motors which drive the machine are connected in series with the projection arc and every time Word trims his lamp he stalls the motor, whereupon out comes Mr. Crank, bing! on it goes, and Friend Word becomes temporary first assistant to the motor. It is said he has become so proficient that he can, from a standing start at four feet distance, connect the crank in one and one-twenty-seventh of a second. But the joke of it all is, if Word gets sort of careless-like and allows a "tit" to form on the negative carbon the resultant high resistance speeds up the motor until the shadow actors on the screen flit to and fro like flying ginnies gone mad. Think of it! Sarah Bernhardt, Mary Pickford, Anita Stewart, etc., etc., compelled to chase around like water bugs gone crazy.

At the New Gem, Sixth street, Manager-owner T. P. Goll showed me, with very evident pride, several stunts he has himself invented and installed. One consisted of an automatic Register Flasher, consisting of a tiny lamp inside the auditorium, beside the entrance, which is so connected to a pay-as-you-enter coin receiver that it flashes every time an admission is sold. The advantage is that the usher knows how many are about to enter; also the manager can tell, at a glance, from any part of the house, just what is doing at the ticket office. Outside, over the sidewalk, is a bell, connected in similar fashion. It rings every time an admission is sold; also about twenty feet above the walk is an automobile headlight, which flashes when an admission is sold, so that Brother Goll may be half a dozen blocks away on Sixth street, and still know whether or not the nickels are coming in with satisfactory regularity.

One thing I saw in the St. Louis houses which is especially bad. Downtown some of them are giving as much as a ten-reel of nothing-over-ten-days program for five (5), count 'em—1 1 1 1 1 cents, and uptown they are giving the same or more for ten and twenty. This, gentlemen, is, if you will pardon me for butting in, pure unadulterated insanity. It is miserably bad business from any and every point of view. You have educated your public to expect fully twice what they are entitled to, and almost three times what they receive in many cities. This policy reacts against you, not only in service cost, but by surfeiting the patrons with an overdose of pictures, thus reducing the times-per-week of his attendance. Many people will "go to the movies" two or three times a week to look at a well projected four-reel or five-reel show, at ten cents, who won't go more than once if given seven, eight or ten reels at the same or less price.

Of course, if St. Louis managers should cut down now they would have to all do it by mutual agreement, and attendance would undoubtedly suffer temporarily. After a short time, however, it would increase to much more than its present proportions.

I have spoken of the bad, now let us change to a more pleasant topic—the good. Brother Canavan and Your Scribe boarded a deep sea trolley and motored out to 'Steenth street, in the comparative suburbs, and visited two really splendid examples of moving picture theaters (all except the operating room), viz.: the New Delmar, managed by Mr. Ben P. Stromberg, a man new to the business, but nevertheless a real manager. The New Delmar failed miserably, but Friend Stromberg recently re-opened it, and if you had seen the crowd there at 10 p. m. you would have removed your chapeau to the man who, knowing next to nothing about the amusement business, could take the management of a house where an experienced manager had made a dismal, utter failure, and in a few short weeks place it on a paying, prosperous basis.

The New Delmar seats approximately 900. It is 58 feet wide, and the entire ceiling is one broad arch, reaching from wall to wall. This arch is panelled and beautifully decorated. The effect is most excellent. The decorations are in pink and old ivory, but the lights are green, which gives a pleasing, restful general effect. The projection, by Brother George Hart, was good, as it must be in a house of this class, and should be in all theaters. The equipment consists of two Power's 6A's. I am told the operating room is not very good. Why, why, WHY will supposedly capable business men erect so really splendid a house as this—splendid until the very heart of the whole thing, the operating room, is reached, and then suddenly drop from the sublime to the ridiculous???

From the New Delmar we went "around the corner" to the "King's theater," on Kings Highway. Both at the New Delmar and the King's theater a string of automobiles were lined upon both sides of the street, and at the King's I counted them roughly. There were fully one hundred autos, ranging from Fords to Packards, lined up at the King's theater, awaiting the end of the show, and the return of their moving picture theater patron owners!

King's theater is a magnificent example of a moving picture theater. Its wide front was a blaze of light. It seats 1,954, at 10 and 20 cents. Mr. David E. Russell is manager, and let me add that both Messrs. Stromberg and Russell are most pleasant and business-like gentlemen, with whom it is a real pleasure to converse. The program is fourteen reels of Triangle—twice too much for the money. Mr. Clay Tabler and Harry Yager are in charge of projection, and they certainly are delivering the goods. From what I saw these men ought to receive, in a house of that kind, in a city the size of St. Louis, forty dollars a week. You are demanding and receiving high class projection, Brother Russell. I don't know what you are paying, but, as a purely business proposition, you should, and I believe do know that the reproduction of high class photoplays in a high class way, in a theater where almost 2,000 patrons must be satisfied and pleased, is worth fully twice as much as the manager of the two or three hundred seat storeroom "theater" pays, and that, in St. Louis, would be very considerably more than the sum named. You very properly demand high class work; very well! I'm glad you do. BUT you should, as a mere matter of justice, be willing to pay the price, and, broadly speaking, in the long run, it will pay you to do it. I am using you, Brother Russell, merely to make a point which applies equally to Friend Stromberg, and all really high class, large houses everywhere.

Later: I am told that per hour the King's theater men receive a trifle more than $1.00 per hour on the day watch, and a trifle less than $1.00 on the night watch, which is at the rate of about $48 per week for an eight-hour day.

The King's theater has a seven-piece excellently trained orchestra. The picture is 16½ feet, the distance of projection 137 feet, to a Minusa screen, and the men in the operating room must understand their business pretty well, for they are getting a really brilliant picture with a long focal length lens, using a G. E. Mercury Arc rectifier, which means that their amperage is under the 50 mark, hence their lens system is well matched.

The only criticism I found was the overspeeding of a Keystone comedy. This is the usual practice with Keystone comedies, but that does not excuse making a galloping horse move at an utterly impossible, ridiculous speed, which is merely absurd, not funny, and it is up to the operator, even though under orders to speed such films up, to be "on the job" and reduce speed at such points.

Those of the St. Louis operators whom it was my privilege to meet were men of prepossessing, thoroughly good appearance; men who ought to be in the lead for progressiveness and advanced knowledge of their profession. One expects opposition to advancement from the "rough neck" element, but not from the type of men I met in St. Louis, and I have faith to believe the St. Louis men will be among the progressives in future days.

One of the men, Brother Paul Werner, told the editor confidentially that he had a serious kick, howl, or grouch against his "other-shift" partner. In fact, he believed he had three combined. Said he: "You see, Rich, its like this: that son-of-a-gun is always from five to fifteen minutes late in relieving me." Well, said I, while that is annoying, but not very serious, therefore—— "Nix, Rich, you've got it wrong! It is very serious. You see I've got my stomach so regulated that"—— but the editor left just at that point. I felt it would unman me to remain and hear the whole tale.

One thing I saw while in St. Louis rather saddened me, at least for the moment. It emphasized the fact that all things human are but temporary, and must, in a few short years fade away. It was in about 1880 when I ran away from home and made my way from Laclede, Mo., to St. Louis. At that time the Four Courts Building, at Clark and 12th streets, housed the city government. It was a massively constructed building of stone. How I stared with childish eyes at that awesome pile, and mentally agreed with the oft repeated assertion of men that "the Four Courts Building was a monument which would stand for at least t hundred years." Then it was the center of all authroity. Today it is a gloomy, crumbling, decrepit old wreck, used only as a sleeping place for the homeless, and a sort of soup kitchen. I entered its portal and stood in the dark, grimy, shadowy corridor. In dusky corners slouched human derelicts, in keeping with the surrounding ruin and decay. I shivered as I turned and literally bolted for the open air, and the ghosts of long ago.

In St. Louis there is a supply dealer who is working great injury to the operator and to the industry by dealing in second-hand projectors of antiquated type, selling the same to theater managers foolish enough to swallow such bait. I was informed, upon what seemed to be entirely reliable authority, that this man not infrequently purchases old, worn-out Edison Exhibition Models, Power's Fives, etc., has them re-nickeled and the old wooden frame of the Edisons replaced by a new one. He then, it is alleged, names a price to the prospective customer and says: "There is the machine! Look at it for yourself!" and the poor fool, knowing nothing about projection machines himself, gazes at the bright nickel, mentally compares the price asked with that of new machines and becomes one of the one-born-every-minute class. If only he himself had to suffer no one would care much, but that is far from being the case. This dealer, in order to "make" a few measley dollars, sells a machine which will make life a burden to the operator, because he cannot, by any stretch of the imagination, put on high class projection with it. Therefore, not only is the operator injured, but the producer is also damaged, his productions being at the mercy of these old-style, dilapidated projectors. But, more than this, the audiences of that theater are deprived of their just due in perfect projection. But what does this class of dealer care for all that? He has "made" his dirty little "profit," and "he should worry!" To h——l with the operator, the exhibitor, the producer and the audience. They may be individually and collectively injured, but what is all that to him? I saw one of the second-hand outfits this fellow sold to a downtown exhibitor, and it was literally outrageous. Of course the man should have had more sense than to have bought it, but, as I have pointed out, he is by no means the only one to suffer; nor is he, by any manner of means, the greatest sufferer. There may be some excuse for the exhibitor in the small village purchasing second-hand machines, but in a city such as St. Louis there is no possible reason for it. If a city theater cannot afford to put in up-to-date projectors, then there is no excuse for its continued existence. As for the man who will deliberately operate a business of this kind, well, in my humble opinion, to put it very, very mildly, he is a distinct drag on the progress of the industry.

TERRE HAUTE, IND.

At the depot the smiling face of Morris Less, manager American theater, Bert Steinhauser, secretary Local Union 373, Roy Shaffer, Harry Hobbs and Ed. Pullen, members of 373, lit up the gloom of early evening. Neighbor Less had his rubber-tired gasoline battleship waiting, and in three-fifths of two and one-third seconds the editor was looking at Terre Haute's beautifully lighted main business street.

The Terre Haute boys are very muchly wide awake, and there exists a cordial relation between the exhibitors and operators, notwithstanding the fact that the comparatively new union has increased salaries of its members by 25 per cent.

The Rex Theater, of which Mr. Fishback is manager and R. Dempsey operator, is putting on an excellent picture with alternating current, but, as I pointed out to Friend Fishback, there is too much—altogether too much light near the screen. The whole front of the piano was covered with a glare of white light from a poorly shaded, unnecessarily large incandescent lamp. Its c. p. should be very largely reduced, the shade so constructed that only the actual sheet of music being played is covered, and the globe itself be tinted light amber. There was a clock right up against the screen, and instead of the light covering only the clock face it "slops over" on the wall within a foot of the picture. The saucer-shaped shade is used both at the piano and for the clock. The difficulty can easily be remedied by making a tin shield for the front of both shades, with a hole just large enough to allow the light to cover the required area, doing the experimenting to find the right size with paper, afterwards using the paper as a pattern to cut the hole in the metal. In addition to all this there was, also near the screen, a large red glass exit sign, with a high-powered globe behind it. I advised Neighbor Fishback to paint the entire glass, except the actual letters, black, and reduce the globe to about 4 c. p.

New American Theater.

I am telling all this, not in order to roast the Rex, but to point out the utter uselessness of such things as this to both Mr. Fishback and other managers. There is no use in getting improved projection machinery and high class operators if you are going to kill the picture with entirely useless strong light.

The American Theater, owned and manager by Morris Less, also owner and manager of the Lyric Film Supply, is Terre Haute's best in moving picture theaters.

As will be seen by the views, the American is the real thing. It seats 1,050, has a pipe organ, an operating room 10 x 18 x 8, having an 18-inch vent flue. There are two Simplex projectors. Over the lobby is the Lyric Film Supply, where projectors of various kinds are carried, as well as a full line of supplies, and a rather weird collection of projectors of ancient and venerable aspect and design.

The American Theater has a light plant which is a real curiosity. Brother Less just simply don't propose to have his theater go dark. He has a 60-h. p. kerosene engine and a 120-volt generator of 260 ampere capacity, a motor and another generator of like capacity to rectify the A. C. in event the engine gets balky, and still another motor and generator of smaller capacity to carry the load when it is light.

The seating consists of a bank of seats in front, then a bank of brass-railed loge boxes, behind which is a second bank of seats. There is also a narrow balcony at either side and the rear, all given over to loge boxes. The lighting is by handsome, inverted fixtures.

Projection is very good, though I believe it might with advantage be more brilliant.

Mr. Less is a wide awake exhibitor, as well as an affable gentleman, with whom one likes to talk and exchange views. May his tribe increase.

We also visited the Orpheum, Charles Fox manager and owner, and there viewed a G. E. rectifier which is operating on its second tube in six years. The equipment consists of two Motiographs.

The Varieties theater, S. P. Katzenbach and Ike Ades, owners and managers, has two Kinedrome projectors which, notwithstanding their gray hairs and faltering steps, still deliver fairly good results on the screen. Soon though they will be retired to the Home for Superannuated Machines in favor of up-to-date projectors, the breed of which is not yet decided, though it will correspond to Holstein and Jerseys in the milk-giving tribe. H. F. Prentuss and H. M. Lindley are shoving the cranks around at the Varieties. They have glass in their observation ports and it is set at an angle to the perpendicular, which knocks out Mr. Reflection; also they have the lid to their carbon-stub can mounted on a spindle somewhat similar to a stove pipe damper, and so weighted as to remain closed, but opening by the weight of a stub. Mr. Stub drops through and the lid automatically closes.

R. L. Shaffer, operator Grand Opera House, where "The Birth of a Nation" was run for fifteen performances at $1 and and $2 per seat, and has a return engagement at like figures, is a man of ideas. Primarily he took me to the Grand to show me a special A. C. carbon, which certainly did, when used as a negative in conjunction with a National or Reflex upper, showed remarkable results, due to the bluish tone imparted to the light. I may have more to say about this later on. But there were other things: Brother Shaffer hs a small but remarkably well ventilated room. There is a large fresh air register in the floor and an 18-inch vent flue, with exhaust fan in the ceiling. He has framing lights so arranged that they light merely by stepping on a pedal. Instead of the regular glass lamp-house (Power's) door port to look at his arc he has cut another hole higher up and covered both with a long strip of arc glass, so that he can see the arc either standing or sitting. Each machine has a stereo lens, and he has arranged a dissolving shutter for the two; also his dowsers are joined so that the closing of one opens the other, but these are so joined that they may instantly be disconnected should he, for any reason, desire to have both open. He has rigged a brake-controlled motor-driven rewind, has a lamp below his patching glass, and a whole box of old safety razor blades to scrape film splices with. Shaffer is a live-wire opeartor, who loves his profession and spares no effort to make good.

.. Lobby, New American.

At midnight I was conducted to the "nook" of the Delmar, Terre Haute's swellerino inn, where I found every manager and operator in that city assembled. I had not been told what was coming and was really surprised, upon being marched to the main dining room, to find a banquet table fully sixty feet in length, beautifully decorated, with lineal descendants of Ham awaiting to serve the multitude. We all wanted a photograph of that really beautiful scene, but the hotel management would not permit a flash light, therefore it could not be had. After the goodies had been disposed of the editor was introduced, and the men sat until 2 a. m. listening with close attention to the gospel of better projection; they even gave me the chance to interpolate (applause) at several points, were I writing the actual speech, and this notwithstanding the fact that, as the Terre Haute papers said the next day, I "did not mince words" in pointing out errors.

Entrance, New American.

The assemblage dispersed at a little after 2 a. m. The Terre Haute men, both operators and managers, I am sure mean well. I hope to meet them again some day. Meanwhile, gentlemen, remember me kindly, even as I shall remember you.

Motion Picture Photography*

Conducted by CARL LOUIS GREGORY

Bigger Salaries for Cameramen.

THIS is a preachment, a personal pertinent preachment on subjects that do not deal wit hthe technical side of making motion pictures and yet one that is just as importtnt from every standpoint as a thorough mastery of your handicraft.

Do you ever assume a detached attitude of mind and ask yourself why you are not earning as large a salary as some other man whom you feel is not nearly as well equipped in professional knowledge as you are? Do you feel that you have some handicap that you cannot define and yet which you know impedes your progress to a better position and a better standing with your fellows?

Have you had the bitter sensation of having some one whom you felt below you in the scale of experience step in ahead of you into a position that you felt should have been yours?

Most of us have, and most of us have accused our employers of unfairness, or our rivals with duplicity or most any old excuse that salved our conscience and permitted us to place the blame anywhere else than where it rightfully belonged; that is, on our own shoulders.

Let it be granted that many times there have been unfair promotions and raises in salary for the other man, but before we begin any bitter recriminations and hasty bewailings of the bone-headedness and unfairness of employers, let us go into open session with our own conduct and try to ferret out the attitude and frame of mind of the employer and of our rival.

We are all prone to view the world too much from our own selfish viewpoint and to accord too little respect and consideration to the viewpoint of others. We like to magnify our own little troubles and tribulations and, no doubt, they are supremely important to us, but is that justification for us to thrust their burden upon others and not take into account the complications which vex them as much and perhaps more than ours do us?

Very, very few employers want to discharge an employe or to reduce his salary if that employe is giving a satisfactory return for the sum he receives. If you are discharged, demoted or lose your place in line for promotion, the chances are ten to one tnat the fault is your own and not your employer's or your rival's.

When an employer lets a man go or ignores him in line of promotion he has had some mighty good and valid reason for it and that reason lies in some fault or deficiency in the employe or in some financial reason. Where the reason is a financial or business one, the employer is, as a rule, ready to explain the situation to the employe; naturally in such a case no odium is attached to a let-out for reasons over which an employer has no control.

On the other hand, a discharged employe is often told that he is being let out on account of a reduction in the working force, because of some deficiency which is inherent in the employe, and yet which the employer has not the heart or the courage to reveal to the man he lets go. There is no more embarrassing situation to be thought of than that of telling an employe to his face that he is incompetent, or undependable, or dishonest, or careless, or whatever the case may be.

It is sad but true that there is hardly any other profession in which there is more professional jealously and distrust than that of cinematography. The many enforced hours of idle waiting occasioned by the poor provision of studio managers and directors and the lack of scheduled system that prevails in most studios, seem to breed an incessant turmoil of idle gossip, of recrimination and malicious scandal that cannot help but breed enmities and ill-feelings and partisanships. Let us all widen our radius and put a bridle on idle and malicious gossip. Every unkind and thoughtless word we utter travels out to wound and stab and rankle, and breeds others to return like boomerangs and scarify our own reputations. Our environment is a mirror and reflects to us our own acts and thoughts.

There is no limit to a man's earnings, but his own limitations. Are you working to broaden your scope, or are you whining that others hold you back; and so-and-so has it in for you and you can't get any farther as long as so-and-so works where you do?

Cinematography is a profession that far out-classes portrait photography in the exacting knowledge and artistic training required for its pursuit and yet where are the Pirie MacDonalds, the Arnold Genthes, Bangs, Kasebiers, Johnstones, Hoyts, Saronys, Du Ponts, Marceaus, Reutlingers, Curtises, Bradys, Hartmans, Gillies, and hundred of other famous names that grace the roll of honor in portrait and pictorial photography which should go on the scroll of cinematography?

An art is the sum of individual exponents; are you adding or detracting from the dignity which should attach to the art of cinematography?

Be even more specific in your self-examination; are you personally, aside from you technical qualifications, a man whose life and conduct is entitled to respect and consideration?

Personality is a factor, a vital part of your profession; it can no more be detached from it than your legs from your body.

Do you lend yourself to intelligent co-operation with your director, or is your attitude that of one who is afraid to do more than he is paid for, and that you are paid only for operating the camera?

Do you study the scenario carefully and try to comprehend clearly the director's ideas and endeavor to assist him with tactful suggestions, or do you scorn reading the scenario and then distract the busy director with some half-baked idea about the way a scene should be taken that is about as consistent with his conceptions as ice cream freezers in Hades?

Does your conduct command respect or derision; are your opinions deferred to, or are they ridiculed; are you liked by everyone above and below your station, or are your friends confined to a few sour-livered cronies like yourself? All of these relations depend absolutely on your own conduct toward your associates. If nature has not endowed you as bountifully with pleasant attributes as some of your other brothers, all the more reason that you should strive harder to compete on the level with them.

Boys, none of us can more than faintly realize the far reaching effects of the mighty force which we are wielding. The phantom forms that daily influence and mold the thoughts and fancies of millions of people are recorded by us, and one can not over-estimate the far reaching consequence of our most thoughtless act.

That is up to the director? No, no, you are wrong; to you as much as the director belongs the task of interpretation of the author's ideas; it lies in your power to give it added inspiration and strength; to increase its beauty; to subtlely render in light and shades the nuances of expression; to render contrast and antithesis, to correlate and delineate.

When your work reveals more than mere mechanical reproduction, when it shows also your thought and your fancy, you have ceased to be an artisan and have become an artist.

An artist is not a man with a flowing tie and baggy trousers, nor a long-haired genius in frayed pants, although quite a lot of us seem to have that impression if our appearance is any good indication.

Carelessness in dress, in action, in speech, betray the same characteristic in work and in technic. It is a moth eaten idea that the artist and genius are denoted by eccentricities of dress and manner. It is true that many brilliant men are afflicted with human weaknesses; but it is also true that their brilliancy might have been greater if those weaknesses were absent and that their greatness was not because of, but in spite of the lapses of conduct. You cannot prove genius or artistic ability by imitating the bad points of brilliant men. Mimicry is the artifice of the ape; orginality and self-respect the attrbutes of real manhood.

Dressing neatly, brushing your teeth and wearing decent footgear will not make a sissy of any man, nor will they make an artist or a photographer of him, but they are a lot more prepossessing and a great deal more apt to command respect and a good salary than ability disguised in a shabby suit and down-at-the-heel shoes.

Your mental habits are harder to overcome than your physical habits, the mote that is in your own eye is ever the hardest to perceive. The braggart, the liar, the egotist, the pessimist, are all loose and fluent talkers, and the enchantment of their own chin music drowns out the groans of their unwilling and unconvinced audiences. You know them all, the braggart and liar "When I was in India taking the Durbar for Kinemacolor—" who wouldn't know an East India native from a Red Indian if he saw them side by side dressed in full regalia, and who never saw a motion picture camera before he came from Coshocton, Ohio, sixteen months ago; the egotist, "Why, that pie-faced mutt, he calls himself a photographer. Why, I'm the guy that put him in the business. I taught him everything he knows. I made—I—I—I—." And the fellow who blames everybody and everything but himself. He says, "If the lens in my camera was any good, and if the camera didn't buckle and throw a streak of static everytime I turn the handle, and if the developer hadn't ruined my stuff in the dark room, and if they hadn't cut out all the good stuff in the cutting room, it would have been a good picture."

There is no reason why the photographer shouldn't meet his employer on the same terms of equality as the director and the star except the photographer himself. There have been photographers who have passed from photography to directorships, to managerships, even to ownerships of paying companies.

"Hitch your wagon to a star," and plug; search yourself for your handicaps and eliminate them. Make up your mind that nothing can stop or hinder you, but your own actions and their consequences, and that likewise no one can advance you and make you attain better things except yourself. Associate with successful men, ferret out the reasons for their success; if you can honestly and honorably employ their methods, use them; if not, reject them and seek others. Have confidence in your own ability, if you have no confidence in yourself, how can you expect others to have confidence in you? "Faint Leart never won fair lady," nor anything else worth having.

And last, but not least, don't forget that you can't preserve your faculties in alcohol.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by Clarence E. Sinn and S. M. Berg

Inquiries.

QUESTIONS concerning any phase of the work of the orchestral leader in a photoplay theater may be addressed to the Moving Picture World and the answers of Mr. Berg will appear in a Question and Answer Department, which will be a regular feature of our Music Page.

Mr. Berg would be pleased to hear from those leaders and musicians who are using the Musical Suggestion Cue Sheets, which he prepares for the V-L-S-E, Metro and Mutual feature releases, as to their practical usefulness and assistance in playing the pictures. He also invites any criticisms or suggestions from those interested in the work for their improvement, in the service of the film.

Back numbers can be obtained by addressing Moving Picture World, P. O. Box 226, Madison Square Station, New York, and enclosing ten cents for each copy. I do not think these articles will appear in book form—at least not in their present shape.

Ellen C. Tyre (post mark illegible) wants to know why I choose such old melodies for my examples and asks me to use some up-to-date tunes. My answer is that old tunes are just as good as any for illustrative purposes, and I'm not running afoul of anybody's copyright.

C. W., Buffalo, N. Y. I wish yould would improvise or "elaborate," or whatever the correct expression is, on the following three songs. (Three songs are mentioned Editor.) I expect to use them in a coming picture, so would appreciate an early reply. Give to each one all the forms which may be needed, as I do not know just what may be required of each.

To have complied fully with this request would have meant writing about 15 to 18 pages of manuscript—piano parts at that—besides buying the songs mentioned so as to have copy to work from. Any copying and arranging bureau will charge from 25 to 50 cents a page for writing or arranging piano music. The young lady didn't realize what she asked.

Cleveland, Ohio (name withheld), says: "What is the difference between a major and a minor key—that is, how do you tell the difference? And how do you change from a major to a minor and vice versa?"

It is not intended to include the subjects of harmony and thorough bass in these articles. However, I realize that a number of pianists have merely learned to read music and play the piano without ever bothering about the theory of music—and it is these very people who will be most interested in "skimming the surface" of composition and improvisation. (See Article I, Nov. 13, 1915.) So, perhaps, I would do well to go back a bit further in order to make my meaning clear to everybody.

Improvising.

Article VII.

"Minor" means less or smaller. "Major" means more or greater or superior. A minor third or a minor fifth is smaller by a half tone than a major third or a major fifth. A minor chord is so called because it contains a minor third, while a major chord chord contains a major third.

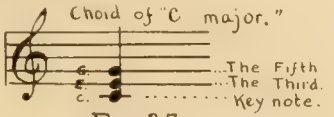
Ex. 26.

We all know that one octave contains twelve semi-tones (half tones). From C to C sharp is a half tone; from C sharp to D is a half tone; from D to D sharp is a half tone, and so on. See Example 26, which shows a section of a piano keyboard with the half tones numbered above the black and white keys.

Starting with the note "C" and counting up, we find C sharp to be a half tone above, and D natural two half tones (one full tone) above C. D sharp (the same as E flat) is 3 half tones—or one and a half tones above, and E natural four half tones (or 2 full tones) above C.

The original form of every chord is the triad form. Starting with any note as a foundation (the key-note) we place another note at an interval of one-third above it. Then we place another note a third above that. This last note is really a fifth above the foundation note. A glance at Example 27 will make this clear.



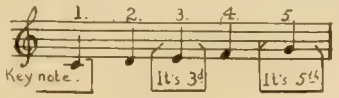
Ex. 27.

"C" is the foundation note; "E" is its third (counting up) and "G" it its fifth.

(Observation.—The foundation note is technically known as "the tonic," or "fundamental." As the tonic (in the key of "C" for example) is also the key-note of whatever key it may be in, I shall use the term "key-note" in preference to that of "tonic" for the present.)

In reckoning intervals we always count upward from a given note. Thus, the foundation is one. The next note immediately above is the 2d. The next is the 3d, and so on. See Example 28.

Now the chord shown in Example 27 is built on the note "C." It is the "chord of C" because "C" is the foundation note. (Being in the key of C it is also the key-note.)



Ex. 28.

The third of the chord ("E natural") is two whole tones above the key-note. It is called a major third, and makes the chord a major chord. Had the third been E flat, it would have been but one and a half tones above the key-note "C." As this interval would be smaller than the other, it would be called a "minor third." In other words, a smaller third. It would then make the chord "C minor" instead of "C major." This itnerval governs the chord and gives it both its character and name. When the 3d is a minor, the chord is a minor chord; and if the 3d is a major, the chord is likewise a major (See Example 29.)

To make it easy to find the distance between the intervals given in above examples let us look at Example 31. This also gives "C" as the foundation note (the key-note) and also four more notes at intervals of half a tone apart; a part of a chromatic scale. D flat is shown to be a half tone above C, D natural a full tone. E flat (the minor third) is a tone and a half above the key-note, while E natural (the major third) is two full tones above.

Ex. 29.

If you are playing in the key of G (for example) and wish to change to the key of G minor, you will reason in this way. "Being in the key of G, the note G is the key-note, and its third is B natural which is a major third. To make the G chord minor I have only to flat the note B, making the "key-chord" G minor instead of "G major." So much for a starter. By a coincidence this new note will—by its name suggest the signature of the new key. You will say "the minor third would be B flat." Now the signature of the key of B flat is two flats. It is also the signature of G minor—the key you want to change to.

Ex. 30.

In Example 29 is shown first a chord of C major (letter a). Next a chord of C minor (letter b). The minor chord was made by lowering the third (E natural) one half tone—making a minor third. It is now "E flat." The signature of E flat is three flats. So is the signature of C minor.

The signature of the key of F is one flat; F minor, 4 flats.
The signature of the key of Bb is 2 flats; Bb minor, 5 flats.
The signature of the key D is 2 sharps; D minor, 1 flat.
The signature of the key of A is 3 sharps; A minor, no flats or sharps.
The signature of the key of E is 4 sharps; E minor, 1 sharp.
The signature of the key of B is 5 sharps; B minor, 2 sharps.

It will be good practice to write triads in several keys (like that shown in Example 27) and reduce them to minor chords by lowering the third a half tone. Choose the easier keys at first. Thus:

G.—Signature, 1 sharp. (Its 3d is B natural.)
D.—Signature, 2 sharps. (Its 3d is F sharp.)
A.—Signature, 3 sharps. (Its 3d is C sharp.)
F.—Signature, 1 flat. (Its 3d is A natural.)
Bb.—Signature, 2 flats. (Its 3d is D natural.)

Musical Setting for "The Heart of Tara."

Released March 6 by the Mutual Film Corp'n.
SUGGESTIONS PREPARED BY S. M. BERG,

By special arrangement with G. Schirmer, Inc., Music Publishers, N. Y.

This "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet" is intended as a partial solution of the problem of what to play for the picture and to assist in overcoming that chaotic condition encountered when the film is not available until almost the hour of showing, resulting in the first performance being a mere rehearsal.

For the benefit of those readers of the Moving Picture World who are exhibitors of Mutual films the following suggestions for an accompaniment to "Heart of Tara" were prepared by S. M. Berg of the New York music publishing house of G. Schirmer, Inc. This advance publication will afford to the progressive leader an opportunity to acquaint himself with the general character of the film story he is to portray with his orchestra.

The timing of the picture is based on a speed of 15 minutes to a thousand feet. The time indications will assist the leader in anticipating the various cues, which may consists of the printed subtitle (marked T) or by a described action (marked D).

COZY BEING REMODELED AND ENLARGED.

The work of remodeling and enlarging the Cozy theater, Shawnee, Okla., in which $7,000 is to be expended, is to begin at once. With the contemplated enlargement of the Cozy a new firm has been organized to conduct this theater. A. J. Cammack has gone in with Jake Jones and Nicholas Albert, the proprietors heretofore, and the firm will be known as Jones, Albert & Cammack.

Increasing business merited the enlarging of the Cozy. The new dimensions of this photoplay house are 40 by 140 feet. It will have a seating capacity of 636. The proprietors expect to have the new place completed in time for Easter. The Cozy when completed will be a worthy addition to the handsome structures in Shawnee.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

NORTHWEST CONVENTION.

Exhibitors Laying Plans for Big Meeting and Trade Show at Minneapolis.

DEFINITE steps have been taken by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest for a monster convention, to be held in the Armory at Minneapolis, May 2, 3, 4 and 5. It is planned to make this meeting the greatest, both from the standpoint of the exhibitor and the movie-loving public, ever held in the Northwest. The Civic and Commerce Association of Minneapolis is taking an active interest in the event. Theater owners from the states of Minnesota, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota, the upper Michigan peninsula, Iowa, Nebraska, Wyoming, Montana, Idaho, Oregon and Washington are included in the field of the Northwest organization, and it is hoped a large attendance will be attracted from the six thousand exhibitors in this territory.

That many will attend is almost a foregone conclusion, as many Northwestern branches of the large motion picture producing companies are located here and half a dozen or more of the theater owners are in the city every day looking over new equipment and films. Convention headquarters will be at the West Hotel.

A particular attraction for the convention will be the presence of a number of the screen stars, who have been promised tentatively for the gathering by several of the large producing firms. In order to keep out an overwhelming attendance of the general public, it has been decided to charge admittance to the Armory to all except delegates.

The official program will be announced later, but the tentative line-up of events calls for a Governor's Night as an opener. It is hoped to have Governor J. A. J. Burnquist of Minnesota present to formally start the exposition on its way. Women will be entertained particularly in the second day's program. A midnight entertainment will be a feature of the third day, while a grand ball is expected to close the convention on the evening of the fourth day.

Every delegate will be caught by the cameraman before he quits the city and will have an opportunity to look at himself on the screen. There will be a small exhibitors' theater at which the companies desiring will be allotted periods of time in which to show films. There will be a practical demonstration on the making of a motion picture drama.

The following officers have been elected: James Gilosky, Alhambra theater, St. Paul, president; D. W. Chamberlain, American theater, Minneapolis, secretary; C. E. Van Duzee, Princess theater, Minneapolis, treasurer; executive board—W. A. Scott, Auditorium, Red Wing, Minn., chairman; Frank Nemec, St. Cloud, Minn., and Henry P. Greene, Minneapolis; Charles G. Branham, editor "Amusements," Minneapolis, assistant secretary to executive board.

Mr. Gilosky will serve as president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest until the convention. The association headquarters are at 740 Temple Court Building, Minneapolis.

ROTHAPFEL WRITES TO EXHIBITORS.

Urges Them to Join the Board of Trade Movement and "Follow the Flag of Progression, Protection and Promotion."

S. L. ROTHAPFEL, one of the two directors of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, Inc., who represents the exhibitors, and who is known throughout the country by reason of his great personal success in the conduct of motion picture theaters, has written a letter which is of large interest to all those associated with the industry. It follows in full:

To My Brother Exhibitors: I sat at a meeting of one of the directors representing the exhibitors in the Board of Trade of America and I heard there a discussion on the hostility and antagonism of the exhibitor. I was sorry to hear this, because I know that it was entirely uncalled for and that you, the exhibitors, who feel in this manner, do not know the mission of the Board of Trade.

As I have just mentioned, I am an exhibitors' director of the Board of Trade. I have been to practically all of their meetings. I want to urge that each and every one of you who have the interest of the moving picture at heart join at once and lend us your aid. I give you my word that the Board of Trade is absolutely on the square; that it is for you, as well as for each and every other branch of the industry, and as long as I am a director in this Board of Trade, I will see that you are taken care of in every possible shape, manner and form within my power; although from personal knowledge of every one now constituting the officers and directors I know that you need no protector; on the contrary, your membership, influence and co-operation are earnestly sought, so that the objects of the Board, which are confined solely to things pertaining to the welfare of the whole industry, may be effectively carried out.

The mission of the Board of Trade is to foster trade and commerce among its members and to promote the business interests of such members; to reform trade abuses on behalf of its members; to secure freedom from unjust and unlawful exactions; to diffuse among its members accurate and reliable information as to the standing and character of those engaged in any or all branches of that industry, and to supply other information concerning said industry; to settle differences between its members and promote a more enlarged and friendly intercourse between them and to do and perform all such acts as may tend to promote the welfare of the industry at large.

Among the matters of special interest to you in which the Board of Trade is engaged, is the effort to secure uniform and beneficial state legislation and municipal regulation upon subjects relating to motion picture theaters throughout the country.

Now, if you have had any feeling, or if there is any doubt in your mind, get busy and write me at once and I will take the time to answer you. Remember that the Board of Trade is only a baby, but in its short career it has already done some remarkable things, among the most important being the official recognition of the Chief Executive of the Nation at their first annual dinner. This gives to our industry a recognition that is unassailable. Throw away your foolish notions and biased opinions and put your shoulder to the wheel. Help—that is the way to make the mission go.

We, the exhibitors, as I have preached to you before, are the strongest factor in this industry. Any one with any common sense will recognize that fact. The Board of Trade needs you and wants you. You need the Board of Trade, so let's get together quick.

Once again, if there is anything you don't understand, write me personally, or write to Mr. Binder, or any executive member of the Board, and your matter will be taken up at once, even if you are not a member of the Board of Trade. If you have some little difficulty, let us know about it. We might be able to help you. That's what we are here for. We are marching onward. Get in line and follow the flag of Progression, Protection and Promotion, which is the slogan and insignia of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America.

Mr. Rothapfel's letter is in line with a resolution adopted by the directors of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America at their regular monthly meeting on Thursday, March 9th, which reads:

WHEREAS, it has always been one of the objects and purposes of the Board to promote the welfare of every branch of the industry, including the exhibitors, upon an equal basis with the other great branches of the industry; and

WHEREAS, it has always been and is the desire of all members of the Board of Trade, irrespective of the class of membership to which they belong, to unify and bring together all branches of the industry; now therefore be it

RESOLVED, that the Board, reaffirming its policy to co-operate with the exhibitors' organizations throughout the country, and that the method of co-operating shall be the personal attendance by the Executive Secretary or other selected representative of the Board before all exhibitors' conventions whenever possible, for the purpose of defining the purposes for which the Board of Trade was organized and exists, and of assuring the exhibitors of the Board's desire to co-operate with their organizations for the general welfare of the industry.

KANSAS EXHIBITORS AT WICHITA.

Widespread enthusiasm and interest are manifested over the approaching joint meeting of exchange men and exhibitors at Wichita, March 20 and 21. A meeting of Kansas City film men was held March 7, at which Charles W. Harden was appointed chairman of a committee to arrange for the local delegation. Mr. Harden has received from nearly every exchange manager the pledge of two or more men, and a special train is now being provided for on the Santa Fe, to leave Sunday night, March 19. The event will be a joint convention of the Exhibitors' League and the Amusement Association of Kansas. The program of entertainment is being prepared by the exchange managers and the Wichita exhibitors, Stanley Chambers being chairman of the local committee.

Vitagraphs for Week of March 20

Some Blue Ribbon and Broadway Star Features Which Are Said to Be of Unusual Interest.

LEADING the list of Vitagraph releases for the week of March 20 is a five-part Blue Ribbon feature, entitled "The Supreme Temptation." The four other subjects, "Mr. Jack Trifles," a one-part Daniels picture, another of "The Escapades of Mr. Jack;" "A Squared Account," produced by Vitagraph's Western Division, is a single reeler, "Freddy Versus Hamlet," the latest of the "Freddy Series" of comedies, and "Husks," a three-part Scene from "Husks" (Vitagraph).

Broadway star feature make up the balance of a program that contains eleven thousand feet of finely produced and well enacted photoplays.

In "The Supreme Temptation," we have one of the most dramatic stories ever filmed by the Vitagraph. Its theme deals with Herbert Dubois, a young American medical student, who, while in Paris, meets, falls in love with, and later marries, Annette, a young grisette. Antonio Moreno as Herbert Dubois and Dorothy Kelly as Annette are ideally suited to their parts and do some exceptional work. They are ably assisted by Charles Kent, Evart Overton, Mary Maurice, Kate Davenport, John Robertson and Marguerite Blake. The picture is released on Monday, March 20. Harry Davenport directed the production.

"Mr. Jack Trifles," also listed for March 20, No. 5 of "The Escapades of Mr. Jack," shows Frank Daniels as his funny self. How he tries to keep his promise to replace a pair of gloves, which he accidentally knocked into a plate of soup, while carrying on a flirtation with a chic little miss in a restaurant, his explanation to his wife, who by mistake gets the gloves, and the way the maid comes to the rescue, are only a few of the laugh-producers. Kate Price plays the part of the wife and Betty Howe is seen in the role of the maid. C. Jay Williams is responsible for its direction.

Director William Wolbert, with an all-star cast of Coast members headed by Otto Lederer, George Kunkel, Anne Schaefer and Jack Mower photographed "A Squared Account," on the General Film program of March 20. It tells of a thrilling battle on the desert between two men, one of whom gives his life that two little children found helpless on the great waste might be saved.

Another of the "Freddy Series," on Friday, March 24, "Freddy Versus Hamlet," taken at the Vitagraph Bay Shore studio under the supervision of Frank Currier, features William Dangman, Tod Talford, William Lytell, Jr., and Daisy De Vere. Freddy saves his friend's best girl from a treacherous villain, brings her back to town on a broken-down horse and is proclaimed the hero of the hour.

"Husks," from the pen of James Oliver Curwood, is a Broadway star feature announced for Saturday, March 25. Besides playing one of the leading parts, William Humphrey guided the action of this three-part dramatic subject and was supported by Harry Northrup, Rose Tapley, Nellie Anderson and Carolyn Birch. We are shown how an ambitious lawyer elected to Congress, divorces his wife for a more attractive woman, his sorrow and remorse when he comes to his senses. The last we see of him is when he throws himself across the grave of the woman whose death he caused through his selfishness.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of March 13 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"For the Defense" at the Strand.

FANNIE WARD was seen at the Strand theater in a new silent drama, "For the Defense," written especially for her by Hector Turnbull. It is a thrilling detective story which has to do with the adventures of Fidele Roget, a little French novice, who is sent by the Sisters to a convent in Montreal. Arriving in New York, the girl falls into the hands of a set of criminals. In the cast supporting Miss Ward were James Dean, Horace B. Carpenter, James Neill and Camille Astor.

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, in a new Metro comedy, the Topical Review and the Paramount Pictograph were the other pictorial features of the bill. The soloists on the musical program were Bruce Bowman, Stella Parini and Phyllis Davies.

"The Soul Market" at the Broadway.

Madame Olga Petrova, the well-known emotional actress, was the star in "The Soul Market," a five-part photodrama, at the Broadway theater for the week. The pictureplay is a romance of society and the stage, and contains many interesting scenes.

Another feature on the program was the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures, "Felling the Big Trees in the Giant Forests of California." Comedies and cartoons rounded out the bill.

Triangle Program at the Knickerbocker.

Douglas Fairbanks in a comedy, "The Habit of Happiness," occupied the stellar position on the Triangle program at the Knickerbocker theater. The Sennett Keystone comedy, "The Village Vampire," with Fred Mace, was another feature of the bill.

RAVER TRADE. SHOWING.

On Friday afternoon, March 17, at two o'clock, the Raver Film Corporation will give a trade exhibition at Wurlitzer's Fine Arts Hall of the Ocean Film Company's productions, "Driftwood," from the famous old play by Owen Davis, starring Vera Michelena, and "The Fortunate Youth," taken from William J. Locke's well-known book. Also at this time the Raver Company will present for the first time "Austria at War," the official Austrian war pictures which are being marketed for the Austrian government by the Raver Corporation.

E. S. BOWMAN ON BUSINESS TRIP.

E. S. Bowman, secretary of the Automatic Ticket Selling & Cash Register Co., is making a trip in the interests of his concern and, while visiting Detroit, made six installations of the newest type machines in theaters in that city. From Detroit he continued further west and will make stops in Chicago and later in St. Louis, Mo. Mr. Bowman finds business in a very satisfactory condition and will have plenty to do in several of the larger centers through the Middle West.

Mutual Dramas and Comedies

Burr McIntosh Introduces Week of March 20 in "My Partner," a Masterpicture, de Luxe Edition.

THE release of the Mutual Film Corporation for March 20 will be a Mutual Masterpicture, de Luxe Edition, "The Partner," an adaptation of the play written by Bartley Campbell and produced at the Union Square Theater September 16, 1879. Burr McIntosh is seen in the leading role. The picture has been carefully photographed. The settings are said to be particularly beautiful, and no expense has been spared to make it a "true to type" western.

The second Mutual Masterpicture, de Luxe Edition, of the week, which will appear on Wednesday, is "The Bruiser," an American Film Company drama, featuring William Russell and Charlotte Burton. The struggle between labor and capital, which is one of the big, absorbing questions of present day commerce, forms the theme for this photoplay. William Russell plays the role of a brawny champion of the labor cause. Charlotte Burton is a daughter of the masses, who proves her superiority to the pampered daughters of the idle rich in a number of thrilling situations.

Scene from "The Bruiser" (American).

"The Hidden Law," a sociological drama produced by the Horsley Company and featuring William Clifford and Margaret Gibson, will be the last of the Mutual Masterpictures, de Luxe Edition, for the week.

It is the story in pictures of a man's reaction against the injustices of society. William Clifford as John Carlton, a playwright and artist, who turns bandit, does excellent work. Margaret Gibson is a charming little mountain girl. They are supported by Frederick Montague, Robert Kenyon, Mae Adams, Doris Baker, Marie Gavette, John Oaker and Pauline Williams.

Scene from "The Code of Honor" (Mutual).

The other features which will be included in the same week are "The Code of Honor," "The Fifth Ace" and "Snow-Stuff." "The Code of Honor" is an American picture produced under the direction of Frank Borzage and featuring Alfred Vosburgh, Vivian Rich and George Periolat. It is an army story, centered about the plans for a new submarine invention which have been the result of hard labor on the part of Frank Marvin (Alfred Vosburgh), chief draftsman of the ordnance department. Vivian Rich as Zena Valpar, the niece of a secret agent of a foreign government, and Estelle Allen as Ruth Chase, Frank Marvin's sweetheart, are well cast. The other members of the company in this photoplay are Frank Borzage, George Periolat and Ward McAllister.

"The Fifth Ace" introduces Alice Lake to the Mutual in a two-part picture from the Thanhouser studios. Supporting Miss Lake in the leading role in this stirring sociological drama is Wayne Arey, the popular Thanhouser player. "Snow-Stuff," the last of the "Buck Parvin and the Movies" series, produced by the American Film Company, will appear on Friday, March 24. This extremely popular series, taken from the stories written by Charles E. Van Loan and published in the Saturday Evening Post, has had a cordial reception all over the country.

For the production of "Snow-Stuff," Director William Bertram took his entire company to Truckee, Cal. In support of Art Acord as the original "Buck" are Dixie Stratton, Larry Peyton, Charles James, Joe Massey, Hardy Gibson, George Clancy, Perry Banks and Ashton Dearholt.

The week's comedy releases include the type of humorous photoplay which it is most difficult to obtain. Francis Keyes and Jay C. Yorke appear in "Pansy Post, Protean Player," a Falstaff comedy, on Tuesday. The second funny picture of the same brand will appear on Thursday. It is "Pedro, the Punk Poet," and features the same two Thanhouser players.

"Cupid at Cohen's" and "The Bubbles and the Barber" are the two American Beauty comedies for the week. "Cupid at Cohen's" appears on Wednesday, and features the popular comedians, Carol Halloway and John Sheehan.

The Sunday Beauty, "The Bubbles and the Barber," gives ample display to Orral Humphrey's versatility. Billy Armstrong, the Horsley Company's funny man, will be featured in "The Twin Trunk Mystery," a Cub comedy of Friday. The Vogue funny pictures of Thursday and Sunday, have not yet been titled. The regular Gaumont releases—"Mutual Weekly No. 64" and "See America First"—will appear on Thursday and Sunday.

Sam Kramer Gets Prize

SAM B. KRAMER, manager of the Mecca Branch of the New York Universal Film Manufacturing Company's exchange, has been awarded a $100 solid gold watch by Manager of Exchanges M. H. Hoffman for having shown a greater per cent. of profit increase over his business for the four-week period ending February 13, than any other Universal Exchange manager throughout the United States.

Sam B. Kramer.

This is the third four-week period winner since Manager Hoffman announced his prize contest to stimulate interest among the Universal exchange men, the Oklahoma City Exchange manager having won the first two-period prizes. In the first instance, Mr. Kramer of the New York Exchange came in second, and by making a big bid for the third period, ably assisted by his brother, Earl W. Kramer, he succeeded by showing the greatest increase of profits over the last four-week period, incidentally rolling up the highest percentage of profit so far recorded in the contest.

The prize being such a valuable one, every Universal Exchange manager is more than anxious to win a watch from Manager Hoffman, and they are working incessantly in hopes of beating their manager out of a watch, or in case they win a second time, out of a hundred dollars in cash.

World-Equitable Policy Illustrated

Work of Directors Powell and Ince Cited to Make Clearer What Is Meant by "Film Commercialization."

WITH the reorganization of the World Film Corporation and the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, the newly elected productional heads and department managers under the supervisional direction of President Arthur H. Spiegel, announced a policy of film commercialization. Just what the policy was meant to convey, outside of the bare announcement that all productions would undergo a treatment of commercialization without the sacrificing of the atmospheric or artistic elements, was not made entirely clear. With the completion, however, of four forthcoming pictures, the intent and ambitions of the policy are realized and demonstrated physically to an extremely satisfactory stage.

The first and most convincing demonstration of the success of the policy is seen in John Ince's production of "The Struggle." The casting of this picture showed a blending of three elements theatric. Frank Sheridan has long been a potent figure on the spoken stage and is one of the most virile character portrayers on the native stage and one of the foremost personifiers of big, red-blooded types, plays the leading role in "The Struggle." Supporting Mr. Sheridan is Arthur Ashley and Ethel Grey Terry.

The story itself was written by Harry Chandlee and adapted for the screen under the watchful eyes of the film service, advertising and publicity departments, which departments under the new policy actually act as representatives of the exhibitor in that they work from the angle of "box office" results. The director and casted players also have a word in the construction. From a production standpoint, the commercialization becomes physical.

Mr. Ince, with his retinue of cameramen, structural workers and property men, with the players, journeyed to Manaos, Brazil, a leper colony, where many of the scenes of the piece were laid by the author. A new environment was created by Ince and the surroundings, insofar as atmosphere and detail are concerned, were made perfect. By a permit from the Brazilian Government Mr. Ince and his players were allowed to use the Lazarette, or Leper Colony, as he saw fit. The idea of the journey of the company to far-away Brazil was to procure local color and they got it.

In building up the story of "The Struggle," John Ince said: "I considered the story, as it was given to me in scenario form, a many gabled house. It contained punch after punch. It required but diligent attention and faithfulness to the story to visualize a powerful work. I simply built up the walls to each gable. That is, I considered the big situations and climaxes as gables and worked my dramatic structure up to them, then down the other side to the next gable. The result shows for itself in the production."

The second physical demonstration of the advantages of the commercializing of film plays, appears aptly in "The Chain Invisible," which has just been completed under the direction of Frank Powell. This is an original work from the pen of the noted author, Richard Le Gallienne. Mr. Powell emphasized his climaxes and situations so superbly and developed his dramatic action up to the climaxes so majestically that his five reel production is a smooth running document, vitalized and with but one object, that of making dramatic ten-strikes every time the ball rolls down the alley.

The effect in "The Chain Invisible" is one of seeing a gigantic spectacle. In so far as the parallel is explicit, you watch a series of beautiful incidents all a consecutive portion of the tale. Then, at moments, some gigantic novelty is injected which dove-tails into the spectacle, and adds zest to the story, yet creates in itself a startling effect. In other words, each incident is a startling episode and as a whole a gigantic series of "punches."

Mr. Powell states that his one intention was to emphasize his "punches," yet dove-tail them perfectly into the general tale and he, too, prefers to await the pictures public presentation and allow it to speak for itself.

Jack Sherrill

A strong personality, youth and acting versatility are the main reasons for the success of Jack Sherrill, who is the leading man of the Frohman Amusement Corporation.

Jack Sherrill played the juvenile leads in "Just Out of College," opposite Eugene O'Brien. He supported C. Aubrey Smith as Arnold Faringay in "The Builder of Bridges," which was conceded to be one of the hardest acting parts of the play. He played opposite Alice Brady in "The Woman in Forty-seven," and supported Florence Rockwell in "Body and Soul," followed by the juvenile lead in "John Glayde's Honour."

Jack Sherrill has just finished the Frohman Amusement Corporation's latest production, based on Larry Evan's novel, "Then I'll Come Back to You." In this feature he played the part of Steve O'Mara opposite Alice Brady.

He has made rapid progress in photoplay acting and firmly established himself as one of the best young leading men in the film business today. His record of clean-cut, well drawn characters promises a successful future for the young versatile leading man. Alfred Sutro is now writing a play especially for him.

New Metro Stars

Harold Lockwood and May Allison Join the Quality Company, a Metro Ally.

HAROLD LOCKWOOD and May Allison, one of the most popular stellar combinations in motion pictures, have signed a long time contract with Fred J. Balshofer to appear exclusively in photoplays to be produced by the Quality Pictures Corporation, which will be released on the Metro program. Mr. Balshofer will direct the Lockwood-Allison feature productions, and will be assisted in this work by Howard Truesdell. The first production is already well under way and several unusual and distinctive stories have been obtained which are admirably suited to the talents of these two popular stars.

Harold Lockwood.

Mr. Lockwood and Miss Allison recently came to New York from Santa Barbara, Cal. Before appearing on the American-Mutual program Mr. Lockwood and Miss Allison were among the foremost stars engaged by the Famous Players.

Mr. Balshofer has exercised especial care to select scenarios for Mr. Lockwood and Miss Allison in which youth, romance, adventure and a spirit of the great outdoors predominate. It is in such productions that this couple have always excelled and which have won for them thousands of admirers in every quarter of the globe. Mr. Lockwood is one of the most fearless artists now acting before the camera and takes a keen delight in doing so-called "stunts" of the most dangerous character. He has been injured repeatedly for his daring, but never discouraged.

Mr. Lockwood was unusually successful, obtaining an engagement in his first application at the Universal studio. From there he went to Selig and then to the Famous Players. With the Famous Players Lockwood was Mary Pickford's leading man in "Tess of the Storm County," "Hearts Adrift," and was among her support in "Such a Little Queen." He was also Marguerite Clark's leading man in "Wildflower," with the Famous Players. When Mr. Lockwood left the Famous Players he joined the American staff.

Miss Allison, who is counted not only one of the most gifted stars of the silent drama, but one of the screen's most beautiful young women, was born on a plantation, "Rising Farm" in Georgia. It is a town in itself and there are little else but Allisons for miles around. She was educated in a private school in Cleveland, Tenn., and afterward attended a finishing school in Philadelphia. As a young girl she nursed an ambition to become a grand opera prima donna. She possessed a rare lyric soprano voice and spent several years in voice culture. When she was eighteen years old (this is the only profound secret in Miss Allison's young life) she wrote a light opera called "The Life of Moses," in which she had the leading role and which was produced in her native town by amateurs.

May Allison.

This proved the turning point in Miss Allison's life. Against the protests of her family she declared that she was going to New York to go upon the stage. When they found they could not dissuade her in her plans her mother agreed to accompany her. Miss Allison did not have much difficulty in obtaining an engagement on account of her striking and distinctive beauty. She presented herself in the offices of Henry W. Savage, who was then preparing to produce "Everywoman." It will be remembered that this production was one of distinct and convincing types and Miss Allison first played the role of "Vanity," but soon afterward was given the coveted part of "Beauty." After some further theatrical experience she joined the Famous Players company, which was then casting for "David Harum," and Miss Allison secured a prominent role. It was William H. Crane who was starred in this feature, who introduced Miss Allison to Mr. Lockwood, an incident which resulted in their association as co-stars. Miss Allison next appeared with Edith Wynne Mathison in "The Governor's Lady." She appeared in several other big features and then became a star on the American-Mutual program, having the stellar role in "The House of Scandals." Soon afterward Miss Allison became known as "The American Girl."

The Quality Pictures Corporation has taken over a large studio near Forty-third street and the Hudson River, where the Lockwood-Allison company will make its interior scenes for the present. They are now in northern Maine, making some picturesque exteriors in the snow and woods.

Leah Baird

LEAH BAIRD, the Vitagraph star, who is considered by many as one of the most beautiful girls in picturedom, was the belle of the Indiana Exhibitors' League ball, held in Indianapolis, on Friday, March 3. It was intended that Miss Baird should lead the grand march at the ball with Governor Ralston of Indiana, but at the last moment his excellency found it impossible to attend. The evening's entertainment was therefore opened by Miss Baird and several other screen stars present, and judging by the Indianapolis press reports the affair was a huge success.

Leah Baird.

The matter of preparedness is receiving the enthusiastic approval of Miss Baird just at this time. The fifty thousand dollar residence of this home-loving young woman is nearing completion at Manhattan Beach, Brooklyn. Recent statements that the warships of European powers were equipped with guns of twenty mile range and that the United States guns at Sandy Hook were only of twelve mile range, had a personal significance to her and is the cause of considerable perturbation. "The punch in the picture" lies in the fact that Manhattan Beach is just eighteen miles back of Sandy Hook, and as this constitutes the stated superiority of the foreign guns, Miss Baird avers that her new villa would offer a wonderful target in the event of an exchange of gunfire. She has been very busy endeavoring to secure insurance against that particular brand of damage, and has awakened the entire population of Manhattan Beach to the possibility of their danger until they are considering going to Washington in a body to urge preparedness at Sandy Hook, especially.

JOE JACKSON IN "GYPSY JOE."

The success of Joe Jackson, the tramp cyclist, in his first film feature, "A Modern Enoch Arden," made at the Keystone studios, inspired Mack Sennett to place him in another comedy-thriller with little Betty Marsh, who gave him such excellent support in his first picture. This new feature, called "Gypsy Joe," is now ready for release on the Triangle program. Advance reports indicate that the combination of thrills and laughs which Sennett likes to obtain is more pronounced than ever in "Gypsy Joe." Dora Rogers, Lew Morrison, Elizabeth De Witt and "Shorty" Hamilton have important roles.

Universal Program

Most Interesting Variety Is Promised for the Week of March 27.

ONE of the most interesting weekly programs ever released by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company is on the bill for the week of March 27, this being headed by "Autumn," the Red Feather feature, with Violet Mersereau and Lieut. Percy Richards (the Man in White) in the leading roles, strongly supported by that stellar actor, Paul Panzer. The scenario was written and produceed by O. A. C. Lund. The story is especially fitting to such a vivacious actress as Miss Mersereau and makes an excellent feature with which to launch such a list of Universal program pictures.

The regular releases of the week will include eight comedies and eight dramas, "Autumn" being released on the 27th with a Nestor comedy, with Lee Moran, Neil Burns and Betty Compson taking the initiative.

Tuesday Grace Cunard and Francis Ford will be seen in a two-reel drama, "The Master Crooks," written by Miss Cunard and directed by Mr. Ford, this being a Gold Seal picture. The Rex release for the day is "There Is No Place Like Home," written and produced by Lois Weber, in which the Short Family, Antrim, Lou and Mrs. Short are featured. Victor Potel and Eileen Sedgwick appear in an Imp comedy, "The Gasoline Habit," having been written and produced by Roy Clements, being the experiences of a man who believes he can afford owning a Ford.

For Wednesday the program is topped by the Universal Animated Weekly, in which will be shown all the latest news events occurring in all parts of the world, as well as scenes of the Allies' great repulsive work in keeping the German forces away from Verdun, these views to reach New York City on or about March 11, according to a cablegram received by the editor of the Animated Weekly. The unusual fashion review will also be shown in this reel. "The Model Husband" is a Victor two-reel comedy, with Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby in the leading roles, in which a rank prohibitionist is exposed through someone taking a taste of his cough medicine. Rupert Julian and Elsie Jane Wilson appear in an interesting drama of domestic life in "The Blackmailer," produced under the direction of Mr. Julian himself.

On Thursday Carter De Haven's first contribution to the Universal program as a director will be a Powers comedy, a burlesque on the great bank robbery, entitled "Between Midnight." The scenario was also written by Mr. De Haven and Margaret Mayburn played the leading role. "Riches" is the title of a three-reel Laemmle drama directed by Richard Stanton, with himself and Myrtle Gonzalez playing leads.

"The Dragon's Breath" is a Rex release for Friday. It is a three-reeler, directed by the Smalleys, with Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley featured. This is a typical Smalley picture, carrying a rich sermon, and is second only to the great Smalley masterpiece, "Scandal," which was credited with being one of the best moral pictures. There will also be a Nestor comedy released on this day, "He Almost Eloped," with Ray Gallagher and Billie Rhodes doing the principal laugh-provoking stunts.

For Saturday a spirited Western picture is offered with that great impersonator of Western roles, Harry Carey, playing a breed part. It is entitled "The Breed and the Girl," in two reels, written and directed by Jacques Jaccard. Supporting Mr. Carey are Olive Golden and Hoot Gibson.

The Sunday releases will be a Rex two-reel drama and an L-Ko comedy. Grace Cunard and Francis Ford will be seen in "Her Sister's Sin," written by Miss Cunard, and directed by Mr. Ford. In this picture both stellar leads play dual roles, and the story is both interesting and gripping. Harry Gibbons and May Emory take the leading parts in the L-Ko comedy, "Caught on a Skyscraper," in which many thrilling experiences are filmed. As a whole it affords a great selection of plays interpreted by the Universal's best actors and actresses, making one of the strongest and best weekly programs that could be desired.

NEW COMEDY COMPANY.

A new comedy company is to be formed by George Orth, late of Biograph, Gaumont, and Eclair, to feature Julius D. Cowles and probably Edith Sargent. Mr. Cowles has been playing comedy character roles for Metro, appearing of late in "Emmy of Stork's Nest," and "The Yellow Streak." He will write and direct his own scenarios. Negotiations are pending with Edith Sargent, relative to her becoming leading comedienne of the new company.

Clifford Bruce Joins Metro

CLIFFORD BRUCE, the distinguished dramatic star, has been engaged by the Popular Plays and Players and will make his debut on the Metro program in "Hearts Aflame," a thrilling five-part Metro wonderplay. Dorothy Green, the gifted dramatic artist, will be featured with Mr. Bruce in this production.

Mr. Bruce is a valuable addition to the long list of Metro stars, as he not only has a vast following among motion picture patrons, but is known among theater-goers for his excellent performance upon the speaking stage. He was leading man for Charles Frohman for more than five years, appearing in many notable stage productions.

Clifford Bruce.

When Maude Adams was selected by Mr. Frohman to star in "That Old Sweetheart of Mine," Mr. Bruce appeared as her leading man. He also appeared with Miss Adams in "The Pretty Sister of Jose." He was Ethel Barrymore's leading man for two seasons and appeared in the same capacity for one season with Billie Burke. Mr. Bruce was chosen among half a dozen prominent leading men to appear in support of William Gillete when that noted stage star made his last farewell tour of this country. Mr. Bruce was starred in "The Thief," succeeding Kyrle Bellew, and he also followed Dustin Farnum in "The Virginian."

Mr. Bruce has repeated his stage success since he came to the silent drama. He will be remembered for his finished performance on the screen in "A Fool There Was," "The Children of the Ghetto," "The Valley of the Missing," "Lady Audley's Secret," "A Woman's Past," "When Rome Ruled," "Princess Romanoff," "The Fourth Estate," and other feature productions.

Joyce Fair Joins Essanay

THE littlest leading lady has joined Essanay. Joyce Fair, aged 11 years, the best known child actress in America, makes her debut in pictures in "Joyce's Strategy," a two-reel picture written and directed by Harry Beaumont. Little Joyce won a nation-wide reputation as an actress in "The Dummy," one of the great stage successes of three seasons ago. In it the little girl, then not nine years of age, was veritably the leading lady, and so well did she handle the part that she won recognition from the foremost critics.

Joyce Fair.

She will be remembered as the little girl who is kidnapped and then rescued by the messenger boy "detectuf." She also played in "Ib and Little Christina," and other dramas.

At that time she spent her leisure moments playing with dolls, rabbits, turtles and whatever other strange gifts she received. Now she has given up the dolls and pets and wants to write scenarios for recreation

Three Horsley Releases

List Comprises Two Five-Reelers and a Single-Reel Comedy —All Out in Four Days.

DAVID HORSLEY productions will be prominent in the release chart of the Mutual Film Corporation from March 24 to 27. During that four days' space of time three productions from the Horsley studios will be released, two of them five-reel subjects and the third a one-reel Cub comedy. The first of the three pictures to be distributed is the Cub comedy, "On the Rampage," released March 24. It features George Ovey in his original character of Jerry. A scenario, full of surprising situations, has been devised and is unfolded in the picture, the action of which centers around Jerry in his efforts to break into society by impersonating a nobleman. Spectacular effects have been introduced in conjunction with the comedy element, heightening the effect of the fun.

Scene from "On the Rampage" (Cub).

On March 25 will be released "The Hidden Law," a Mutual Masterpicture, de luxe edition, featuring Margaret Gibson and William Clifford. "The Hidden Law" visualizes a story based on the law of reckoning. It is by Theodosia Harris, who has brought the characters up to date and laid the action in interesting surroundings. The first part of the play transpires in scenes of theatrical life, while the latter half takes place in the remote wilds of the West, except for the closing feet of the film when the scenes revert back to the East. The theatrical scenes are interesting because they are true to a glamorous life, and those of the Western country have been given an added touch of color by the introduction of the Bostock animals, which perform some remarkable feats of acting. Miss Gibson and Mr. Clifford, who make in this picture their second joint appearance as stars, have both been happily cast in roles that suit their capabilities, and a very competent group of players, including Frederick Montague, Robert Kenyon, Mae Adams, Doris Baker, Marie Gavette, John Oaker and Pauline Williams, appears in their support.

"The Love Liar," the third of the releases, and scheduled for March 27, is the biggest production coming to date from the David Horsley studios. Weeks of time were consumed in preparations for production. It abounds in magnificent investiture, in the gathering and construction of which much money was expended.

As can be judged from the fact that an extraordinary amount of time and money was spent to stage it, the story of "The Love Liar" is one of much more than passing merit. It is the work of Crane Wilbur. His principal character is a famous violinist, an eccentric, erratic and temperamental man, who believes himself in love with every pretty face he sees. Unconsciously he tells so many "love lies" that eventually he believes them himself and finally to his own undoing. The treatment of this theme has been given with a keen conception of the traits of such a man, and the result is a forceful and absorbing drama of the finer type.

Crane Wilbur plays the featured part of "the love liar," and an especially engaged cast comprising Lucy Payton, Mae Gaston, Nan Christy and Ella Golden lends him very creditable support.

Smith-Hughes Bill Will Be Reported

Chairman Hughes Will Ask House to Pass Bill Using Paramount Admissions.

ACCORDING to special dispatches received in the office of The Moving Picture World from our correspondent in Washington the Smith-Hughes Federal Censorship Bill will be reported out of the Committee on Education in the course of a day or two.

The chairman of the committee will base his favorable report very largely on arguments and admissions made by the Paramount interests at the eleventh hour of the hearings before the committee.

DECISION IN VITAGRAPH-METRO CASE.

In the matter of the charges made by the Vitagraph Company of America against the Metro Pictures Corporation, the directors of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, Inc., found as follows:

"On the conclusion of the testimony the board reserved its decision and went into executive session and carefully considered all of the testimony offered in support of and in opposition to the charges.

"The board unanimously found that the Metro Pictures Corporation did not cause Mr. or Mrs. Sidney Drew to leave or to agree to leave their employment with the Vitagraph Company of America and to enter or agree to enter the employment of the Metro Pictures Corporation.

"Having reached this unanimous conclusion, the board of directors deem it unnecessary to decide or determine whether a valid and enforceable contract existed between Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew and the Vitagraph Company of America at the time Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew terminated their relations with the Vitagraph Company of America and entered into the employ of the Metro Pictures Corporation.

"The board unanimously concluded, from this view of the facts, that the charges made against the Metro Pictures Corporation had not been sustained."

V-L-S-E MAKES SYRACUSE BUYING OFFICE.

The volume of business resulting from the opening of a sub-office in Syracuse, several weeks ago, has caused the Big Four to make this branch one of its buying exchanges. It will be under the management of A. N. Webster, who has been with the V-L-S-E since its inception, and who is one of the best-known film men in the state.

The office of the Big Four in Syracuse occupies an entire two-story building. On the first floor are the general sales departments and the shipping department. The upper floors will be devoted to a spacious projection room and poster display room. The new Syracuse branch will serve all the territory of New York state, north and east of Albany, and including Albany.

KARPEN-CHRISTIE.

Mr. and Mrs. William Christie of Woodhaven, Long Island, N. Y., announce the marriage of their daughter, Jessie, to Clarence A. Karpen, the ceremony taking place on March 11. Mr. Karpen is well known to the trade as film editor for Pathe, but now with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company at the Fort Lee studio.

Business Conditions Promising

Federal Reserve Board Reports Show Increased Activities in All Sections of the United States.

By Clarence L. Linz.

AS THE Moving Picture World goes to press, one-quarter of 1916 is nearing an end and exhibitors, exchangemen and manufacturers are looking ahead to see what the forthcoming months have in store for them. For more than a year the general conditions of the United States have been greatly disturbed because of the war in Europe, and men in all lines of endeavor have been slow to go ahead in enlarging their holdings, or, in fact, often in making necessary improvements.

Thus it is interesting to note that the Government predicts better business for at least the next few months. This is evidenced by the reports rendered by the field agents in the twelve districts of the Federal Reserve Board which show that a small sized boom is at hand.

Conditions In the East.

Beginning with the Boston district, it is said that there the activity in general trade has continued, and in practically every line good business is reported. Uncertainty as to the effect of any change in the European situation has a restraining influence against undue expansion. Manufacturers and wholesalers everywhere are keeping their business well in hand. There is, however, the disturbing influence of labor troubles, which are beginning to be felt in some of the mill centers. Although some of the mills have advanced wages recently, the operatives are not satisfied and strike agitation continues.

A recent compilation of the Industrial Commission shows record industrial activity in New York State; there are more products, and workers, and wages paid than ever before. Retail trade continued good despite some unseasonable weather, and collections, a very important item, were generally satisfactory. There has been some labor trouble in one or two large industries, but generally labor has been very well employed.

All reports received in the Philadelphia Federal Reserve District indicate favorable conditions in practically all lines of business, and there seems to be a steady expansion of business. Many new plants in various lines are being erected, and there is less talk of the uncertain character of the present industrial activity. Many concerns have sold their future production for many months to come in advance. Steel mills are not showing keen interest in the matter of booking new business. The shipyards are having the greatest activity in their history, and nearly all yards have work on hand to last for two years or more. Labor conditions are satisfactory; there is an abundance of work, and increases in wages are being announced.

The leading feature in the Cleveland district has been the general advance in wages and the shortage of common labor. The high levels of business reported for January are being maintained. General conditions in the steel trade are, if possible, stronger than at any time since the demand began. Extensive additions to manufacturing plants are being made or arranged. Collections are, generally speaking, good.

With railroad earnings reported good, the organization and construction of several short lines reported from North Carolina, the apparently healthful increased activities in manufactures, reasonable liquidation of debts, and new credits rendered available, the general business in the Richmond Federal Reserve district is good. On account of the rather open winter, farmers are reported well advanced in soil preparation. Cotton acreage will be slightly increased. This district includes the Carolinas, Virginia, Maryland and the District of Columbia, which of themselves constitute in the film business the Washington territory. From all over this territory there had come reports of small box office receipts during the last quarter of 1915. There has been an improvement noted, however, and the glowing reports from the Government agents will tend to inject just a little more optimism into the exhibitors which will lead them to greater endeavors.

In the Atlanta district the month of February is normally a quiet one, but this year there appeared to be very little lessening in the business activity of the first quarter. There is practically no change in the cotton situation. The general tendency in the tobacco market is for better prices with the prospect of planting a larger crop than last year.

Middle West Makes Good Showing.

Glowing reports come from Chicago and St. Louis districts. In each of these the large establishments are working to the limit; the wholesale business is good, and the retailers are enjoying the results of the general activity. In the Minneapolis district the severe winter, with a fall of from thirty to forty inches of snow in the month of January alone, had a deterrent effect upon business, but the moisture produced therefrom will aid in the raising of the coming season's crops. Collections have slowed up somewhat in response to the weather conditions at country points, but continue good. Book accounts as a whole are much more favorable than for the same period of last year. Wholesale trade prospects are excellent for the spring months. In the Kansas City district, railways are being taxed beyond capacity and a shortage of freight cars greater than at any time in recent years has existed, owing largely to the increased shipments of last year's grain. Prosperity and a record-breaking year are almost unanimously looked for by the heads of wholesale firms. Increases over 1915 for January and February range from 10 to 100 per cent, and indications that this satisfactory condition will continue throughout the season are good. There is great activity in the oil and lumber industries.

Texas and Coast States.

The severe weather greatly affected conditions in the Dallas district as heavy damage was done to the wheat and oat crops. The fruit growers are much encouraged at the present prospects of a large crop. Wholesalers and jobbers are reporting good business. In the San Francisco district, the severe weather also had an ill effect, but the outlook for the succeeding months is very bright.

Mignon Anderson Joins Ivan

MIGNON ANDERSON, a favorite of the photoplay theater patrons who was for a long number of years with Thanhouser (though she is but a few years old) has joined the Ivan Film Productions.

Miss Anderson's first role under the Ivan banner will be in the "The City of Illusion," an especially strong play, written by Ivan Abramson.

Miss Anderson will portray the role of a country girl who is dazzled by the lure of the city and realizes in the end that the happiness to be found in a big town is but a mirage and cannot be easily found. Disillusioned, she retraces her steps and finds happiness where she least expected to—her home in the country.

An exceptional supporting cast appears with Miss Anderson, Paula Shay, Bradley Barer, Joseph Burke and Willard Case being in the company which is being directed by Ivan Abramson.

PARAMOUNT'S NEW PRESS MANAGER.

Charles E. Moyer, a well-known newspaperman and magazine writer, has been named general press representative and manager of the Press Department of the Paramount Pictures, to take the place of Tarleton Winchester, resigned, who is spending a few weeks in the country because of ill health.

Mr. Moyer has been with Paramount for the past six months, and prior to his affiliations with this concern was the dramatic editor and special representative of a number of newspapers throughout Pennsylvania, coming to Paramount from the Reading Telegram and News-Times.

With the rapid growth of the Paramount organization the work of the promotion, publicity, press and advertising departments has vastly increased, until it has reached an unprecedented state in the theatrical world, the Press Department alone covering a total of more than 3,000 newspapers and 4,000 exhibitors throughout the country, besides more than 150 magazines. Unique editorial and newspaper mediums have been inaugurated in the department during the past month.

"Programs" for Exhibitors

Vest-Pocket Schedule of Biograph Releases for April Offers Interesting Selection—Free Special Service.

"PROGRAMS" for April—the handy vest-pocket memorandum calendar issued monthly by Biograph—is just off the press. Copies of this attractive booklet were mailed this week to nearly fifteen thousand exhibitors, and Biograph wishes the trade generally to know that duplicate copies are free for the asking. The April issue repeats the offer of the Biograph publicity department to render free special service in solving publicity problems for any exhibitor or theater advertising manager who may be interested.

Ten subjects of various lengths from one to three reels are listed on the Biograph program for April. A Biograph spectacle and four Griffith reissues are among the good things offered.

There are four of the Wednesday three-reel features in the regular service. "Paths That Crossed," released April 5, is a sensational drama of retributive justice; "The Stampede" is a spectacular drama of the Great West, released April 12. The climax, from which this unusual story of politics and love derives its name, shows the hero and heroine surrounded by a stampeding herd of cattle. The majority of the scenes were made amid the ruins of the great Zuni pueblo, a fact from which this subject derives great educational value.

"The Larrimore Case," released April 19, is a mystery drama with an unusual plot and many situations calling for elaborate staging. "The Spring Chicken," released April 26, is a famous Broadway success adapted to the screen in three reels of brisk comedy.

Two remarkable two-reel productions are "The Man Who Called After Dark" and "Celeste," both featuring well-known Biograph favorites in productions of exceptional interest. The first named is a mystery with a unique twist, the second a drama of the sea.

D. W. Griffith directed the four single-reel subjects scheduled for reissue during April. Henry Walthall, Blanche Sweet, Mae Marsh and Lionel Barrymore figure in the cast of "Three Friends"; Robert Harron and Mae Mash have the leading roles in "The Tender-Hearted Boy"; Lillian Gish and Lionel Barrymore head a large cast of present-day stars in the vivid drama, "A Cry for Help"; and Blanche Sweet leads with Charles H. West in "The Blind Princess and the Poet."

30x45 feet and weighing nine tons, which carries the lamps, traverses the studio.

The private and general offices are located on the first and second floors in one end of the building, the laboratory being on the first floor, parallel with the studio, above which are the dressing rooms, wardrobe room and exhibition room. Below one portion of the studio floor is a concrete tank. The laboratory contains separate chemical, developing, washing, tinting, drying and assembling rooms; also printing and title rooms, all equipped with the most improved machines.

In the adjoining yard, which is 60x110 feet, are being constructed sunken gardens, pergolas, grape arbors, etc. The building is constructed in such a way that the roof is entirely clear and will be used when the weather permits as an outdoor studio. The building was designed by William T. Braun, a Chicago architect, who is a specialist in the designing and construction of motion picture studios.

Universal to Dance on March 18

Like Its Predecessors Is to Be a Big Event—and Then Some.

WE have received from H. H. Van Loan of the Universal's publicity and promoting and propaganda staff an outline on the coming annual ball of the Universal Film Company, which will be held at the Grand Central Palace on the evening of March 18. To tell the truth, the story is more than an outline. It exudes outlines, it promises, even threatens them. We are not to be frightened—not for a moment—by anything Mr. Van Loan says about the big annual function of the Universal boys and girls. We shall be there, with bells on, and with our hair in a braid—if it so fortunately happen there be enough of that commodity to justify the braid. Just listen to this opening paragraph of the aforementioned outline, or rather a part of that paragraph, and see if you blame us:

"Nymphs, wood sprites and fairies; lissome denizens of the slopes of Parnassus. Harken to the pipies (sic) of Pan! Swelling over the lea, wafted on the zephyrs of spring (V. L. must be looking for some change in the weather hereabout), comes the announcement that on March 18, place Grand Central Palace, all the elfs, fays and aerie little dears of the Universal Company will dance" (cut here).

"Tickets for the affair are already at a premium," says V. L. considerably further on, after outlining the prizes that will be awarded for costumes, "and it is the intention to limit invitations to the artistic world. Only authors and journalists, actors and actresses, and sculptors and painters will be admitted." (We are sure going to horn in here, somewhere, somehow.) "The crass general public will be banned. In other words, those who lack the artistic viewpoint will be de trop and personas non gratae, if our Latine hasn't gone back on us." (This V. L. fellow is a regular kidder.)

We are not going to devote any more space to the advance announcement of the big time. We will refrain until the fait accompli or something like that—that is, always provided, of course, we survive the hospitality of the 1600 Broadway bunch.

Mae Gaston With Horsley

DAVID HORSLEY has signed contracts with Miss Mae Gaston which make her a permanent member of one of his stock organizations at his studios in Los Angeles. Originally she was engaged for only one picture, "The Love Liar," but her interpretation of the character of Diana Strongwell was done so understandingly and with such a keen conception of the requirements of motion picture acting that Mr. Horsley decided to retain her permanently. Her signature to a contract accordingly followed.

Mae Gaston.

Prior to her appearance in Mr. Horsley's production of "The Love Liar," Miss Gaston was identified with the Reliance-Majestic and Fine Arts studios, playing under the direction of Jack Adolphi and W. Christy Cabanne. Among the pictures in which she figured are "Up From the Depths," "Rose Leaves," and "Father and the Boys," with Digby Bell. Miss Gaston will be cast in the next David Horsley production starring Crane Wilbur.

The Elmendorf Travel Talks, Inc.

Elmendorf's Fine Educational Films, Accompanied by Lectures, Will Be Presented in Every Photoplay Theater Throughout the Country.

DR. ALBERT LOWENTHAL, secretary and treasurer, and Wm. Cadoret, Western manager of the Elmendorf Travel Talks, Inc., called at the Chicago office Tuesday afternoon, March 7. They informed us that the company has established offices in a suite of four rooms on the eleventh floor of the Schiller Building, and that Mr. Cadoret will take charge of the making of contracts and bookings and attend to posters and other advertising. Mr. Cadoret will be assisted in this department by Phil H. Solomon, well known in film circles in the distributing department in Chicago,and S. S. Lippert, formerly with Metro. A full staff of traveling representatives has been engaged and is now in the field.

Some time ago Mr. Lowenthal met Mr. Elmendorf and succeeded in winning his interest in the presentation of his travel talks in photoplay theaters throughout the country.

Dr. Lowenthal drew Mr. Elmendorf's attention to the great boon that would be conferred on American school children by having these remarkable educational films brought to their own towns where they could be seen to advantage with the proper facilities. He also reminded Mr. Elmendorf of his intention, as planned in his scheme, to furnish these films to superintendents of schools, school principals, fraternal organizations, and others interested in educational pictures of this kind, after they had been exploited in the photoplay houses. Mr. Elmendorf was very much impressed by the proposal, and after due consideration he and Dr. Lowenthal and Mr. Cadoret formed the Elmendorf Travel Talks, Inc.

The policy that will be pursued is one that will lead to the best exploitation of these educational pictures. They will be released to photoplay theaters first, one travel talk to be given once a month in every city, town and village throughout the country. Dr. Lowenthal and his partners have already received the assurance of the hearty co-operation of all the school authorities throughout the country in the introduction of these pictures, and in case any school principal or school superintendent may require the travel talks for special presentation, they will be able to book them after the photoplay houses in their respective cities have first presented them.

Dr. Lowenthal and Manager Cadoret have planned so as to have each travel talk, wherever presented, accompanied by an experienced lecturer, who has either been associated with Mr. Elmendorf and his travels, or who is thoroughly familiar with the sections of country in any part of the world that may be shown on the screen. For example, the lecturer on the Ceylon travel talk was Mr. Elmendorf's personal guide through the country, and he will accompany the Ceylon travel talk whereever presented. The same rule will apply to all the other subjects.

Dr. Lowenthal drew attention to the fact that the whole of the vast Elmendorf collection of travel talks will be handled by the Company. This collection has been made with great labor during the pst twenty-eight years, and, according to Mr. Elmendorf's statement, represents an outlay of about two and a half million dollars. This outlay, of course, does not represent the value of the films alone; it represents, in addition, the expenses of forming his organization and the cost of bringing the pictures before the public.

These personal travel talks by Mr. Elmendorf have been given only in the larger cities, including New York City, Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston, St. Louis, St. Paul and Washington, at prices ranging as high as $2.50 per seat, so that their exploitation by the Elmendorf Travel Talks, Inc., will be made practically in virgin soil, and at such prices of admission as will enable all to see them.

Exactly the same travel talks used by Mr. Elmendorf, without cutting, will be booked to exhibitors throughout the country, who will be obliged to charge a minimum of 25 cents for adults and 10 cents for children.

Illinois, Indiana and Ohio will be the first states in which the travel talks will be released, and the first release will be made on April 17 for this territory. These states, of course, will be booked from the Chicago office. As time goes on, other offices will be established as booking centers in various sections, so that the entire country will be covered.

Each travel talk will take, with the lecture, about one hour and 40 minutes, without intermission, the films ranging from 2,000 to 2,500 feet in length. The original telephotographs, in colors, used by Mr. Elmendorf, will accompany each travel talk.

The great interest taken in these fine educational films is shown by the heavy mail received each day from exhibitors at the offices of the Elmendorf Travel Talks, Inc., asking that a representative call at once.

Dwight Elmendorf is president of the Elmendorf Travel Talks, Inc., and he will take an active interest in the success of the company. Mr. Cadoret is an exhibitor of long standing. He now owns the new La Petite theater in Kankakee and a circuit of four other theaters.

Cine-Mudial Grows

Third Issue Replete With Suggestions and Valuable Information.

THE third issue of "Cine-Mundial," the Spanish edition of The Moving Picture World, has just come from the press. "Cine-Mundial" is again full of valuable suggestions to the American producer, who desires to sell his pictures in the Latin-American market. Beside these hints there is an abundance of information which the prospective seller in the Latin-American market will find of decided practical value. The text throughout is characterized by the same practical spirit of service and the same earnest desire to be useful which has made The Moving Picture World such an asset in the film industry.

"Cine-Mundial" is doing pioneer work. It aims to bring the Latin-American buyer in contact with the best and richest film supply of the world. As a medium of advertising, the "Cine-Mundial" is, of course, without any competition. There is no other publication in Spanish which urges the good qualities of the American-made picture upon the film buyers in the South American republics. In this respect "Cine-Mundial" performs missionary work of the most advanced character.

The editorial staff of "Cine-Mundial" is thoroughly conversant with conditions in Latin America. This exceptional and absolutely reliable fund of information is at the disposal of any and all American film men who look upon the Latin-American market with a true appreciation of the possibilities it offers. The offices of the "Cine-Mundial" are on the tenth floor of the Pullman Building, 17 Madison avenue. All inquiries, whether made in person or by mail, will receive the most careful consideration and will be answered as promptly as possible.

FRANK POWELL AS A DIRECTOR.

THERE are several points about the work of Frank Powell in his most recent picture "The Witch," put on for William Fox, that are interesting. In the first place his material, a story suggested by Sardou's, "The Sorceress,' was not well adapted for a screen offering. It was designed by Sardou to be a vehicle for a great actress and never was counted a great play; but as an artificial stringing of situations. Director Powell has conquered this disadvantage and made an acceptable commercial picture of a tale too unconvincing to be interesting.

One will notice an open-mindedness and fluidity in his direction. For instance, in the first scenes showing a battle between two factions in some kind of a Mexico, there was nothing to show worth while. The director has added outside things—plenty of dynamite, lots of it; also plenty of thunder, that came from the exhibitor; and plenty of rushing here and there of regiments of soldiers. Analyzed, it is nothing connected; but the scenes pass quickly and the spectator sees great trees being shattered, he gets the feeling of a great battle. It is all very exciting.

It was not easy to get such a story over. It is true that "The Witch" had a big heart full of love to picture and that helped. There was also a contrast to it in the love of the hero who was something of a coward. The great lover of the witch is made to bring her to the stake from which the god out of the situation rescues her. But, if the director had believed in it and tried to make it real by simple straightforward methods, it would have been a failure. What he did do was to carry the spectators' attention a bit to one side of the loose narative; by making the sets rich in suggestions carefully chosen to carry with the kind of story and, more than all, to seem actual, real. In permitting his players to "act up," making the high lights of emotion more prominent than nature would have done, he also covered the sins of his story. These things make his work specially commendable as showing good business sense and ability to make the most of small things.

President Aitken and His Stars.

An Unusual Group of Stars

Picture Taken at Fine Arts Studio Shows President Aitken and Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree Surrounded by Well Known Players.

AN UNUSUAL photograph comes out of the West—unusual in that such a combination of stars is rarely to be found under one roof or, to speak more accurately, under a series of roofs. The picture is from the Fine Arts Studio of the Triangle. It is to be regretted it does not contain the figures of David W. Griffith and Frank E. Woods, the active chief of staff of the producer. Probably Mr. Griffith was out of town and consequently Mr. Woods was too busy; still, that is more or less a chronic condition with both of these men.

The photograph was taken on a recent visit of Triangle President Harry E. Aitken at 4500 Sunset Boulevard. Mr. Aitken is seen in the middle row, the second from the left. Beside him, in the center of the picture, is Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree, whose appearance on the screen in the role of Macbeth is awaited with keen anticipation.

LULU WARRENTON AGAIN ILL.

Lulu Warrenton, well-known character actress of the Universal Company, who returned this week to work at Universal City after six weeks' absence from the studios on account of an attack of pneumonia, was taken ill the day after her return and is confined to her bed again. The attending physician says Mrs. Warrenton's condition is not serious, that she merely overtaxed her strength and after another week's rest will be able to resume her work at the picture city.

THANHOUSER CONTRIBUTES TO SHAKESPEARE TERCENTENARY.

The coming Shakespeare Tercentenary will find itself enriched by a valuable contribution from Edwin Thanhouser of New Rochelle. Frederick Sullivan, the well known Thanhouser director, is now at work on a most unusual production which will be released during the celebration. The only information that can be gained about the production just now is that it is an imaginative work of Philip Lonergan, and will very likely be in three reels. Mr. Thanhouser attaches so much importance to the value of the production that he has designated Florence La Badie to play the star role. The story will be the first work touching on Shakespeare so directly without being founded on any of the poet's work. It is purely a fanciful arrangement of events in which Shakespeare himself is impersonated, as are also the people of his time. It has been seen fit to devise a special vehicle in order to depart from the usual recognized but heavily burdened Shakespearean conceptions.

LE VINESS DIRECTING FOR AMERICAN.

Carl M. Le Viness, who has had a number of years of directing experience with producing companies on the Pacific Coast, has been placed in the directorship of one of the "Flying A" companies at the American studios in Santa Barbara. Director Le Viness will produce three-reel "Flying A" pictures. He already has begun work on his first subject, a drama from the pen of Carl Coolidge, in which the principal roles will be taken by Vivian Rich, Alfred Vosburgh and George Periolat. The title of this picture will be "Four Months."

EDWARD SLOMAN, NEW AMERICAN DIRECTOR.

Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, announces the addition to his directing staff of Edward Sloman, a director of note, who has served in this capacity with a number of large film producing companies. Mr. Sloman has already arrived at Santa Barbara from the East and will begin production work immediately. Franklin Ritchie, a newly-acquired American star, and Winnifred Greenwood will head the company he directs.

Alice Joyce Looking Around

PHOTOPLAY enthusiasts will hail with joy the announcement that Alice Joyce, whose popularity as a screen star is international, is returning to pictures after an absence extending over a year. Negotiations are now pending, and it will be announced shortly which of the big companies she will become associated with.

Miss Joyce left the Kalem Company over a year ago, at which time she was unanimously acclaimed one of the prettiest and cleverest stars in the film world. Reports that she had left pictures permanently were set at rest when Miss Joyce herself made the announcement that she had been taking a long rest and would very shortly return to film work. The announcement was made at the recent ball given by the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League and the Screen Club in Madison Square Garden, where she was given an enthusiastic reception by her many admirers.

Alice Joyce.

Miss Joyce is a noted beauty. She was born in Kansas City and educated in Virginia and New York. She won innumerable beauty prizes, and before going into pictures was much in demand as an artists' model. The pictures of her painted by Henry Hutt and Coles Phillips will long be remembered by art lovers.

In 1910 Miss Joyce joined the Kalem Company and soon became one of the best known and most popular stars in the country, not only because of her unusual good looks, but through her versatility as an actress, and an almost indefinable charm which ever haunts her on the screen.

GRIFFITH DIRECTS "HOODOO ANN."

Active as he is in the supervision of Fine Arts pictures for the Triangle program, David W. Griffith has surprised his associates on the Coast by the active direction he has given to the forthcoming Mae Marsh release, "Hoodoo Ann." Miss Marsh has been in great favor with the director since "The Birth of a Nation" days, and her long siege of ill health has prevented the fruition of many ambitious plans which he had for "the little sister of the films." But now, apparently, Miss Marsh is again able to resume her work, and Griffith is determined that her first appearance as a Triangle star shall be a success.

A typical cast of Griffith players will support Miss Marsh on her public reappearance. Robert Harron is featured with her in "Hoodoo Ann" and in the principal roles are Mildred Harris, Pearl Elmore, Wilbur Higby, Loyola O'Connor, William H. Brown, Charles Lee and Anna Hernandez. Miss Marsh is an orphan asylum heroine who eventually finds a good home and weds an ambitious young artist.

GOLD KING SCREEN IN LINWOOD THEATER.

Through an unfortunate error made in the article on the Linwood theater, Kansas City, Mo., which was published in the issue dated March 11, it was stated that that theater was fitted with a Gold Fibre screen when a Gold King screen made by the Gold King Screen Company, Altus, Okla., is used.

FORMER WORLD MAN NOW WITH V-L-S-E.

The Cincinnati sales force of the Big Four has been augmented by J. B. Lytle, formerly with the Cincinnati office of the World Film Corporation, where he established a most enviable sales record. Mr. Lytle will handle the Indiana territory and three counties in Ohio. The other sections of Ohio, and a part of West Virginia, will be covered by F. B. Chase, another new Big Four representative, who has been branch manager for the Western Union Telegraph Company, and whose selling experience covers a long period.

WORLD-EQUITABLE SCHEDULE.

The World and Equitable Corporations announced the definite release dates of their forthcoming productions, beginning with Jane Grey in "Man and His Angel" March 13 on the Equitable program, followed by Charles Cherry and Mary Charleson in "Passers By," Frank Sheridan, Arthur Ashley and Ethel Grey Terry in "The Struggle." Gail Kane in "Her God," and Bruce McRae and Gerda Holmes in "The Chain Invisible." During the same weeks and on the same release dates World Film will release Robert Warwick in "The Supreme Sacrifice," House Peters in "The Hand of Peril," Robert Warwick and Frances Nelson in "Human Driftwood," Clara Kimball Young in "The Feast of Life" and Edwin August in "The Social Highwayman." This list runs from March 13 to April 10 and shows a remarkable diversity of subjects, types of stars and supporting casts. No two players of the World or Equitable stock companies appear in any production closer than eight weeks apart, justifying the idea of variety and adding to the illusions of the spectators by having the stock players appear, when they are cast, in types or characters fitted to their personalities and not switching them from heavy to hero and back again.

JOE LEE, NEW YORK STATE REPRESENTATIVE FOR MERIT.

Joe Lee, well known to the exhibitors of New York State, has become New York State representative for the Merit Film Corporation, distributors of Ivan Film Productions in the Empire State. Mr. Lee is making an extended trip for the Merit, taking in all the large cities in New York State, from Albany to Syracuse, and reports that the exhibitors are cleaning up with Ivan productions and that he is doing a record-breaking business. Mr. Lee expects to open an office to facilitate shipping of Ivan subjects in one of the larger cities up-state within the next few weeks.

GETS AWAY WITH THE COIN.

The Consolidated Film & Supply Company of New Orleans, La., writes The Moving Picture World to the effect that a man named E. Trollinger of the Lonesome Pine Company of Ozark, Ala., has absconded with the funds of the theater at Ozark and the salaries of the employes together with the funds of the theater at Dothan, of which he was manager, and nine reels of film belonging to the Consolidated. Exhibitors are requested to be on the look-out for him.

"RAMONA" GOES TO FOURTY-FOURTH STREET.

W. H. Clune, head of the Clune Film Company, announces that "Ramona," the big production from the book by Helen Hunt Jackson will be shown to New Yorkers at the Forty-fourth Street theater. As much staging has to be constructed, it is expected the "cinema theatrical entertainment" will not be ready for New Yorkers before the second week in April. Arrangements are already under way for the placing of "Ramona" in large houses in Boston and Chicago. The fourteen-reel subject is now showing in Los Angeles and San Francisco.

CHAPLIN ENTERTAINED IN CHICAGO.

Charles Chaplin, accompanied by his brother Syd, and Henry P. Caufield, manager of the new studios in Los Angeles, where Charlie will produce his new comedies, arrived in Chicago from New York Friday morning, March 10, where he made a brief stay. On Friday evening he was the guest of honor at a dinner given by Jay Cairns, of the Nichols-Finn Advertising Company, at the Hotel Sherman.

ASHER BROS. TO BUILD ANOTHER HOUSE.

Marinette, Wis., is to have a new motion picture theater. It is to be built on Main street, and will occupy a plot of ground 90 by 120 feet. The building will be solid brick with an ornamental front of granite. The lobby will be a palatial one and the interior of the theater will be one of beauty. The auditorium will have a capacity of 700. Plans for the structure are now being made and the contract will be let as soon as the plans are completed.

The theater will be erected by the Madagin Lauerman Company, for Asher Bros., who now have the Bijou and Marinette theaters. They will retain both of these houses, giving them three amusement places in Marinette. A large pipe organ will be one of the features of the new theater. Asher Bros. now have eight modern picture houses in Chicago.

A Typical Goldberg Newspaper Cartoon.

Pathe Signs R. L. Goldberg

Famous Cartoonist Will Give Humorous Creations to the Screen—First Release Expected Soon.

PATHE has signed contracts whereby all the animated cartoon comedies of R. L. Goldberg, the famous artist-humorist of the New York Evening Mail, will be released through the Pathe Exchange, Inc. It is expected that one will be issued every two weeks, and, judging from those already completed, the screen productions will be original in conception and no less amusing than the newspaper drawings which have given Mr. Goldberg a country-wide reputation. During the past few years the youthful cartoonist has climbed to the top round of the newspaper ladder. His output has been syndicated and is being published daily in nearly every large city of the United States.

R. L. Goldberg.

To be only thirty-three years of age, yet draw a salary of $50,000 yearly, with percentages bringing it up to some $100,000, is to be in a class by yourself, and that is true of Goldberg. He was born in San Francisco and at an early age made up his mind to become a newspaper artist. His father objected to the boy's ambition, saying that there was no money in the newspaper business. Mr. Goldberg, senior, has altered his opinion since then.

SELZNICK GOES WEST.

Lewis J. Selznick, president and general manager of the new Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation, left New York last Saturday, March 11, for Cleveland and Pittsburgh to complete the final negotiations which he promises will result in the organization of his first assured film success. Before his departure, Mr. Selznick said: "All I can say just now is that our plans are rapidly maturing to the perfection of organization that will make the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation absolutely a sure-fire proposition. We have already secured under contract a half dozen of the most brilliant scenario writers in the profession, to prepare scripts for Miss Young. Each of these will be written solely with Miss Young's personality and style in mind and each, before our acceptance, will undergo a scrutiny that cannot fail to spot the least sign of weakness in the story before it is put into work at the studio.

Florence La Badie Does a "Creatore"

THE past week witnessed another addition to the volume on "Little Journeys of Film Stars," as the late Elbert Hubbard might have written it. This time the Elks of Salem, Mass., gave a ball and Ernest Horstmann, the New England theater man, who has just been elected Exalted Ruler, determined that film stars should be the guests of honor. At Mr. Horstmann's right hand throughout the evening was Florence La Badie, the Thanhouser star, and what she did not do at the ball and the banquet which followed, nobody else did, either.

Florence La Badie.

She came there with the intention of bringing back some money for the Actor's Fund, and the ladies of the visiting party passed out Miss La Badie's autographed pictures, the net result being a little over $65, gathered in a few minutes. But it must be said for the Elks and their friends that if Florence had brought a thousand pictures with her, they would have been sold too.

While the photographs were being passed out the band played an overture, and the Thanhouser star took the baton. It was quite unknown to anybody that Miss La Badie's accomplishments ran in this direction, but she led the musicians with a spectacular cleverness worthy of a Creatore.

This event furnished the unusual spectacle of film players selling the photographs of a star from another company than their own. Mr. Thanhouser therefore desires to acknowledge the favor of the Vitagraph, Fox, Universal and Hanover film organizations, while Florence La Badie wishes to convey her thanks publicly to Rose Tapley, Hope Stewart, Gazelle Marche and Doris Grey, all of whom helped for the good of the Actors' Fund. The promoters of the motion picture campaign of the Actors' Fund may well be proud of the splendid spirit of co-operation shown by these players in getting together to help Miss La Badie for a common cause.

"Lovely Mary" Is Good Vehicle for Mary Miles Minter—Julius Steger Scores in "The Blindness of Love."

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

"Lovely Mary."

BETTER than "Dimples," better, in fact, than most of the stories thus far provided for Mary Miles Minter, is Richard Barry's "Lovely Mary," produced by the Columbia Pictures Corporation under the direction of Edgar Jones. This is not a remarkable picture; but one of distinct charm and effective dramatic value. Furthermore, it shows Miss Minter in the kind of a character for which she is eminently suited, and the support provided by Thomas Carrigan, Harry Blakemore, Frederick Tidmarsh and Frank De Vernon is of the best.

Mr. Barry returned to Florida in 1901 for the foundation of his plot, which is based on the state law, since repealed, that permitted the employment of convicts by the citizens of the state. In selecting this particular location and period for his story, the author must be credited with originality, and barring two conventional plot situations, the picture keeps well out of the beaten track. Mr. Barry is most conventional when he causes the innocent hero to be found standing over the body of a recently murdered man, and in consequence arrested and sent to the penitentiary, also when he provides a dying confession to account for the release of the wrongly sentenced convict. But these points must not be held against a story which possesses so many attractive features.

Miss Minter is very pleasing as the last feminine survivor of an old southern family, whose wealth is confined to unimproved land of questionable value. Negotiations for the purchase of this property give the story its start and bring about the meeting of Lovely Mary and Roland Manning, the agent for a northern investing company, who is bidding in opposition to the representative of another company, the man responsible for the shooting, as the audience knows.

All this is preparatory to the author's most unusual conception when he causes Lovely Mary to visit the governor with the request that he allow her to take advantage of the law by employing the convict, Manning, on her estate. Scenes between these two have considerable charm, heightened by the fine choice of locations, good lighting and perfect photography. Audiences will like Miss Minter better than ever after they have watched her in this picture.

"The Blindness of Love."

If Harry O. Hoyt designed this production of Rolfe Photoplays, Inc. especially to suit the personality and method of Julius Steger, he displayed the best of judgment. Mr. Steger is given the type of sympathetic character which for long years he portrayed with such marked success on the stage, and there are few, if any, actors on the screen capable of putting an equal amount of feeling into a similar impersonation. It is a welcome change to find a photoplay, and a good photoplay, it should be added, in which love between the sexes is given a subordinate part. "The Blindness of Love" is not what one might imagine from the title; it is, instead, a heart-interest drama based on the all too complete devotion of a father to his son. Without pointedly preaching a lesson, it is the kind of a picture that should carry a warning to over-indulgent parents.

Joseph Wilton, as played by Mr. Steger, is shown to be a wealthy piano manufacturer, completely wrapped up in the development of his son, who is supposed to be progressing satisfactorily at college. Robert informs his father that the sums of money being sent to him are being expended in the purchase of books, when as a matter of fact the youth's most laudable accomplishment in college is with the football team. There is true character revelation in the college scenes at the time of an important game when the father visits his son and is treated with scant courtesy. These scenes are made interesting in themselves, and beyond that they contribute materially to a full comprehension of the two most essential characters.

It is no surprise to learn that Robert is expelled from college and that he makes a sorry mess of the business in which he is established by his father. This time the indulgent parent is forced to admit the incompetency of the spoiled youth, but even at the sacrifice of his own fortune he is ready to assist him. Having ruined himself, caused a run on a bank and well night broken his father's heart, Robert leaves town announcing that he will not return until he has redeemed his reputation. In due time this happens and the full possibilities for pathos are realized in the meeting of the aged Wilton and the reformed prodigal.

George LeGurre is a trifle slight of build to suggest a football player, but overlooking this physical limitation he is well adapted to the role of Robert. Grace Valentine makes a dashing young woman of the boy's sweetheart and other parts were wisely cast. In the matter of settings the production is up to the high Metro standard.

Biograph Drama and Reissues

"Madelaine Morel" Is Effective Adaptation of Stage Play—Griffith Productions for April Release.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

"Madelaine Morel."

AUGUSTIN DALY'S drama, "Madelaine Morel," famous with an earlier generation, has been made into an excellent three-part picture by the Biograph Company. The plot seems admirably suited to photoplay needs; the story is concisely presented to exclude everything that does not contribute to its progress and the actors succeed in drawing sharply defined characters. Comment on Biograph settings and photography has become a bit trite, but the superior artistic quality of this film really demands notice. The choice of locations was unfailingly fortunate and some of the scenes were so well lighted and photographed that the effect became almost stereoscopic.

Betty Gray is pleasingly sympathetic in her playing of Madelaine, a faithful daughter who shares poverty with her father until his death and then, through force of circumstances, becomes the mistress of a wealthy young society man. It is a drama of cumulative interest, which realizes its strongest moments in the concluding scenes staged in a church when Madelaine's seducer is about to marry another woman. Church settings are notably accurate and the action preceding the interruption of the ceremony makes stirring melodrama. The cast includes William Russell, Robert Drouet, Jack Drumeir, Alan Hale and Gretchen Hartman. Pretty scenes of child life characterize the opening of the first reel.

Griffith Reissues.

For many weeks the Biograph Company has circulated single-reel pictures produced by Griffith, yet there appears to be no shortage in subjects of exceptional quality. The four reissues selected for April, "Three Friends," "The Blind Princess and the Poet," "A Cry for Help" and "The Tender-hearted Boy" may be compared favorably with those of any preceding month, and beyond question they are above the average of present day program production. "Three Friends" is a vivid dramatic sketch of life in a factory town, acted by Henry Walthall, Blanche Sweet, Mae Marsh, Jack Dillon and Lionel Barrymore. A poetic costume drama, of the kind Griffith knew so well how to handle, is found in "The Blind Princess and the Poet," Blanche Sweet looking wholly charming as the princess, whose sight is restored by the unselfish love of the poet.

Photoplay drama of the best type, presented by actors such as Lionel Barrymore, Robert Harron, Walter Miller and Lillian and Dorothy Gish, is offered in "A Cry for Help," a modern story showing that even a much despised tramp may become a useful and appreciative citizen if properly treated. Robert Harron and Mae Marsh are perfect types for the characters of the boy and girl featured in "The Tender-hearted Boy," a drama of strong sympathetic appeal. Kate Bruce, Chrystie Miller, Lionel Barrymore and Jack Dillon also appear in this picture.

"The Marble Heart"

Five-Reel Fox Picture of Passion, Set in French West Indies—Ably Made Picture of Erotic Psychology.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE latest Fox offering, a five-reel picture, "The Marble Heart," carries an erotic woman's passion story through to its horrible ending which emphatically enough suggests the emptiness of her body's hope when she and her paramour have placed a murder between their souls and the social fire-side of normal human life. The story is set in the French West Indies and was made under the supervision of Herbert Brenon, both in the production of the scenario and in the direction, which was left immediately in the charge of Kenean Buel. The central figure of the story is a young woman played by Violet Horner, whose acting makes clear as day the mainspring that started the tragedy—a sex incompatibility with her matter-of-fact husband.

There is probably more truth in it than is usually found in this kind of story. Hers was a marriage of convenience and would have been all right—leaving out clinical abnormality in her nervous system—if her warmth of nature had been more adequately responded to. She looks upon her husband's friend, an artist, in a way that makes him realize that she has looked upon him. She sees to it that he learns that her aunt, the mother of her husband, has willed her 40,000 francs and the artist, after reading the will, begins to dream. One can see, in the early steps of the intrigue, whatever he wants to. Then comes the picnic at which the lover drowns the husband and gets praised for trying to save him. A little while after that they are married and their path is then a steep down-grade. Hate of themselves and each other leads to quarrelling and recrimination. The old woman—a strongly acted part all through—opens the door and hears—falls in a faint. The young woman has time to wash the blood from her mouth where her husband had struck her before the doctor comes. The old woman is paralyzed and can't speak, but she knows, and for days terror is added to the burden of the two culprits lest she find some way of telling what she knows. A number of apparition scenes do more harm than good. The end is suicide.

"The Hero of Submarine D-2"

V-L-S-E Vitagraph Five-Part Subject Stirring and Dramatic Story With Naval Atmosphere.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

IT IS a stirring picture that Paul Scardon has produced for the Vitagraph Company and which was released on the V-L-S-E program on March 13. "The Hero of Submarine D-2" is in five parts. It is an adaptation of "Colton, U. S. N.," written by Cyrus Townsend Brady, who was graduated from Annapolis in the class of '83. The story is of the navy from start to finish, and in the course of the working out we are taken from Annapolis to Newport and to Old Point Comfort. The atmosphere throughout is unusual, if we except the taking on Long Island of a minor scene which purports to be of the South Sea.

Charles Richman has the leading role of Lieutenant Commander Colton, a hero if in danger but bashful among women. It is a strong characterization, one that will recall his work in "The Battle Cry of Peace." Mr. Richman is supported by a cast of unusual excellence, as witness: Eleanor Woodruff, Anders Randolph, L. Rogers Lytton, James Morrison, Charles Wellesley, Thomas Mills and Zena Keefe.

The story contains intrigue and politics as well as love and ships and sailors. There is a spendthrift newspaper man—"journalist," whatever that is—who falls into the clutches of a foreign ambassador and endeavors to learn things about the American Navy. He attempts to accomplish the destruction of the American fleet as it enters Hampton Roads. Twelve mines have been planted in the channel. These are exploded by Colton just before the arrival of the ships—making a spectacle which, together with the tense dramatic situation, will be very likely to upset any house; it will "stand 'em on their heads." On the political side the story shows how politics enters into the assignment of officers, both in reward and in rebuke.

Of heart interest there is an abundance. The picture is a succession of situations that stir and that move. We are not going to spoil it by outlining them here, but it is a subject that combines a good story with the co-operation of the United States government—and that is saying much. It is said that the scenes of the interior of the submarine are the first ever actually photographed in an underwater boat, and so far as this writer knows it is the exact truth. There have been studio representations, to be sure.

"The Hero of Submarine D-2" is a subject on which exhibitors safely may go the limit. It is a patriotic picture, and therefore of unusual timeliness; and what is not usual it is a combination of patriotism and strong drama, elaborately staged, with Uncle Sam as collaborating director.

Garwood's Activities.

Billy Garwood, who recently returned from Universal City where he took the leading part in "Lord John's Journal," has been made a director at Universal Heights. His first picture caused him to get in trouble with nearly all the actresses at the studio. His picture was "Charlie's War Brides," in which he made love to "war brides" of all nationalities, with the result that he got into some terrible international tangles. His next picture is entitled "Some Leap," and after considering what Billy had to go through with in his first, we are of the opinion that "Some Leap" is very apropos.

"Man and His Angel" is a First-Class Drama—Holbrook Blinn is Chief Attraction in "The Unpardonable Sin."

"Man and His Angel."

MOST emphatically Jane Grey is a success in screen performances. It is a genuine pleasure to watch her delicate shadings of expression and her consistent characterization in a role such as that of Sonia Demitri, the high-minded, wholly inspiring heroine of "Man and His Angel," a Triumph-Equitable production made by Burton King for release through World Film. Without reservation, this picture may be classed as clean, wholesome entertainment. The story generally remains within the limits of reason and where there is danger of the incidents appearing forced, an adroit plot development prevents any glaring artificialities. In fact, the production, as a whole, carries a tone of sincerity and therein lies much of its charm.

Two characters dominate the story—Sonia, the daughter of an exiled Russian nobleman who opens a second-hand bookstore in New York, and David Tryne, a deformed misanthrope, whose lonely life is utterly cheerless until a new spirit it born by the unprecedented kindness of the book dealer and his daughter. Henri Bergman's portrayal of Tryne is a thoroughly artistic piece of work, entirely convincing in indicating the emotional turmoil of the misshapen man who falls hopelessly in love with Sonia, as gentle as she is beautiful. The real conflict in the drama centers in the nature of Tryne, subject to a quite devilish jealousy on the one hand and to the elevating influence of Sonia on the other. Mr. Bergman makes the poor book clerk so comprehensibly human that he excites sympathy even when his actions are despicable.

There is telling pathos in the dog-like fidelity of Tryne, combined with the bitter feeling of loss when Sonia, as a renowned singer, acquires a circle of wealthy friends. In using every available means to prevent her marriage, he is fighting for all that is dear to him in life. Another consistent characterization is given by Willard Deshielle as the Russian nobleman, and well in the spirit of the drama are Edward MacKay and Robert Lee Hill. Settings are excellent, notably that of the bookshop.

"The Unpardonable Sin."

Originality of theme cannot be claimed for this World Film drama starring Holbrook Blinn, but that, of course, need not be urged as an adverse argument. "The Unpardonable Sin" is another picture utilizing as its central character a man who fluctuates between good and evil until his better nature dominates. Mr. Blinn has had better opportunities in some previous productions, but his interpretation of Walter Norman is interesting enough to hold the attention and the story suffices, despite a few crudities.

The production of Barry O'Neill is exceedingly well staged, the acting always is intelligent and subsequent prints probably will reveal better photography than that evidenced in the copy shown for review. It does seem, however, that Mr. Blinn deserves something with a little more depth, something striking more effectively at the truths of life than he finds in this drama, which, after all, is but a variation of a story that has been told many times before and not infrequently with greater finish. There is a lack of smoothness in the advancement of the plot, a certain episodic quality in the scenes, a tendency to shift the interest too suddenly, and as a result the spectator is not apt to forget that he is watching a photoplay. The art that covers dramatic machinery is lacking.

Allowing for this, one may still respond to the more forceful of the melodramatic situations, due to Norman's craving for drink and his gratification of the appetite, thereby committing, according to the standards of his fiancee, the unpardonable sin. Norman is on the verge of becoming a chronic alcoholic when he pulls himself together, only to relapse at a most inopportune moment. Cast off by his sweetheart, he sinks lower and lower, but reforms in time to give the story a hopeful ending. The two women in the drama are satisfactorily presented by Helen Fulton and Lila Hayward Chester, while others in a

"The Code of Marcia Gray"

Splendidly Staged Human Drama in Which Oliver Morosco Presents the Celebrated English Actress, Constance Collier.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THERE are various points of merit about this production in which Constance Collier gives so excellant an impersonation of that type of woman to which the masculine fancy still clings: a splendid, virtuous type, but wofully dependent withal, and in this case an innocent participant in the disgrace of her husband's financial crash. The play, an original photodrama, has been magnificently staged, displaying sets that are marvelously beautiful and spacious. It concerns itself principally with the delineation of character, attaining therein remarkable success. Its story, which is located at one particular spot of the globe is simply and clearly outlined, and has been developed in a manner that obtains the best results.

Playing opposite Constance Collier are Henry DeVere and Forrest Stanley, both unquestionably well suited to their respective roles. Then there are Herbert Standing, who is easily remembered in the role of Banker Agnew; Howard Davies as Crane, Helen Jerome Eddy, as Crane's daughter, and Frank Boon as James Romaine. It is a notable fact that of the close-ups which appear in this production not one can be pointed at as being ineffective.

The production is also an unusually well-dressed one. The only point of the story at which one might feel an inclination to become critical is when after ejection from her own beautiful home, with apparently no place to go, we find Marcia Gray in another home which she has apparently rented, only a trifle less beautiful, and herself quite as well dressed as in the days of her prosperity. This might be explained on second thought by the supposition that she was not left entirely without funds, and that her splendid wardrobe still in condition is at her disposal.

This production contains nothing of a nature that might bar it from exhibition before children of any age. The characterization has been presented so strongly that there is no fear of even a child discriminating unwisely.

ONE of the best roles in this production has fallen to the lot of Lizette Thorne who gives proof of splendid ability backed by a personal magnetism that counts on the screen. E. The most striking point about the story is the fine moral lesson which is set forth. The second point that attracts our attention is the excellent characterization, and the advantage the director Donald MacDonald has taken of this fact to press home the main idea of the story, which is really built around the couplet,

"Kind hearts are more than coronets,
And simple faith than Norman blood."

The contrast between the calloused society folk and the simple country parents of Phil is effectively drawn. And the production, although not by any means a faultless one, is entertaining and praiseworthy.

IN THIS one-reel film Mr. Rising has succeeded in getting together some excellent views of our navy, many of which were photographed during the naval review of last year, from the deck of the "Mandalay." In securing the scenes of the parade of the jackies along Fifth avenue, New York City, it is evident that the work of photographing them was conducted under the guidance of an artistic eye, for in the neighborhood of Central Park it has not been forgotten that there are beautiful perspectives to be taken advantage of. The day of the parade was cloudy and wet, but in spite of this fact the scenes are remarkably well photographed and attractive.

Following the actual scenes of the review comes a fantastically arranged "Birth of Old Glory," and impersonations of some of the Presidents that have been, and the one that is, with his two grandchildren, starting with George Washington, including Abraham Lincoln, and ending with Woodrow Wilson.

The picture will be especially interesting to the public outside of New York, on account of the fine views which it presents about New York, such as the open harbor and the Statue of Liberty, Governor's Island, the Maine Monument, and the Hudson water front.

"The Flirt"

Blue Bird Picture of Exceptional Merit—From Booth Tarkington's Story, It Deals With Real American Life, and Grips All the Way.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE author of "The Flirt," from which Lois Weber has made a five-reel Blue Bird picture that everyone ought to see, is Booth Tarkington, and he is not unfortunate in having his story picturized; it shows on what virile, truthful lines he builds. When we stop for a moment and consider how many fine pictures Lois Weber has written, another fact comes up that also stands.

The qualities of this picture that make it good stand right out. The plot is as simple and true as the motion of an arm beginning from the shoulder and striking true. The characters are as well co-ordinated as the muscles around the arm. It tells a story of difficulties that grow and become out of the character of a flirt and the troubles that come to each person in the story through her character are justly apportioned to him or her according to his or her character and we are satisfied that it ought to be.

The place is somewhere in a thoroughly American town. We will all think we know these people and we'll believe what's told about them. Their life is the life we've looked on and lived. The flirt makes a terrible muss of things. She makes fools of all men until the plausible scoundrel comes and his selfishness, matching hers, piques her into making a fool of herself. Her weakness is that, always unwomanly, she still has a normal woman's needs and really falls in love as far as she can. Her sister's love story—true foil to hers—is a beautiful thing.

The character drawing is the picture's big characteristic.

Scene from "The Flirt" (Bluebird).

There are, among others, six truly individual human personalities. The first, of course, is the flirt, by Marie Walcamp; one will have to see it. Her young brother, by Antrim Short, reminds one of Tarkington's Penrod and is certainly attractive. Her father, by Ogden Crane, makes clear why the flirt became—she had never been corrected. Her sister, by Grace Benham, is a noble woman and the picture's advocate to our affections. Wade is a real American business man. He loves the flirt to distraction; but she can't fool him. He is glad to take her though when she comes to him; he is fool enough for that. Vilas, by Paul Byron, the lover who is wholly ruined by her, kills the scoundrel and himself at the end. Dick, by Fred Church, the hero of the story, is convincing but ordinary, and so is Corliss, the scoundrel, by Juan de la Cruz.

"Britain Prepared"

A Revelation of How Britain Has Lifted Herself to a State of Almost Perfect Preparedness During the Heavy Siege of the Present War.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

CHARLES URBAN, he who was responsible for the marvel of Kinemacolor, has gathered together in one tremendous footage of film the first complete and authentic revue of the accomplishments of Britain in meeting a situation for which at the commencement of the war she was practically unprepared. An exception must be made to this latter statement, however, in her great fleet, which has stood sponsor for the liberty of the seas for America and other nations, as well as for France and her own British Empire. This is exemplified in the film by illustration of the mine-sweeping operations and in other important ways.

The initial presentation of these films was made on Thursday evening, March 9, at the Wurlitzer Fine Arts Hall, New York City, before an audience of invited guests. Prior to the exhibition of the pictures a short address was delivered by Frederick Palmer, the well known war correspondent, who testified to the authenticity of what was to be exhibited, alluding briefly to the war after the feeling manner of one who has seen. Mr. Urban was also present, receiving his guests and attending to things in general with his usual cheery cordiality of manner.

The opening of the picture gives some excellent views illustrative of the making of the new British army, showing how in fifteen months four million British civilians were turned into a highly efficient military organization. Next came the making of munitions at the works of Messrs. Vickers, Ltd., showing the women and girls working at the lathe, making fuses, assembling and filling shells, and all the numerous tasks that present themselves at the munition shops. The training of raw recruits, showing the marvellously efficient methods resorted to is intensely interesting, the Royal Flying Corps dropping bombs on the territory of an imaginary enemy, the Motor Cycle Machine Gun section at work, the provisioning of an army showing the Army Bakery, where 172,000 pounds of bread is turned out per day, the review by King George V of 40,000 Irish volunteers, a contingent of the new army, are all items of special interest. We then come to what is tabulated as "The Sure Shield of Britain and the Empire," which acquaints us with the British navy at all its angles from the making of a naval gun, which is given in splendid detail, to battleships in action, among them the "Queen Elizabeth," which was pierced by a Turkish shell during the siege of the Dardanelles. Some splendid views of the Grand Fleet in the North Sea, include submarine maneuvers, daily duties performed by Jackies, and destroyers screening the fleet in the North Sea by circling around the ships.

Messrs. Vickers, Jury, Gaumont, Kineto and Urban are responsible for the photographing of the above.

"For the Defense"

A Lasky Feature of Five Reels in Which Fannie Ward Plays the Leading Part.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

IN technical perfection and in the attributes of atmosphere, photography and scenic beauty, this feature ranks well in the Lasky library, but in almost every other respect it either runs counter to or falls below the high artistic and ethical standards for which Lasky stands in the minds of the great screen-loving public. Miss Ward did the best she could with an impossible part, which required climbing and scaling talents rather than great histrionic gifts. The last reel is "full of action" and has the requisite number of thrills and to some extent it redeems the defects which are unusually numerous in this feature.

The central idea of the play, the groundwork upon which interest in the plot depends is glaringly improbable. Imagine a novice sent from a convent in France to another convent in Canada wholly unattended and unprotected. A girl preparing to enter a religious sisterhood must be supposed to be detached from worldly ideas and does not travel around in smart attire carrying with her a squirrel in a cage. In the story the novice gets into the hands of a male procurer, but after some adventures succeeds in escaping. These adventures are plainly digressive and might be omitted entirely with much advantage to the story. The novice after her harrowing but improbable experiences meets a young man at the end of a pier. The youth is about to commit suicide with a revolver which, as shown by a "close-up" was purchased for $4.50. The novice is also at the water's edge, having been unable to find shelter elsewhere. The sighs of the girl attract the young man and the anticipated rescue occurs promptly. I was sorry to see a whiskey advertisement on one of the piled-up boxes strewn about the pier. There was another "ad" with the lettering upside down which I was unable to catch. The novice falls in love with the youth on short notice, but still insists on going to the convent in Montreal. She finally arrives with the young man and the latter's employer before the gates of the convent and in full sight of the cloister she turns her back on her vocation, making it quite plain that it was affection for the young man that caused her to do it. I do not for an instant suspect that any offence to Catholics was intended, but ignorance and lack of tact constitute something very much like an offence. Too much care cannot be taken to avoid wounding the religious sensibilities or, if you wish, the religious prejudices of any considerable portion of theatergoers.

The play bristles with crudities both in the scenario and in the dramatic construction. To make a crime abhorrent and to make its perpetrator detested by the audience there must be malice or moral depravity or both. The butler who caused the death of a friend of the hero struck the fatal blow while defending a woman against the brutal desire of a drunken man. He never intended to kill the man and obviously had not the slightest motive for wishing his death. No real crime had been committed, and yet we are supposed to believe that a frightful and wilful murder has been done. This defect is radical and weakens the entire play.

plot, vitality of action and skill in construction which will insure that end. The endeavors of Director James W. Horne and the work of the two casts also contribute largely to the success of the pictures. The settings are elaborate and in good taste, and everything connected with the making of the two episodes displays a desire to substantiate the claims put forth by the Kalem Company in announcing the serial.

"The Little Monte Carlo."

At the very opening of the first episode a new note is struck—the introduction of two heroines in place of one. And it is quickly shown that such an arrangement has, in the present instance, many advantages. It permits the two women to play into each other's hands when following their favorite pastime of relieving some unfortunate sister, and to toss the interest from one to the other when there is the slightest danger of the action dragging or the scene becoming too long. Another element that adds to the entertaining qualities of both pictures is an underlying vein of natural comedy brought about by the neatness and dispatch with which the two heroines trap the Social Pirates whose downfall they attempt.

A short outline of the plot of "The Little Monte Carlo" will explain the meaning of the title, "The Social Pirates," and the intent of the author in writing the serial, each episode of which is complete in itself.

Mona Hartley and Mary Davenport, two attractive young women of means, make it their mission in life to fight the social outlaws who prey upon the weak and unfortunate. Arriving in this country from a trip to Europe, they rescue a young girl who is about to commit suicide, take her to their home and lay plans to force the man who is responsible for her misery to give her the protection of his name. This is accomplished by opening a "Little Monte Carlo" of their own and getting the recreant wooer into such financial difficulties that he is forced to accept their terms. As previously indicated, the manner in which this plot is told is highly effective. There is a swing and dash, variety of scene, and an unceasing flow of good humor and high spirits, also an absence of prosiness and didactic leanings, that will make screen patrons pronounce the name of George Bronson Howard with respect and gratitude.

Marin Sais and Ollie Kirkby are the two heroines. They are skillful of method, comely of person and at all times becomingly gowned. True Boardman, Frank Jonasson, Paul C. Hurst and Jess Arnold have the other important roles. The picture is in two reels. It will be released March 27.

"The Corsican Sisters."

The title to the second episode is felicitous. A middle-aged heartbreaker is taught a lesson by the conspirators for jilting a fond and trusting female. Representing themselves to be particularly jealous and fiery specimens of the daughters of Corsica, Mona and Mary pretend to fall in love with the middle-aged gentleman and keep him in such a bewildering whirl of doubt, suspense, ecstacy and fear that he is glad to escape after parting with a large roll of bills to be applied as a palliative for the jilted one's aching heart.

This picture has many traces of the humor found in French comedy, combined with the swift action and dramatic qualities of its predecessor. The fortune telling scene is the one place where the interest lags. The scene needs condensing. Marin Sais and Ollie Kirkby play with undiminished ardor and aptitude in this episode, and receive excellent support from Thomas Lingham and Paul C. Hurst. "The Corsican Sisters" is in two reels, and will be released April 3.

"Unto Those Who Sin"

A Powerful Photodrama of Social Life by Selig, With Miss Fritzi Brunette in the Leading Role—Story by James Oliver Curwood.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

"UNTO Those Who Sin" is a story of sin and death which clearly shows the dread influence of evil environment in early life. In this case the future of a girl is involved, one who was naturally inclined to the right, but who, through weakness of will power, succumbed to the attractiveness of the wrong path.

Nadia (Miss Fritzi Brunette) is the only child of a besotted father and an incontinent mother. Her wages as stenographer are brought home every week, and they are demanded regularly, to the last penny, by her drunken father. Careful of her personal appearance, as every right-minded girl should be, she pines for the new hat and the other necessary articles of apparel that are denied her. Then the drudge rebels, after long forbearance, and buys the needed things herself. That night her home becomes the scene of death, and she sees no more of her mother; she is now the only survivor.

Nadia soon afterward becomes the wife of a wealthy young man, Ashton, whose mistress she had been for some time, and he dies suddenly, leaving her an ample fortune and his beautiful home.

Some time later, at a fashionable seaside resort, she accidentally meets young Philip Morton, personally attractive but poor, and immediately falls in love with him. He is badly smitten, but discovers that the young woman permits wealthy old bachelors to worship at her shrine, and become disenthralled. He renounces Nadia and marries Isobel, a former sweetheart whom he had neglected for some time.

Nadia, who had a passionate love for Philip, seeks forgetfulness in becoming the wife of a silly, old fool—Amos Lawlor, a millionaire. But her new life soon becomes intolerable, and her desire to win Philip away from his wife becomes an obsession, while contempt and loathing for her senile husband grow stronger.

A press announcement that Philip and his wife are about to sail for Buenos Aires, where he is to represent his firm, catches her eye, and she forces her now invalid husband to accompany her to the same city, on the same vessel. On the voyage she makes a daring attempt to entrap Philip and win back his love, but fails. A few days after landing, she induces her husband to take a walk along the cliffs nearby, and pushes him over. He falls in the sea and is rescued by a fisherman. Filled with revenge he toils up the cliffs and confronts his wife, who had again, a few minutes before, been renounced and denounced by Philip, whom she had chanced to meet after committing the murder, as she believed.

Nadia shrinks with terror from the sight of her husband, believing it an apparition, but his revengeful reproaches and his sea-soaked garments convince her of her mistake, and she replies in kind. Furious at her former failure she again launches her body against his, but he seizes her by the hair as he is going over the edge of the precipice and both go to their doom.

Miss Brunette makes her Selig debut in a leading part, in this photodrama, and her Nadia is a talented creation. We see her as the unsophisticated girl stenographer, an attentive and earnest worker, modest and retiring, her dress forming a striking contrast in its plainness and cheapness to that of her friend Mabel, also a stenographer, who works in an office on the same floor, in the same building. She is unconscious of her good looks, just as she has been ignorant of her own rights, until the wily Mabel opens her eyes. And when we see her in that vile home of hers, our hearts pity her.

But what a change in a few short months, after Nadia has tasted the fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and evil! Dressed in fashionable attire and in perfect good taste; beautiful of face, graceful of form and betraying the refined manners becoming her station as the wife of a gentleman of means, Miss Brunette's Nadia is an attractive creature. But the portrayal, as Miss Brunette gives it, conveys to the spectator in a subtle manner that there is a lack of a good heart in Nadia, something that rings false, even in her attachment to Ashton, her husband. The life she had led after leaving her home, up to her marriage with the man whom she had used as an expedient, had taught her selfishness; and in Miss Brunette's keeping, Nadia betrays the same revolting selfishness in a more pronounced manner when she marries the dotard Lawlor.

The love scenes with Philip Morton before his marriage redeem Nadia, for real love there prompts her; but the scene in her stateroom, on the voyage to Buenos Aires, shows her an incarnate she devil. Miss Brunette carries this scene with fine realism.

The part of Philip Morton is ably sustained by George Larkin. One of the best efforts in the cast is the fine character acting of Al. W. Filson as Pierre Dupres, father of Nadia. His make-up, as it has been always (as long as I have known Mr. Filson), is faultless. Miss Lillian Hayward as Mme. Dupres also does excellent work.

Amos Lawlor and Jules Villars, the aged bachelors infatuated with Nadia, are played to the life by Wm. Sheerer and George Hernandez, and both men deserve high praise. Director Wm. Robert Daly has my compliments for the skill and art displayed in the control of the players in the cast and in the settings.

The release was made on March 6, through V-L-S-E, Inc.

While all the story elements are present, there is a strong undercurrent of protest against religious bigotry, particularly that of organizations which arrogate to themselves the privilege of making a superficial examination of the lives of members and of bringing about social destruction where social helpfulness would be more in accord with the spirit of Christianity. This is popular motif just now, particularly in the smaller towns, hence "Martha's Vindication" will meet with warm approval among big-hearted and magnanimous American people throughout the land.

The story is far from being an easy one to tell, but its structure is without blemish, and the sparkling subtitles help every inch of the way. The author is to be congratulated for getting away from the beaten track into new fields without wandering or wasting time. Interest never sags, as it does in padded five-reel releases. ations and some fine acting, particularly that of John Emerson in the lead. It was a novel and entirely appropriate idea to make an author the hero of a story, although he is somewhat idealized. He it is who carries the whole idea of repelling the invasion of a foreign army through an invention which he backed financially and stole from by spies by a rare combination of courage and cunning. Almost to the last he depends wholly on his own resources to defeat those who kill the inventor and attempt to thwart the designs of a committee of defence. This adds heavily to the attractiveness of the characterization. And it is exceedingly clever to make his chief aid a simp servant girl, most delightfully portrayed by Bessie Love. The elaborate and costly war scenes will bring round after round of applause at this time, and the whole picture, deserving high praise for the care shown in its production, should be a big winner.

"The Village Blacksmith."

"The Village Blacksmith" is a highly amusing farce, possibly a parody, with a lot of new material mixed with some already used, but all brought skilfully together in an entertaining unity of design. Hank Mann carries off the honors, but Tom Kennedy and Polly Moran run almost neck and neck with him for two laughable reels.

"The Habit of Happiness."

"The Habit of Happiness," a Fine Arts production featuring Douglas Fairbanks, is a story with a vital purpose and characterized by some delightful psychology and bright subtitles, but it is thrust upon the audience that the presentation is really a vehicle especially created for the talented star, a common enough fault, but one to be avoided where there is so much good material as in this release. Interesting revelation of thought and emotion results from the efforts of "Sunny Wiggins," impersonated by Fairbanks, to brighten dull lives The motive is pretty, and it is adequately handled, the accompanying subtitles fairly sparkling at times. We are following the fortunes of "Sunny Wiggins" in his amusing efforts with a serious purpose, when he starts to tell a funny story.. On the screen is now imprinted a publicity note wholly uncalled for, stating that the story told by Sunny Wiggins loses because Mr. Douglas Fairbanks is not telling it in person. That note should be cut out. From the moment of its appearance artistry takes wings and, along with it, any further interest in the affairs of Sunny Wiggins. Either cut it out, or add another screen announcement, giving the name and address of the tailor employed by Mr. Fairbanks, but the story is good enough to preserve by the elimination of all that does not pertain to it in the telling.

"Soldier Sons"

A Three-Reel Lubin Release, Picturing Army Life in the Philippines.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

WILBERT MELVILLE is the writer and director of "Soldier Sons," a three-reel Lubin photoplay, in which a U. S. Army Officer contracts a romantic marriage with a Filipino girl. Dick Bates, the officer in question, visits the Islands when a young man of 22. In Iloilo he meets Nina Rosario and marries her. Carlos Fulano, who is also in love with Nina, carries her into the jungle, and then makes it appear that she has fallen from a cliff and her body swept out to sea. Nina, however, succeeds in escaping from Carlos, and gets back to her home, to find that Dick, believing her dead, has returned to the United States. A son is born to the couple and fifteen years later, when Dick's regiment is ordered to the islands to help put down an insurrection, the officer comes face to face with his own son, a sharpshooter in the insurgent army. A meeting with his wife follows, and Dick resigns his commission and settles down in Iloilo with Nina and the boy.

This romantic theme affords opportunity for picturesque settings, the "pomp and circumstance of war," and the introduction of several scenes of intense dramatic interest. Such a reproduction of life may not stand the test of cold logic, but it has the swift movement of events and the touch of color that makes it acceptable to a large class of persons who believe that the first duty of a screen drama is to entertain. The battle scenes are enacted by a large number of combatants.

Scene from "Soldier Sons" (Lubin).

L. C. Shumway and Helen Wolcott are the army officer and his faithful wife. Mr. Shumway is "every inch a soldier," and Miss Wolcott's personality is well adapted to the Filipino girl.

"Two Men of Sandy Bar."

Five-Reel Red Feather Production Features Hobart Bosworth in Well Known Story by Bret Harte.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

AS MIGHT be anticipated from a screen adaptation of one of Bret Harte's stories of the early West, this offering contains a wealth of colorful atmosphere and incident. The famous characters, whose names alone will bring fond remembrances to the minds of the older generation, are represented here by Hobart Bosworth as John Oakhurst, Chas. H. Hickman as Col Starbottle, Gretchen Lederer as "The Duchess" and another as Sandy Morton. The types are well portrayed and the settings all that could be asked.

Scene from "Two Men of Sandy Bar" (Red Feather).

The screen adaptation by Olga Printzlau gives a clear exposition of the narrative, in spite of its extreme complication of plot. It is unfortunate in a way that the story has so many winding threads, for this calls for short scenes and interferes seriously with the dramatic suspense at times. Few novels seem so crowded in five reels as this, but the fault is a better one than too much padding.

Oakhurst is of course the chief center of interest, and Hobart Bosworth gives a convincing portraiture of this gentleman gambler, whose conscience is constantly at war with his lower instincts. The plot, itself centers about "The Duchess" and her double wedding, and the affairs of Sandy Morton, the dissolate heir.

The interest is swept along from the beginning—the shooting of the sheriff by Oakhurst, the departure of Pritchard, marriage of "The Duchess" to Sandy, are all well-pictured. The story gets an immediate hold and maintains it to the end.

Tyrone Power With Bluebird.

In their April 10 release of "John Needham's Double," Bluebird Photoplay, Inc., will present Tyrone Power for the first time as a star in that immensely popular program. It is further announced that Mr. Power will be seen later on in other Bluebirds, as a permanent acquisition to the staff of stars.

"John Needham's Double" was first presented in this country by the late E. S. Willard when, under A. M. Palmer's management he made his first American tour. At Palmer's theater, long since destroyed, Mr. Willard created what was, in those days, a mild sensation through his playing the dual role of John Needham and Joseph Norbury.

The Joseph Hatten play was, probably, the inspiration for "The Corsican Brothers," in which Robert Mantell, subsequently made a great success through his interpretation of similar "doubles." There has been no end of "double photography" in pictures, but the Bluebird announcement declares that nothing so clever as Mr. Power's work in scenes so long and skillfully acted has been consummated in the deceptive trickery of production.

Olga Printzlau furnished the screen adaptation, and the Smalleys produced "John Needham's Double" for Bluebird, with Marie Walcamp, Agnes Emerson, Frank Elliott, Walter Belasco, Frank Lanning, and Buster Emmons supporting Mr. Power in roles that serve very largely as "feeders" to the great central achievement of the double."

Additions to E. and R. Jungle Forces.

Lillian Brown Leighton, character comedienne and scenario writer, and Ralph McComas, comedian, have become affiliated with the E. & R. Jungle Film Company, producer of comedies featuring the chimpanzee team, Napoleon and Sally.

Miss Leighton has behind her several years of experience on the stock and vaudeville stage, while previous to her debut before the footlights she owned and published a weekly newspaper. Miss Leighton's last motion picture engagement was with the Selig Company, where she remained for five years.

Ralph McComas, who tips the scales at two hundred and ninety, is a true comedian in every sense. Business routine occupied the early years of his younger life, but his rotundity soon earned him an offer from a vaudeville agency. He spent six months on the road and then joined the Universal-Joker company under Allen Curtis' direction. After a short period with Fred Mace he joined the Selig forces and appeared in the series, "The Chronicles of Bloom Center" as Chubby Green. With the E. and R. Jungle Film Company he has also appeared in "Stung," "Father's Baby" and "In Dutch" and has met with great success in each of these releases.

Would Stage "Sis Hopkins."

Kalem's "Sis Hopkins Comedies" seem to have made a more than ordinary appeal to Texas photoplay followers, judging from a letter received by Kalem last week from William Geibig, general manager of the Hippodrome Amusement Company, Houston, Texas, which in addition to its other houses controls the Travis Theater, a stock repertoire theater. Manager Geibig writes: "I have just seen some of the Sis Hopkins comedies and it seems to me that I could put these stories on to great advantage in my stock and repertoire house, provided you would be willing and would let me have the full scenario. I would like to hear from you on this proposition. If you think favorably of it, please let me know by return mail the price you would sell the stories to me for, the number you have on hand, and the number of male and female parts in each cast." Needless to say, Kalem has not decided to embark on this new "side-line" for picture producers.

"The Battle Cry" Maintains Drawing Power.

That "The Battle Cry of Peace" continues to be an attraction of tremendous box office value, was made evident last week, in New York, where the film has been shown in innumerable theaters for several months past, when the Garden Theater, at Richmond Hill, L. I., was forced to call out the reserves to handle the crowds which stormed the lobby for admittance. The attendance stimulated by the presence of "The Battle Cry of Peace" in this theater was all the more remarkable because of the fact that the film was shown on March 7 and 8, while one of the severest snowstorms which New York has experienced this winter was raging.

"My Country First," by Terriss.

Tom Terriss has just completed a very stirring five-reeler, entitled "My Country First." It is a most timely story, as it deals principally with the operations in this country of pernicious foreigners who are endeavoring to create disturbances here and foment trouble between the United States Government and foreign powers. It deals with preparedness in a novel manner, coupled with a splendid heart interest of a man and two women, together with some wholesome and patriotic action. This picture should excite a large amount of interest in both exhibitors and public.

Comments on the Films

Exclusively by Our Own Staff.

General Film Company.

A LEAP YEAR WOOING (Kalem), March 3.—The first of the "Sis Hopkins" one-reel comedies does not give Rose Melville, the creator of the role, the same opportunities which she enjoyed on the stage, principally for the reason that her quaint manner of expressing herself is practically lost except inasmuch as the subtitles may be made to assist. Her opportunities for effective work are also somewhat curtailed in the film. "Sis Hopkins" will at the same time always be interesting. She is there with her pig-tails, gingham apron, etc.

OPHELIA (Lubin), March 6.—Suspicion of an innocent woman who risks her reputation in order to save her sister from an unfortunate love affair is the theme of this one-reel drama. Shannon Fife wrote the scenario and turned out a fairly good photoplay. Ethel Clayton is seen to advantage in the title role, and E. K. Lincoln, Craufurd Kent and Helen Weir complete a satisfactory cast.

BITTERSWEET (Vitagraph), March 6.—Daisy E. Smith, the author of this one-reel drama, has gone to every-day existence for the material of her photoplay, and reproduced it truthfully and skillfully. Her characters are human and belong to that great majority beloved by Lincoln. The interest is never lost and the happy ending is brought about by a logical sequence of events. George Stanley, Anne Schaefer, Webster Campbell, Lawrence Weingarten and Corinne Griffith do justic to their respective roles. The picture is on the Personnally Picked Program, and was directed by Rollin S. Sturgeon.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 19, 1916 (Selig), March 6.—Washington school girls form Rifle Club; curling match, Ottawa, Canada; dynamite explosion at Maplewood, Mo.; latest thing in autos, San Francisco; disinfecting Mexican emigrants, Laredo, Texas; winter sport, Waverly, Mass.; parade and burial of "General Gloom," San Francisco; soldiers drilling, Ottawa, Canada; trial trip of dreadnought "Pennsylvania" at Rockland, Me.; shipment of turtles from the Sandwich Islands; Governor General of Canada reviewing troops, Ottawa, Canada.

PANSY'S PAPAS (Vitagraph), March 6—Mary Anderson, Otto Lederer, Webster Campbell, Jack Weatherby and Jack Mower form the principal members of the cast in this one-reel comedy, written by Edwin Ray Coffin. The reel is amusing and the acting adequate, but the funniest thing connected with the picture is the eccentric movements of Otto Lederer and a new auto.

MAYBE MOONSHINE (Kalem), March 7.—In this one-reel comedy Ham and Bud are shown as small boys, children of rival mountain clans. When they arrive at manhood they become ardent moonshiners and feudists. The picture contains considerable laughable burlesque, and the two stars are assisted by Adoni Fovieri and a well selected cast. William Beaudine is the author and producer of the reel.

WHEN HUBBY FORGOT (Kalem), March 8.—Ray Hertsberg is the author of this one-reel comedy, and Ethel Teare has the star role. The complications are cleverly devised and afford excellent proof that circumstantial evidence is quite as unreliable in the family circle as in a court of law. Victor Rottman, Miss Griffith and R. Zell are Miss Teare's principal support.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 29, 1916 (Selig), March 9.—Arrival of the steamship Taldhydius at Seattle, Wash.; burning of old hospital, Cambridge, Mass.; new Fashion Fads; French troops in the Balkans; Naval Reserves of Portland, Ore., on U. S. warship Boston; Miss Joy Jenott fishing from dory, Seattle, Wash.; Palm Beach pastimes; "Cubs" leave Chicago for Tampa, Fla.; French reinforcements at the Island of Moudros.

BUNGLE'S ELOPEMENT (Vim), March 9.—The agile Mr. Bungle performs a number of startling acrobatic stunts in this one-reel farce before he succeeds in running off with his lady fair. There is plenty of lively action in the reel, and the laughs are frequent and hearty.

SHE CAME, SHE SAW, SHE CONQUERED (Kalem), March 10.—This is the second of the Rose Melville comedies. In this one Sis Hopkins goes to the city and becomes a model. Miss Melville's method of inciting an audience to laughter is again seen to advantage. A review of the picture appeared in the issue of March 11, page 1662.

A RACE FOR A LIFE (No. 70 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad series) (Kalem), March 11.—The late floods in the west have been cleverly utilized in this one-reel drama of life on the rail. A runaway engine is brought to a stop at the very edge of a washout. Helen Gibson introduces a circus stunt in connection with the racing engine, that is the real thing in thrills. Robyn Adair, Charles Mulgro and Percy Pembroke have important allotments in the cast.

SOME BOXER (Lubin), March 11.—One of the first Billie Reeves pictures made by the Lubin Company showed William in the prize ring. Mark Swan has written another scenario on the same subject, and leads up to the big event with skill. The match is short on science but long on laughs. William H. Turner, Arthur Matthews and Margaret Adair are members of the cast.

CANIMATED NOOZ NO. 6 (Essanay), March 8.—With another contribution to Wallace A. Carlson's amusing burlesque on Animated Weeklies, a number of the same clever artists, "Adventures of Dreamy Dudd," and five hundred feet devoted to the ice sports at Quebec, this reel should prove a welcome addition to most programs. War topics have especially inspired Mr. Carlson's pencil in this number of the "Canimated Nooz."

THEIR WEDDING DAY (Vim), March 10.—Pokes and Jabbs both try to elope with the same lady, there are numerous comedy mix-ups, and a third party becomes the happy bridegroom. One of the best "knockabouts" in which Burns and Stull have appeared.

BEANED BY A BEANSHOOTER (Vitagraph), March 10.—The mission of this one-reel photoplay is to burlesque the melodramatic hero and his wonderful exploits. It accomplishes its purpose, and the entire cast, which includes Charles Richman, Arline Pretty, Leo Delaney, Ethel Corcoran, William Dunn and Edward Elkas, seem to have thoroughly enjoyed themselves while acting it. Mr. Richman's skill with the deadly beanshooter is in a class by itself.

THE PASSING OF PETE (Selig), March 11.—Just why Tom Mix doesn't break his neck in this one-reel drama is a mystery. At any rate, Tom tries hard enough, and does a fall down the side of a gully that must have forced the premium on his life insurance up to even money. Events leading up to the fall are full of interest, and Victoria Forde, Sid Jordan, Betty Keller and Ethlyn Chrisman assist in the acting of the drama, which was written by Mr. Mix.

General Film Company Specials.

THE STRANGE CASE OF MARY PAGE, NO. 7, "A Confession" (Essanay), March 6.—In this installment of the serial it is explained how Mary became a theatrical star, and the number ends with Dan Page declaring that he killed Dave Pollock. The interest in the story and the trial of the heroine is not permitted to drop in the slightest degree.

THE DREAM OF EUGENE ARAM (Selig), March 6.—The screen version of Thomas Hood's celebrated poem will not appeal to the general public. It is too somber and slow of movement. Tyrone Power gives a vital and finely controlled impersonation of the murderer, and Roy Clark is excellent as the boy, but the theme lacks variety. In the play used by Henry Irving a love motive was introduced which gave the necessary added interest. Colin Campbell's direction adheres to the spirit of the poem, but the photography is too dark, the locations being too much in the shadow.

THE INTRUDER (Essanay), March 7.—This two-reel drama is a sequel to "The Edge of Things," and shows the married life of Betty Marsh and Malcolm Jarvis. Chandler Waldron, Betty's former employer, is the intruder, but matters are finally adjusted and the heroine's happiness secured. Marguerite Clayton, Richard C. Travers and Richard Le Roque maintain the acting at a high standard.

A CHANGE OF HEART (Lubin), March 7.—A quarter gas meter plays an important part in this two-reel drama, written by Julian Louis Lamothe and produced by Leon D. Kent. The picture has an interesting plot and involves the redemption of a woman who is surrounded by bad influences at the opening of the story. Velma Whitman plays the leading role with excellent results, and other well acted parts are contributed by George Berrell, Robert Gray, George Routh, and Eleanor Blevins.

THE MYSTERY OF ORCIVAL (Biograph), March 8.—J. Farrell Macdonald supplied an artistic production for this three-part adaptation of Emile Gaboriau's novel of the same name. The plot is somewhat involved, but as presented here may be followed without confusion if the spectator pays close attention. The cast includes Gretchen Hartman, Jack Drumeir, Charles Mailes, G. Raymond Nye, Vera Sisson and Jack Mulhall.

SOLDIER SONS (Lubin), March 9.—A review of this three-reel drama is printed on another page of this issue.

A SLAVE OF CORRUPTION (Knickerbocker), March 10.—Jackie Saunders plays the leading role in this three-reel Knickerbocker Star Feature, and gives a lifelike portrayal of a girl of the slums. The conditions surrounding the heroine make her rise to the dignity of becoming a clergyman's wife little less than a miracle. The story has been drawn with bold strokes, and sordid realism has a prominent place in the action. The producers have made the most of the material.

A MAN'S WORK (Essanay), March 11.—John Junior, Hugh Thompson, Richard Cotton, Grant Foreman, Thurlow Brewer, Arthur Bates, Elizabeth Burbridge and Renee Clemons have excellent acting parts in this three-reel photoplay. The story is melodramatic, vigorous in action and has been carefully produced. It tells of an innocent man's almost hopeless fight, as he imagines, to clear his name of the crime of murder. Hugh Thompson is particularly good as a detective.

THE HUMAN CAULDRON (Vitagraph), March 11.—The New York Police Department co-operated with the Vitagraph Company in the production of this three-reel drama, of which Seymour Galland is the author. Its story is one of crime and criminals, and shows that men and women prisoners who evince a desire to lead upright lives are given every assistance. It has a connected and interesting plot, and the Police Department scenes are the real thing. William Dunn, Lionel Adams, Jack Bulger, Mary Anderson and Lillian Herbert form an efficient cast. Produced by Harry Lambart.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

THE BLINDNESS OF LOVE (Rolfe), March 6.—Julius Steger gives a thoroughly sympathetic performance in an unusual story based on the love of an over-indulgent father for his spoiled son. The picture is well acted, carefully staged and contains a number of appealing scenes. A review may be found on another page of this issue.

LOVELY MARY (Columbia), March 13.—Author and director combined to make this picture a suitable vehicle for Mary Miles Minter, who is ably supported by Thomas Carrigan, Harry Blakemore, Frank DeVernon, Frederick Tidmarsh and others. Picturesque locations are much in evidence in this production.

Mutual Film Corporation.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 62, March 9.—This number is full of interesting and instructive views, most of them with a distinct news value. The war, American sports and celebrations and other events are included. Some of the most entertaining views in the Weeklies seem cut a little too short.

JERRY'S BIG GAME (Cub), March 10.—An exceedingly funny farce comedy. It is not of course especially refined, but very amusing. Jerry, with the police in pursuit, takes refuge in the home of an organ-grinder whose monkey is ill. Jerry is forced to play the role of the monkey in order to cover his identity, and ends up in a harem dancing for its inmates.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 26 (Gaumont), March 12.—In this number of the series some interesting views about historic Monterey, Cal., are given. The house where Robert Louis Stevenson once lived and the various old buildings associated with the regime of the early Spanish settlers are interesting. There are also beautiful surf scenes, and the ablone fisheries in progress in the bay. On the same reel with a comic cartoon entitled "The Trials of Thoughtless Thaddeus."

THE TRIALS OF THOUGHTLESS THADDEUS (Gaumont), March 12.—An interesting comic cartoon from the pen of Harry Palmer. Very funny. On the same reel with the above.

THEODORE'S TERRIBLE THIRST (Falstaff), March 14.—A comedy number, containing some good humor of the quiet sort. The son places his father on a desert island to make him stop drinking, so they obtain the inheritance money. The scheme works in spite of the father's protests. This will get a number of smiles.

RUPERT'S RUBE RELATION (Falstaff), March 16.—An interesting farce comedy in which Uncle Josh, the uncle of Rupert, known as the Rural Bohemian among his city associates, is lured to town and surprises the boys by his insusceptibility to shock when taken to a cabaret performance. Uncle John proves himself to be quite equal to the occasion. A very amusing farce.

TIPS (Beauty), March 19.—A diverting number, which will bring smiles all the way through. It pictures the adventures of Prof. Doolittle, portrayed by Orral Humphrey, on a visit to the city to publish his book. He is forced to tip everyone along the route, much against his will. Simple in plot, but amusing.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

TRUE NOBILITY (Mutual Masterpicture American), March 9.—A five-reel production from the American Film Company's studios which will be found wholesome in theme, and thoroughly entertaining. Lizette Thorne, Eugenie Forde, Helen Rosson, E. Forrest Taylor and Harry Von Meter are prominent members of the cast. The types of the play are good, and its moral is highly commendable.

THE FLIGHT OF THE DUCHESS (Mutual Masterpicture de luxe No. 79—Thanhouser), March 11.—In adapting the poem of Robert Browning to the screen the Thanhouser Company has given the public a most delightful fantastical comedy of five reels. Gladys Hulette plays charmingly the role of Lady Alice. The story tells of how a certain foolish young duke returning to the home of his ancestors decides to adopt their manner of life, mode of attire, etc. He also resolves to take as his wife a beautiful young maiden who must obey his every desire. Things do not turn out exactly as he had expected, and the maiden elopes with a handsome gypsy. The play is beautifully costumed, and is, of course, quaint and pretty.

THE WHISPERED WORD (Thanhouser), March 15.—A two-reel subject, written by Clinton H. Stagg, featuring J. H. Gilmour and Grace DeCarlton. This starts out with divorce proceedings in which the father is awarded custody of his little daughter. The girl grows up lonely and neglected, and at length runs off to a cabaret for a good time. Here she meets a party of young people. Her father casts her off and she marries one of the men, who becomes a drunkard. The transition scene is too sudden. The husband later reforms and when the baby is about to be born there is a reconciliation with the father. The story is interesting, but not very convincing at times. This makes only a fairly strong offering.

A BIRD OF PREY (Mutual Masterpicture de luxe Thanhouser), March 16.—This a moderately interesting five-reel production of the western type. The story treats of how a stranger taken as partner by a prospector registers the claim in his own name when a rich deposit of ore is found, and later steals his partner's wife. The story is at times slightly inconsistent, for instance where the prospector fails to ask to see the location papers, and toward the end of the picture there is evident considerable padding.

MY PARTNER (Mutual Masterpicture de luxe Gaumont), March 20.—The story of this five-reel production featuring Burr McIntosh is taken from a play that ran for some time on the road. A western atmosphere prevails in the spirit of melodrama, and there are portions of the story as presented in the picture that are developed in an interesting manner. There is also, however, an impression given that the adaptation of the story must be slightly at fault. The failure to establish a motive for the younger man's disinclination to marry the woman whom he apparently loved makes a weak spot in the picture.

THE CODE OF HONOR (American), March 21.—A three-reel production, by Wm. Parker, featuring Alfred Vosburgh, Frank Borzage, Estelle Allen, Vivian Rich and George Periolat. The plot contains much familiar material, telling how a secret agent employs his beautiful sister to get military plans. The situations are not very new in the first two reels, but work up with good suspense in the third. The cast is pleasing and capable and the settings adequate. After obtaining the plans and driving her lover almost to the point of self-destruction, the girl relents and manages to save his honor and her own happiness.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

TO HAVE AND TO HOLD (Lasky), March 6.—This play, presenting Mae Murray in the leading role, is not up to the usual Lasky standard. Miss Murray does not give a convincing portrayal but in view of her first appearance on the screen, this might be overlooked. The star is supported by Wallace Reid and others who do good work. The interior and exterior scenes are correct and in good taste. For an extended review see page 1849 of last week's issue.

THE CODE OF MARCIA GRAY (Morosco), March 16.—A splendid five-part production featuring Constance Collier. The story treats in a very human manner of the financial downfall of a man whose wife is kept in luxury, and who in his fall ruins at the same time the poor people who have intrusted money to his care. The character of Marcia, his wife, is a very beautiful one, and the production will be found one of the best of the season, and capable of exhibition before children as well as adults.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PATHE NEWS NO. 17, 1916 (Pathe), Feb. 26.—Interesting items of this issue are views of the wreckage of the New Haven express; a demonstration in favor of preparedness at Chicago on Washington's Birthday; the President and Mrs. Wilson attending the exercises at Continental Hall, Washington, D. C., on Washington's Birthday, and a number of scenes from the theater of war in Europe.

PATHE NEWS NO. 18, 1916 (Pathe), March 1.—In this issue we see a remarkable invention in the shape of a wagon driven by a wind motor; the superdreadnought Pennsylvania trial before being added to the U. S. Navy; the French ex-soldiers, unfit for return to service, employed in basket making; at Charleston, S. C., a searchlight for the defense of the port is exhibited, and musicians from Carranza's army play American National airs as they march in the same parade with the U. S. border troops.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials.

THE IRON CLAW, NO. 3 (Pathe), March 13.—"The Cognac Cask" is a thrilling tale of how "Laughing Mask" rescues Margery from what might have been a more awful fate than living under the supervision of Legar, to whom she has again returned in hopes of putting an end to his persecution against her father. Margery is cleverly conveyed from her unhappy home in a cognac cask, after Legar and his associates have been drugged. Margery's mother, having discovered the plot to kidnap the girl, it is reasonable to believe that she has an intimate acquaintance with the "Laughing Mask." The episode is intensely interesting; the suspense maintained throughout has an unusual thrill.

Triangle Film Corp.

THE FLYING TORPEDO (Fine Arts), March 12.—A spectacular presentation of fine military ensembles and great ingenuity. A story that will make an impression wherever shown.

MARTHA'S VINDICATION (Fine Arts), March 19.—A strong and well acted story of fine purpose, presenting with great power the hypocrisy and bigotry of formal religion. A winner.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.

MUCHLY MARRIED (Joker), March 18.—A conventional farce comedy, by A. E. Bishop, featuring Gale Henry, Wm. Franey and others. The uncle arrives unexpectedly and finds his son entertaining numerous lady friends, several of whom claim to be his wife. This has been done before, but proves quite amusing and is well presented.

BEHIND THE CURTAIN (Rex), March 19.—A young husband leaves his wife in company with a friend. The latter takes her out to see the Broadway sights and on their return home trouble ensues, in which the friend is shot. He casts the blame on a burglar and thus saves the wife's reputation. Dorothy Phillips, Hayden Stevenson and Alan Holubar appear. This is merely an episode of a somewhat conventional sort, but is fairly strong as presented.

THE WRONG BIRD (Nestor), March 24.—A brisk little comedy number, written by L. V. Jefferson, with a fresh, original plot. The young husband invites three friends to try his bride's cooking. She swipes a neighbor's turkey after a desperate effort to get the dinner herself. Then two other dinners arrive, one ordered by the husband and the other by the guests. A very pleasing offering.

LOVE AND VACCINATION (Nestor), March 20.—A comedy number, by H. Wendell Philips, featuring Lee Moran, Eddie Lyons and Betty Compson. The young lover pretends to be ill in order to see the doctor's sister. A vaccination scare results, which is worked out amusingly. Familiar subject matter handled with a fair degree of strength.

Universal Film Mfg. Company Specials.

ORDERS IS ORDERS (Victor), March 15.—A two-reel college number, featuring Ernest Shields, Mina Cunard and Mark Fenton. The story is one of light plot, picturing the difficulties experienced by a police force in a college town. It shows the way in which the Yale students contrive to get their quarterback out of jail before the great game. This tells an amusing story and has a proper youthful flavor. An entertaining number.

LIVE WIRES AND LOVE SPARKS (L-KO), March 19.—A three-reel low comedy number, featuring Billie Ritchie, Peggy Pearce and Gene Rogers. Mr. Bringumyoung and his wife are first discovered in bed with their five children and the pretty neighbor across the hall starts complications. The action is almost entirely of a rough house character. Some of it is very amusing, but the split-trousers feature in the second reel will not appeal to particular exhibitors. The scramble across roof tops and telegraph wires in the last reel contains some really sensational acrobatic stunts. The action is pleasing, but the general tone not of the best.

DRUGGED WATERS (Red Feather), March 20.—A five-reel comedy, written by Leonora Ainsworth, featuring Wm. C. Dowlan, Gloria Fonda and others. This is a pretty, bright little story and suffers only from the fact that it should have been told in a less number of reels. The plot runs too thin in places, necessitating padding. The situation as a whole is unique, the girl having fallen heir to a mineral spring resort, the waters of which are medicated by her manager without her knowledge. A young doctor discovers the truth, and they manage to make a success of the place on a square basis. The setting and photography are pleasing and the cast an attractive one throughout.

THE PATENT MEDICINE DANGERS (Universal Special), March 20.—No. 15 of the "Graft" series. Robert Harding, portrayed by Richard Stanton, again appears as the hero of this exciting installment. He gets after the makers of fake drugs, is committed to an insane asylum by his enemies, and makes a sensational escape, aided by Dorothy and others. There is a real thrill in his jump from the roof of the institution to the stream below. The number is very tense in its interest and the series continues to be entertaining in spite of the numerous changes of cast. Four or five more installments are to be made.

THE MADCAP QUEEN OF CRONA (Gold Seal), March 21.—A two-reel subject, featuring Francis Ford, Grace Cunard, Jack Holt and others. This is a romantic offering, entertaining throughout despite the fact that small attention is paid to settings or costuming. The latter are adequate, but not in any way remarkable. The story concerns a young queen who exchanges places with a girl she meets in the park. The girl promptly falls in love with an officer of the guard and almost brings on a revolution. This is fairly strong.

SCARS AND BARS FOREVER (L-KO), March 22.—A two-reel low comedy number, featuring Billy Ritchie, Peggy Pearce and others. Billy and his band of Italian anarchists are thrown into prison after abducting the warden's daughter. There are a number of laughable moments in the prison scenes. The prisoners get a bottle of booze from the visiting minister and much trouble follows. This is free from offense and contains considerable humor of the burlesque sort.

World-Equitable.

THE UNPARDONABLE SIN (Shubert), March 13.—Holbrook Blinn acts with his accustomed force in a five-part drama, dealing with the career of a man addicted to drink. A somewhat conventional story is passably well handled. A review may be found on another page of this issue.

MAN AND HIS ANGEL (Triumph), March 13.—With the principal characters finely acted by Jane Grey and Henri Bergman, and a carefully prepared story of sound, sympathtic appeal, this production, reviewed on another page of this issue, merits high commendation. The picture was admirably staged by Burton King.

Miscellaneous.

FIGHTING WITH THE ALLIES (Timely).—Although there is little new in this collection of war pictures, familiar scenes gain additional interest when properly assembled to give a comprehensive idea of the activities of the Allies. The picture should go well with the audiences not over familiar with the film shipped from Europe during the past year.

"PASQUALE" TO BE BEBAN'S MOROSCO SUBJECT.

George Beban, the well known portrayer of Italian characters, is now busily engaged in the production of his initial photoplay subject for the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, "Pasquale," an original play written by himself in collaboration with Lawrence McClosky.

"Pasquale" affords Mr. Beban an exceptional screen vehicle in which he will bring out to particular advantage the quaint character of the poor Italian such as we see in every day life along Mulberry street, New York. The subject will also have bearing upon the present war in Europe and various actual scenes of battle involving the Italian army, with others showing the manoeuvres of a fleet of Zeppelins are included in the production.

Supporting the star the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company present an able cast, including such talented artists as Myrtle Stedman, Helen Eddy, Page Peters, Jack Nelson and Nigel de Brullier. William D. Taylor, whose recent work in "He Fell in Love With His Wife" has won him considerable attention on the part of both trade and public, has been selected to direct the photoplay, while Homer Scott will officiate at the camera. The release of "Pasquale" on the Paramount Program will mark the return of George Beban to this brand, his former productions, "The Italian," and "An Alien," having been materially responsible for his present popularity with the motion picture public.

FIVE STARS IN NEW IVAN PRODUCTION.

The addition of Carleton Macy, the noted Belasco legitimate star, to "The City of Illusion," the new Ivan feature now in process of filming, makes the fifth star to be employed in this production. Mr. Macy created the leading male role in the legitimate Belasco drama, "The Woman," and his most recent screen work was the principal male role in "Destruction," opposite Theda Bara. He will create one of the leading roles in the new Ivan feature.

Believing, as he does, that all parts in a photodrama are equally important, Ivan Abramson, the author and director of "The City of Illusion," has surrounded himself with players, each one of whom is a competent screen artist and has played leading roles for the films. Mignon Anderson, the dainty darling of films, a noted leading woman formerly with Thanhouser; Bradley Barker, formerly Olga Petrova's leading man; Paula Shay, "the Mary Garden of the screen"; Joseph Burke, star of "A Fool's Paradise"; Maxine Brown, Edison's well known ingenue; Willard Case, former juvenile lead with Essanay, and Guido Colucci, a famous delineator of character roles, formerly with Edison, constitutes some of the cast.

"The City of Illusion," because of its exceptionally strong dramatic story value, abundance of climaxes and one of the most notable casts ever assembled for a picture, will probably be released as a special production, in several thousand feet more than the usual feature length.

SPRING HAVE CAME—BASEBALL PICTURES.

Just to prove to snowbound New York that spring is really in our midst, the Mutual Weekly Number 63 shows the New York "Giants" training at Marlin Springs, Tex. John J. McGraw, the only Jawn J., is seen initiating a group of youngsters into big league baseball. Larry Doyle is shown at batting practice, and Christy Mathewson, "the greatest of 'em all," is seen warming up.

An unusual event of the week was the barefoot dance of a group of six young California maidens in Central Park, New York. The Mutual Weekly presents the dancers in a series of esthetic dances, clad in one-piece silken slips, despite the snowy carpet and the biting March wind. These pictures were especially posed for the Mutual cameraman from the Gaumont laboratories at Flushing, N. Y., where the Mutual Weekly is made.

CANADIANS WANT SOMETHING TO LAUGH AT.

W. D. Cooper, manager in Toronto for George Kleine, spent two days in New York last week. He declares that Canadians these days are hunting for entertainment, as a leavening to the war news which of necessity they are so deeply and vitally interested in. In "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer," the Kleine comedy, Mr. Copper says they have found just what they were looking for and as a consequence he is shattering booking records just now. Mr. Cooper also reports a noticeable revival of interest in the classics such as "Quo Vadis," "The Last Days of Pompeii," "The Lion of Venice" and similar productions, and said he could see only good, bright times ahead for those engaged in the motion picture industry.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"THE HAND OF PERIL" (World).

Arthur Stringer writes detective stories of deep deductional power. House Peters portrays the role of a detective perhaps better than any screen player. Maurice Tourneur handles psychology and tricky incidents better than any other element in film making. The three together have, in "The Hand of Peril," created a most convincing vehicle.

Arthur Stringer, the noted author, is gifted with the greatest powers of perspicacity and mystery construction of any of the present day mystery writers. His stories are classics and "The Hand of Peril" is one of his biggest works. Under the direction of Maurice Tourneur, at the Paragon Studio, House Peters and a superb cast of players have been working for seven weeks.

Scene from "The Hand of Peril" (World Film).

The story, one of the type wherein government agents match their wits against a gang of criminals, headed by a master mind, called for many mechanical features which required delicate and astute handling and which required special treatment in order to make them more logical in the film than in the story, where words replace the action. However, Mr. Tourneur has applied his own mechanical genius to that suggested in Stringer's story and a series of intricate, suspense sustaining climaxes and novelty situations resulted.

A tracing desk, such as is used in counterfeiting quarters, an X-ray affair, equipped to make a supposedly dead wall, transparent so that the criminals can watch what is going on outside, without themselves being seen, a glaring and blinding light, which robs an entrant of his sight, and numerous other mechanical devices ever present in Stringer stories, dot the film production throughout.

"The Hand of Peril" will be the World Film release March 27, and in the cast, in addition to House Peters, are June Elvidge, Ralph Delmore, Doris Sawyer and Ray Pilcer. It is in five acts and over three hundred scenes with swiftly moving dramatic action throughout.

WITH "BATTLE CRY OF PEACE" IN MICHIGAN.

Stanley Huntley Lewis, who is in charge of the publicity for "The Battle Cry of Peace" in the state of Michigan, was last week appointed to the rank of Captain in the First Field Artillery, Michigan National Guard, with headquarters at Lansing this honor being accorded him in recognition of his value to the recruiting department of the National Guard, in conjunction with the tour of "The Battle Cry of Peace." In every city which the Battle Cry has visited, Captain Lewis has worked with the local unit of the Guard, and by his activities has increased in membership from about half the normal number to full peace strength, and with a large waiting list.

The Board of Education has arranged with Captain Lewis for the latter to deliver addresses in all the schools throughout the state on "National Preparedness;" and the various large factories of Michigan, including all the automobile and stove manufacturers, have cheerfully assembled their employees at various hours of the day to listen to the Captain's lectures on national defense and "The Battle Cry of Peace." In addition, Captain Lewis occupies the pulpit of some church each Sunday, preaching on the subject of "preparedness" in St. Paul's Methodist church at Monroe, February 21, and at the All-Saints church, Pontiac, February 27th.

Captain Lewis also represents the American Legion, the National Security League and the Aero Club of America, but is working under the personal direction of Harry I. Garson, of the Broadway-Strand theater, Detroit, who controls the Michigan state rights to "The Battle Cry of Peace."

"DEFENSE OR TRIBUTE?" ON THE ROAD.

Immediately after the five-reel historical spectacular drama "Defense or Tribute?" closed its two weeks' run at the Park theater, Columbus Circle, New York, the Public Service Film Company started to send out companies in New York State, Connecticut, Pennsylvania and other parts of the country.

The picture has the support of an advocacy of one thousand newspapers in various parts of the country, which advocate preparedness. "The New York Tribune" has selected the picture to assist Marjorie Sterrett, the little Brooklyn girl who conceived the idea of building a battleship from dime contributions.

The prominence thus given to "Defense or Tribute?" will be of enormous assistance in popularizing the picture among exhibitors and the patrons of motion picture theaters. The publicity campaign will be one of the greatest ever devised for the exploitation of a motion picture theater. The newspapers are enlisting the active support of the patriotic societies in the towns where the picture is shown, and the recently formed Security League are also expected to throw the weight of their influence on the side of the picture.

Preparedness is the universal theme in the United States today, and "Defense or Tribute?" is the only picture which treats of the subject in an entertaining way.

"THE MILLIONAIRE'S SON" (Knickerbocker).

The Knickerbocker Star Feature, to be released April 7, in the General Film Service entitled, "The Millionaire's Son" promises to be a strong attraction. It is in three acts, full of live action and strong dramatic situations. The loss of a son by the millionaire in a tragic and startling manner leads the wealthy manufacturer to believe the son dead. Then follows an interesting career of a boy, born in a place of great wealth, yet adopted and raised in a home of hard labor.

In after years the truth comes out, the millionaire's son is in the home of the laboring people, and has proven the gallantry that is inherent in human lives, which shows itself in the shadows of suffering and in the struggle to live.

"The Millionaire's Son" is sure to please and the Knickerbocker Star Features are well sustained in their standard of quality by this offering.

"UNKNOWN" (Essanay).

A topic unusual to the screen, but quite usual in real life, inasmuch as its fundamental theme is concerned, is the basis for "Unknown," a new three-act Essanay with Marguerite Clayton, Richard C. Travers, and Ernest Maupain. Sufficient thrills have been built upon the subject of the hero wedding his childhood sweetheart only after she becomes the widow of the wealthy old capitalist, whom she was forced to marry. That the capitalist has a twin brother, both portrayed by Mr. Maupain, gives the picture a decidedly interesting touch.

Scene from "Unknown" (Essanay).

Wanda Curtis (Marguerite Clayton) and Hugh Hartley (Richard C. Travers) are sweethearts. The girl's father (Richardson Cotton) appeals to Mathew Flagg, financier, to save him from ruin. The wealthy Flagg sees Wanda and desires her. The girl sacrifices herself to save her father. Curtis dies.

Hugh goes to the Flagg home to console Wanda and is discovered by Flagg. The latter decides on mischief. He summons a good-for-nothing twin brother, Martin, whom he induces to impersonate him in his own home. One night the capitalist steals into his home and murders the brother. It is believed the great Mathew Flagg committed suicide.

Wanda and Hugh are free to be married, the girl inheriting her husband's fortune. During the wedding ceremony a man falls from the church gallery and is killed. The newlyweds go on their way in ignorance of the identity of the victim.

The "Unknown" is Mathew Flagg in the garb of a tramp. He had entered the church to mar the wedding and had met his death instead.

HAZEL DAWN IN "THE SALESLADY" (Famous Players).

Two of New York's most conspicuous phases—the "tired business man's" musical comedy and the great department store—will be presented in their most realistic forms when the Famous Players Film Company presents Hazel Dawn in "The Saleslady," by Willard Mack, on the Paramount Program, March 23.

For the production of this unusual film Director Frederick Thomson resorted to the use of one of New York's greatest and most celebrated department stores, three hundred employees of which were engaged on successive Sundays to "act natural." To the big establishment the Famous Players' electricians transported truckloads of lighting apparatus which was planted strategically around the ribbon counter and along the main aisles of the store. Here Miss Dawn dispensed ribbons and smiles to everyone except a flirtatious floor-walker who proved to be the villain of the story.

Scene from "The Saleslady" (Famous Players).

Going still further in his quest for realism, the director took Miss Dawn, the lighting experts and several members of the supporting cast to Bustanoby's restaurant and later to Rector's, where typical scenes of New York night life were enacted before the camera.

These incidents were as nothing, however, compared with events which transpired later in the Famous Players studio when a large portion of the Ziegfield Follies chorus and a full orchestra took possession of the floor. A full-sized replica of a theater proscenium had been constructed in the studio, with stage, orchestra pit, boxes, etc., for the purpose of filming that part of the story in which Helen, the girl enacted by Miss Dawn, becomes a member of the chorus.

Among those in support of Miss Dawn are Irving Cummings, Clarence Handysides, Arthur Morrison, Dorothy Rogers, Janet Findley, Blanche Craig and Florence Ashbrook.

"AUTUMN" (Red Feather).

Violet Mersereau will next be seen in "Autumn," a five-reel comedy-drama written and directed by O. A. C. Lund, in which Lieut. Percy Richards (The Man in White) appeared as co-star. "Autumn" will be released as a Red Feather Feature on the Universal Program.

It is a remarkably realistic story of the days when the greed for gold forced the fortune-seekers to suffer terrible tortures in their attempts to gain fame and gold. Here the story tells of the trials of George Arden, his wife and baby girl. The mother dies shortly after arriving at a mining camp. The father going to the town storekeeper is struck by a stray bullet which just grazes his forehead. As a result his mind becomes dazed.

Scene from "Autumn" (Red Feather).

His little daughter is reared by friends and in later years Dick Leslie, a trooper in Northwest Mounted Police finds the two, interests himself in their welfare, traces their history, finds they are father and daughter. He has a surgeon examine the father, who operates on him successfully, restoring his mind. His deep interest in the girl soon turns to love and she in turn loves him who has been their benefactor, with the result that they are soon to be married.

Violet Mersereau as the little girl, Lester Stowe as the father, and Lieut. Percy Richards as Dick Leslie, are all excellent characters, and portray vividly the life of the early days of the gold-seekers, while Paul Panzer, well known heavy, takes care of the rougher parts of the picture in his able manner. "Autumn" will show Miss Mersereau in one of her favorite child characterizations and will be released in March.

FIRST METRO-DREW COMEDY RELEASE.

The first of the Metro-Drew single reel comedies in which Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew are starred, will be released on the Metro program March 15, under the title "The Court of Ten." The situation in this story, briefly set forth, is all that is necessary to vizualize the possibilities contained in the photoplay for two artists like Mr. and Mrs. Drew. The story concerns a commuter, financially embarrassed for the time being, who has invited his wife to dinner in the city and to the theater afterward. He is obliged to do some tall skirmishing to raise the money, which he does just in time for her to catch a train. He telegraphs to wifey as follows: "Have gotten theater tickets. Bring party clothes." The telegrapher, in a hurry, makes a slight mistake in transmitting the message, and when the commuter's wife receives it it reads as follows: "Have got ten theater tickets. Bring party. Clothes." Elated over his sudden prosperity, she invites neighbors to the number of eight. The commuter's surprise on learning of the unexpected guests, and his wild scramble to raise funds and entertain his neighbors creates a host of ludicrous situations.

Helen Gets Grim Warning

Kalem's Railroad Series Now in Its Thirteenth Mile, But Helen Refuses to Be Shaken by Superstition.

AN anonymous letter-writer sat down to do some figuring a few weeks ago and the result of his effort arrived last week at the Kalem studio producing the "Hazards of Helen." It conveyed the information that the railroad series was now in its thirteenth mile of film and that the players should be duly superstitious and apprehensive.

The letter was post-marked "Waterloo, Ia.," and said: "I read in a moving picture magazine where the Hazards of Helen were a year old in November, and where each week for a year you have made a thousand feet of these railroad pictures. It is my duty therefore to warn you, Miss Helen Gibson, to beware of fate and be careful lest something happen after March while you are making those desperate pictures. If you figure up like I did you will see why you should be careful, because for sixteen months, sixty-four weeks, there have been a thousand feet and that makes sixty-four thousand feet, which means that after March you will be working in your thirteenth mile of these railroads. So be careful, Miss Helen Gibson and don't do so many foolish risks like I see you doing now."

Some one at the studio showed the letter to Miss Gibson, but that daring young lady refuses to "be careful." She laughed as she read the letter. "Of course," she said, "I have my pet superstitions, but thirteen is not one of them, and the letter writer will have to try again to get me worried. In fact, as far as my part is concerned, I hope to make the thirteenth mile of 'Hazards' the most thrilling yet produced."

"MY PARTNER" (Mutual).

To the thousands of American theater goers who have known Burr McIntosh and loved him in the roles of Pudd'nhead Wilson, Squire Bartlett, in "Way Down East," Col. Moberly in "Alabama," Senator W. H. Langdon in "The Gentleman From Mississippi," as Col. Watterson Blossom in "Cordelia Blossom" and scores of others of the wholesome type of Western and Southern gentlemen with which he has come to be associated, the announcement that Mr. McIntosh will appear in "My Partner," the screen drama which will be released March 20th as a Mutual Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition, will be enthusiastically received.

Scene from "My Partner" (Mutual).

This eminent American actor has already established his identity with the celluloid drama. "My Partner" will be the third picture play in which he has appeared. "In Mizzoura," "Col. Carter of Cartersville," and "The New Adventures of J. Rufus Wallingford" have already been starring vehicles for his own particular type of interpretation on the screen. "My Partner" will add another success to those which have gone before.

In the motion picture, Mr. McIntosh has made the great, whole souled western "Joe Saunders" live as he never did on the legitimate stage. He is set in his own setting of real hills and valleys, towering pines and rushing torrents. The picture is filled with thrilling situation and rapid action.

Supporting Mr. McIntosh is a particularly strong and convincing cast. Mary Mantell plays the role of "Mary Brandon" with a peculiar sympathy and a quiet dignity and reserve which is charming indeed. Marie Edith Ellis is a pleasing little coquette, while Curtis Cooksey, as "Ned Singleton," is lovable in spite of his faults.

Twelve stenographers operating typewriters and dictographs appear in one office scene in Essanay's five-act feature, "The Havoc," in which Gladys Hanson, the famous stage star, plays the leading role. An expert from the company whose dictographs were used, was employed by the Essanay to remain at the studios while the production was in progress of making to instruct the stenographers in the correct use of the delicate machines.

"ANVILS AND ACTORS" (Vim).

A funny film is "Anvils and Actors" by the Vim Comedy Company in the Pokes and Jabbs series. Burns and Stull outdo themselves in their originality and rapid-fire action. It is the story of how a blacksmith apprentice Pokes, and a would-be actor, Jabbs, become entranced by a vision of Ethel, the daughter of the blacksmith. Jealousies and wrath develop implements of warfare in the tempestuous struggle the rivals resort to tools of their own craft. Soon blacksmith's implements and stage properties become munitions of war, until the village fire company cools the fighting blood with floods of water.

Scene from "Anvils and Actors" (Vim).

"Anvils and Actors" is scheduled for release March 31, on the General Film Program, and promises to be well up to the high standard of the "Pokes and Jabbs" famous Friday release.

"THE BRUISER" (American).

"The Bruiser," five-reel American Mutual Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition, has been completed by director Charles Bartlette at the American studios in Santa Barbara, and the release date of this picture will soon be announced. William Russell and Charlotte Burton appear as the leading characters in this screen drama which was written especially for the pair by William Parker. One of the big scenes in "The Bruiser" is a prize fight in which the gladiators are Bill Russell and Al Kaufman, a famous white hope of two years ago. All Santa Barbara was present to witness the filming of this prize ring scene.

Scene from "The Bruiser" (American).

MORE BELASCO PLAYS BY LASKY.

Announcement was made this week that other Belasco productions will be done in film versions. With Mae Murray as the star, work already has started at the Lasky studios on "Sweet Kitty Bellairs," which production will be James Young's first picture for the Lasky company. The cast includes Tom Forman, James Neill, Horace Carpenter, Bob Gray and other members of the Lasky all-star company.

"PASSERS BY" (Equitable).

Another two-star production, soon to see the light of screen day on the Equitable program will be the visualization of C. Haddon Chamber's well remembered stage success "Passers By" which enjoyed a two year run at the Criterion theater a few seasons past. Charles Cherry noted both in screendom and on the stage, will portray the principal role while Mary Charleson, whose work in "Sealed Lips" established her as a glowing silent actress, handles the foremost feminine role. Between Scene from "Passers By" (Equitable).

Mr. Cherry and Miss Charleson are divided the rare situations provided by the author Mr. Chambers and emphasized by Stannard E. V. Taylor. "Passers By" with out the addition of novelties in any form, would make a most convincing vehicle. With the deft touch of Mr. Taylor, it becomes a master work. The remarkable lighting effects, the sensational plot, the tremendous heart interest, the all powerful series of climaxes and anti climaxes, combine to make "Passers By" a true representative of the new World-Equitable commercialization policy.

"Passers By" owing to the peculiar construction of the story calls for a majority of interior settings and for the purpose of interior decoration, Director Taylor arranged with the house of Sloane of Fifth Avenue to handle the delicate artistic touches essential. Of the sixty-four individual sets, it would be a hard matter to select the most attractive.

Following the long season on Broadway "Passers By" enjoyed a long series of successful tours in the smaller towns throughout the country and was one of the popular successes of its period.

"Passers By" is in five acts, over three hundred scenes and will be the regular release of the Equitable Company through World Film March 20.

ETHEL BARRYMORE IN "THE KISS OF HATE."

Ethel Barrymore, the gifted dramatic star, who is appearing exclusively on the screen in Metro wonderplays, will next be seen on the Metro program in "The Kiss of Hate," a stirring five-part feature produced by the Columbia Picture Corporation under the direction of William Nigh, dealing with the persecution of the Jews in Russia. The story was written by Mme. De Grissac especially for Miss Barrymore and gives the gifted star the fullest opportunity to display her distinctive dramatic talent and magnetic personal charm which have made her name a household word among American audiences.

Miss Barrymore is surrounded by an exceptionally strong supporting cast including H. Cooper Cliffe, the eminent English dramatic actor. Mr. Cliffe was seen in support of Miss Barrymore in her previous Metro offering, "The Final Judgment," which critics declared to be one of the best features produced last year. Others in the cast include Niles Welch, William L. Abingdon, Robert Elliot, Martin J. Faust, William Boyd, Roy Applegate, Frank Montgomery, Ileen Hume, Daniel Sullivan and other well known artists of the screen and stage.

C. M. WHITE IN CHARGE OF "SEE AMERICA FIRST."

The popular Gaumont scenic series, "See America First," is now being handled by C. M. White, assistant to F. G. Bradford, general manager of the Gaumont Company. The release of March 19 shows entertaining views of San Francisco, Cal. "See America First" is a split-reel release with Harry Palmer's animated cartoons, which are also the product of the Gaumont laboratories at Flushing, N. Y. March 1 Mr. Palmer will devote his part of the reel to a humorous skit on Charlie Chaplin, the latest Mutual recruit. It will be called "Preparedness."

RIGHTS TO "THE OTHER GIRL" SOLD.

The Celebrated Players Film Co. of Chicago secured the rights of "The Other Girl," the Augustus Thomas play which was converted into motion picture form by the Raver Film Corporation, for the states of Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin. The Celebrated company is known through the middle west for handling the biggest material on the open market.

The same day the picture was purchased J. L. Friedman, general manager of the Celebrated, booked a print of the picture through a circuit of first run theaters in Indiana and opened negotiations for one of the best circuits in the city of Chicago. It is Mr. Friedman's expectation that this picture will remain longer in public favor than anything on the market at the present time. The wide popularity of James J. Corbett, who is starred in the picture, and the fame of the author he feels assures it a wonderful success.

The Celebrated is also handling "Life Without Soul" and "The Fortunate Youth," two Ocean Film releases which are being marketed by the Raver Film Corporation.

SUBSTITUTION IN CAST OF "THE QUALITY OF FAITH."

Richard Garrick, who is directing the co-stars, Alexander Gaden and Gertrude Robinson, in Gaumont's "The Quality of Faith," cast himself for the role of Baker, the strike-leader in the factory strike scenes. However, the mob scenes assumed such vast proportions that Mr. Garrick found all his attention would be required for the task of directing. Accordingly he surrendered the role to John Mackin. These factory scenes are being taken in Atlanta, Ga., whither a score of Gaumont players were taken from Gaumont's winter studios at Jacksonville, Fla.

PATHE'S "THE WOMAN'S LAW."

"The Woman's Law," Pathe's next Gold Rooster release is considered to be one of the very strongest pictures yet put out on that program. An exceedingly capable cast, first class story, excellent scenario, and able direction have all combined to give that result. Miss Florence Reed, the star, gives in the picture a good example of the talents which have made her, in the estimation of many, the best emotional actress upon the screen today. She is a master of finished detail, illuminating her character with those subtle touches of which only a true artist is capable. Her worth and position upon the speaking stage is well known while her extraordinarily mobile face, mirroring her every emotion, makes her especially strong in screen work. This is the third Gold Rooster play in which she has starred, the others being "At Bay," and "New York," each of them truly noteworthy for their excellence.

Duncan McRae, brother of Bruce McRae who has also appeared in several Gold Rooster pictures, gives most capable support. His part is not easy as he is compelled to play two parts with characters entirely opposite, but he handles his situations with skill.

The story is based upon the assertion that every man has a double—an idea which if well brought out may be expected to be productive of interesting situations.

Director McGill, who produced the picture for Arrow, is to be commended for the care and skill which he has displayed. His sets are good and proper atmosphere has been preserved at all times. Messrs. LeVino and Thew, authors of the scenario, were complimented by Miss Reed upon what she termed the best scenario she had ever seen.

"The Woman's Law" which is released in five parts, will take rank as one of the best pictures of the year.

A Kalem 28-Sheet Stand Made for the "Social Pirates"

KALEM POSTER CAMPAIGN.

To Cover Eight Centers and Aid Kalem Exhibitors Everywhere—A 28-Sheet Example.

SINCE it is argued that the feature film is more desirable than the short lengths because the feature carries a larger and more varied assortment of paper, the Kalem Company, which is leading the movement for a return to one and two-reel subjects, is to try the experiment of supplying a twenty-eight sheet for its new series, "The Social Pirates," posting eight of the larger cities at its own expense and providing the other exhibitors with a stand free if they will post it.

The paper is in four colors, with spaces for local announcement, as shown in the cut reproduced herewith, and the design is such that it is applicable to the series rather than to any particular episode, giving the paper a longer lease of life. It is an advertisement for the film rather than for the Kalem Company and the title is not hidden by a mass of descriptive matter or fussy ornamentation.

"We want to show the exhibitor," explained William Wright, "that the shorter lengths can be made to carry the larger stands of paper, and by getting the paper on the billboards, he can keep his lobby free for photographs and other forms of advertising better fitted to the entrance. At the same time he reaches a greater number of patrons and prospects. We have been at some pains to evolve a design that shall be striking and forceful and at the same time avoid the sensational.

"The Kalem Company was one of the first, if not the first, to recognize the damage done the business by the use of misleading sensationalism in poster work. We avoid absolutely the crime-sensation on the paper as well as in the film, and only the paper for the "Hazards of Helen" series shows what might be called sensational subjects, and these are feats of daring and not the depiction of scenes of crime. It is possible to prepare paper that shall be striking and pulling without constant recourse to heroines being choked to death and heroes with revolvers prodding their midrifts. Kalem posters are never offensive, but we think that this new stand is about as good as we have produced lately, though it must be shown in full colors to be seen at its best. Any exhibitor who takes the series can have a stand of paper free if he will post it. In New York, Boston, Philadelphia and other places, the company itself will cover the town."

STATE RIGHTS DISPOSALS ON E. AND R. COMEDIES.

PHOENIX GETS MUTT AND JEFF.

Bud Fisher's comedy creations as produced by the Mutt and Jeff Film Corporation will be booked in New England by The Phoenix Feature Film Corporation, with offices in Boston, and a branch at Ellsworth, Maine. Several prints of each release will be carried and it is the intention of the Phoenix to put them over in the biggest possible way.

NEW "MUSTY SUFFER" COMEDY.

Everybody at the George Kleine studio in the Bronx is happy these days—or at least they are all smiling because they have just been privileged to witness an advance showing of comedy No. 9 of "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer," featuring Harry Watson of Bickel and Watson. Director Louis Myll invited them all into the projecting room one day last week and the sounds of laughter that soon came percolating through the ventilators and doors was the best evidence that this particular comedy was fully equal to those previously shown.

Comedy No. 9 of "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer" series deals with Musty's adventures while holding down a job as general factotum in an amusement arcade, one of the chief features of which is an escalator or moving stairway. Musty, neatly uniformed after the fashion of a trained monkey, holds down the jobs of ticket-taker, chief jaintor, bookblatck, hat cleaner, etc., and is forced to hop in lively fashion from one job to the other as occasion demands. The "bouncing" of patrons who fail to go through the formality of buying tickets is one of his chief difficulties, but one which he overcomes promptly when he discovers the reverse action of the escalator. Musty also has several discouraging adventures with the museum or menagerie freaks which escape periodically, but meets each emergency in some ingenious way.

MARGUERITE COURTOT FINISHES "FEATHERTOP"

In starring Marguerite Courtot in five-reel features released as Mutual Masterpictures, De Luxe Edition, the Gaumont company is displaying wisdom in varying the character of the productions.

Reports of the success of her first five-reel feature, "The Dead Alive," verify the review of this Masterpicture in the Moving Picture World wherein it was said, "A sort of little passion flower of delicate sensibilities herself, she injects that interesting personality into her dual role." Miss Courtot has now finished her second Masterpicture. This photoplay, "Feathertop," will be the Courtot offering from the Gaumont studios for the month of April.

The variation between the roles in these two productions is interesting. In "The Dead Alive" Miss Courtot plays sisters, one the petted wife of an indulgent millionaire, the other a girl of the stage who falls under the influence of an international crook. In "Feathertop" her talent has been skillfully directed in another direction. Those who witness both plays will find her in the second as the daughter of a kindly old florist. After a gentle youth among the flowers, wooed in uneventful fashion by her father's assistant, she is whirled away to the city to enjoy its luxuries at the expense of a wealthy uncle.

Another turn of fortune's wheel reduces the heroine of "Feathertop" to dependence upon the charity of others. Then comes a dream interlude of a few scenes wherein Miss Courtot impersonates Polly Gookin, the girl disillusioned by association with the scarecrow Feathertop in Nathaniel Hawthorne's story of the same name.

PICTURE LESSONS IN CARVING.

Housewives, to whom carving is a bugbear, and husbands, who have never been able to remove the leg of a fowl with neatness and dispatch, or divide a drumstick and second joint with an easy mind, will be taught to become artistic carvers in a few monents by the "Lessons in Carving" shown in the Paramount Pictographs released by the Paramount Pictures Corporation. In the first scene the audience is confronted with a chef busily carving—in the correct manner—a roast of beef. The chef remains in the next scene, but a duck occupies the platter.

The turkey comes next. For carving ham a special type of knife is shown, the hock end of the meat being placed at the carver's right, the fork driven in to the left of the center of the joint near the carver. The final picture is an encouragement——

"It is easier than cutting cheese when you know how."

REPORTS BIG BUSINESS IN COMEDY.

Harry Scott, manager of the George Kleine branch, Philadelphia, was in New York last week. He was in a particularly optimistic mood and expressed himself as thoroughly satisfied with present business and the outlook for the future in his field. He reports heavy bookings on the Kleine comedy, "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer," featuring Harry Watson.

Mr. Scott says this new film comedy certainly made a hit in his territory and that he is deluged with inquiries regarding Mr. Kleine's future plans regarding comedies. It was chiefly this matter that brought him to New York, Mr. Scott declared. He was in rare good humor when he left for Philadelphia, so it may safely be presumed that Mr. Kleine's intentions were highly pleasing to him.

"NUMBER 13, WESTBOUND" (Selig).

"Number 13, Westbound" is a gripping story of railroad life, produced by Frank Beal, from the story written by Elliott Flower. It will be released through General Film Service on Monday, March 20th.

Although Kathlyn Williams has performed almost every hazardous feat in order to provide thrills for motion picture patrons, yet "Number 13, Westbound" is the first story of the railroad that this great acress has appeared in. She is supported by an exceptional cast of players, including Guy Oliver and Lillian Hayward.

Scene from "Number 13, Westbound" (Selig).

How the girl stops the flyer just in time to save the lives of many people, and wins the love of Orson Kimball, composes an unusual and spectacular drama. This railroad story is of the unsual type, and there is a great deal of comedy relief introduced therein.

"A HEART'S CRUCIBLE" (Universal).

Seldom has a more realistic allegorical picture been made than parts of Cleo Madison's latest five-reel feature production, "A Heart's Crucible," in which she played the stellar role. The story was written by Miss Madison and Kathleen Kerrigan, sister of J. Warren Kerrigan. So unusual were many of the scenes as they outlined them that the suggestion was made that they change them under the impression that it would be impossible to produce them successfully. In the face of these suggestions, Miss Madison only smiled and remarked that she would try them at any rate. She did try, and contrary to expectations, she succeeded even beyond her own expectations.

The cast, although small, was specially picked for the production, and was undoubtedly well fitted for the roles assigned them. Miss Madison's work in the leading role was of the standard that that star has always maintained. Too well is that standard known to film fans to require any word at this time. Edward Hearn in the role opposite her; William Mong in the character of a dope fiend, and Ray Hanford in another of his character roles, completed a cast so evenly balanced as to be in a class by itself.

"THE TWIN TRUNK MYSTERY" (Cub).

The Cub Comedy scheduled for release through the Mutual on March 17 will present Billy Armstrong, the well known pantomimic comedian, in the featured role. His vehicle is entitled "The Twin Trunk Mystery."

With the release of this subject Armstrong makes his second appearance in a Cub Comedy. His first picture "The Defective Detective" was released early in February.

"The Twin Trunk Mystery" is a rapid succession of funny scenes based on the efforts of Luke Sharpe, characterized as the human blood hound, to capture two jewel thieves. Luke goes to the famous Hot Springs where he learns the criminals have gone to further their activities. His clues lead him to suspect almost everybody in the hotel but the real criminals, who eventually escape while Luke attempts to arrest a real, honest-to-goodness detective and for his pains is thrown out into the street.

Armstrong plays Luke Sharpe and gets a lot of comedy out of the part. He is assisted by a group of clever fun-makers, including Tommy Hayes and Grace Gibson.

An interesting feature of the picture is obtained from several views of the famous Hot Springs, with the many bathers disporting themselves in the recuperative waters.

"DOLLARS AND THE WOMAN" (Lubin).

"Dollars and the Woman" is the photoplay title given to Albert Payson Terhune's notable story, "Dollars and Cents," which has been made into a six-act feature by the Lubin Company of Philadelphia.

With a cast including Ethel Clayton, Tom Moore, Craufurd Kent, Bartley McCullum and Herbert Fortier, under the direction of Joseph Kaufman, the successful screening of "Dollars and the Woman" could be safely predicted. But the element of art direction is equally conspicuous in founding the assertion by the Lubin Company that "Dollars and the Woman" will be found among the photoplay masterpieces of the year.

After a selection of a de luxe cast, the art director was authorized to go to any extent necessary in securing every accessory of scenic adornment to provide a realistic framework for the interiors which predominate in the drama. The result is an ideal production, perfectly played.

PIONEER FEATURE FILM RELEASES.

The Pioneer Feature Film Corporation, 130 West 46th Street, are meeting with great success in booking their new releases. "The Mother Who Paid," a five-part dramatic story of intense heart interest. The feature of this production is exact and careful attention paid to the settings, the court, mob and all super scenes. The powerful acting of the lead in this production cannot be excelled. The man who directed this picture knew his "business." Those who have seen this release at the private showing on Monday are most enthused and getting busy with their dates. Another picture that is keeping the office force well occupied is "The Little Orphan," a five-part drama, featuring the well-known child star, Baby Gorman. This picture goes big with the personal appearance of the child, who has a very clever and interesting twelve-minute act, with several changes.

SMALLEYS START NEW FEATURE.

An unusual photoplay with an unusual name has been started by the Smalleys at Universal City. It is called "The Eye of God," and is a powerful psychological drama from the pen of Lois Weber, who already has added so many of her successes to the offerings of the screen. Tyrone Power has been selected to play the lead, with Lois Weber opposite. Phillips Smalley will direct. The photoplay is written in five reels and will be released as a feature when completed.

The story, which is replete with powerful situations, unusual action and suspense, is that of a man who does wrong, and no matter how he seeks to forget the "eye" is ever upon him. The production is being made with intricate attention to detail and its real culmination is not suspected until the finale.

BLANCHE SWEET IN "THE SOWERS."

Although Blanche Sweet is the star of the Lasky production "The Sowers," based on Henry Seton Merriman's novel of the same name, announcement of the cast that is to appear gives to the feature play practically an "all-star" cast. In leading roles in her support are Theodore Roberts, himself a Lasky star in many productions, and Thomas Meighan, who has come rapidly to the front as one of the most popular leading men on the screen. He is soon to be featured in a picture.

The others who have leading parts in the production, which is a most elaborate undertaking on the subject of the Russian peasants' fight for political and industrial freedom, are Ernest Joy, who is remembered for his good work in Miss Sweet's last photoplay, "The Black List"; Dick Le Strange, Miss Camille Astor and Horace B. Carpenter.

"MAD CAP" NEARS COMPLETION.

Director William C. Dowlan and his company of players have about completed the filmization of "The Map Cap," a story by George Gubbs and adapted for the screen by Leonora Ainsworth. In this story Flora Parker De Haven is featured and is supported by Richard Sterling and Vera Doria. The story is to be released in five reels and Director Dowlan declares it is full of exciting moments and is getting better as the work of production proceeds at Universal City.

It is the story of a girl who is endowed with everything in life her heart could wish with the exception of happiness. To find this she seeks every sort of danger that can be imagined. It is a story with a punch, and affords the young star a great opportunity to display her talents.

NEWSPAPERMAN WRITES SCENARIO.

Work has been begun by American on a five-reel drama, as yet untitled, written by William Parker, a former Los Angeles newspaper man, who has deserted the Fourth Estate for the screen. Frank Borzage, who in recent months has served as a director, is to appear in the leading role. Borzage asserts he is more than willing to relinquish the reins of directorship and resume his activities as leading man. Announcement has not as yet been made by President Hutchinson as to members of the cast who will appear in support of Borzage. This production will be released as a Mutual Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition.

"THE HAUNTED MANOR" POSTPONED.

The original release date for Gaumont's "The Haunted Manor" was March 20, but announcement has been made that this Mutual Masterpiece, De Luxe Edition will not be seen upon the screen until April. The photoplay, which is being directed by Edwin Middleton at Jacksonville, Fla., stars Miss Iva Shepard. Prominent in the cast are Gertrude Robinson, Mathilde Baring, Richard Garrick, Olive Trevor, Earl O. Schenck, Henry W. Pemberton, Robert Clugston, John Mackin, Harry Chira, and John Reinhard. The scenes of "The Haunted Manor" are laid in India and in the United States.

"THE MOTHER WHO PAID" (Great Northern).

THE Mother Who Paid," the latest production of the Great Northern Film Company, 110 West 40th Street, New York City, is creating unusually lively interest. The leading role is interpreted by Regina Wethergren, the famous dramatic actress, whose histrionic art is on the same high level as that of Sarah Bernhardt or Eleonor Duse. The next release of the Great Northern is now in preparation, and is a five-reel problem play, entitled "The Folly of Sin." It will be released towards the end of March.

LORRIMER JOHNSTON FEATURE SOLD TO PHOENIX.

"By Right of Sword," one of the most popular romantic stories of recent years, and produced in a five-reel feature by Lorrimer Johnston, has been re-christened "The Envoy Extraordinary," and the New England bookings are being handled by the Phoenix Feature Film Corporation.

"THE YAQUI" TIMELY BLUEBIRD.

The Bluebird release for March 20 is "The Yaqui," starring Hobart Bosworth, in a romance based on conditions in Mexico as they exist between the Yaqui Indians and the Spanish descendants of the turbid Republic. As the exteriors were all taken on Mexican soil, there will be great interest in the feature now that the strained situation has been brought about by the latest massacre of Americans by Pancho Villa. Some of the "big scenes" depict accurate methods of Mexican warfare and the Bluebird feature gives exhibitors a big "play" on the immediate conditions, with General Funston chasing the "greasers."

FOUR BIG COMEDIES IN NEW YORK STRAND.

The popular Frank Daniels' Comedies, entitled "The Escapades of Mr. Jack," produced by the Vitagraph Company, and released through the V-L-S-E, which are amusing audiences throughout the country in a manner which is reminiscent of the success of the late John Bunny comedies, have been booked by the Strand in New York City, and will be shown in that theater regularly hereafter.

IRENE HUNT WITH UNIVERSAL.

Irene Hunt, for three years a Reliance star under D. W. Griffith, will soon be seen in Universal films as leading woman with Ben Wilson. She is now appearing at Universal Heights in the production of "The Silent Call," which Mr. Wilson is making from the scenario by J. Grubb Alexander.

NEILAN IN SAN FRANCISCO.

Marshall Neilan and company are in San Francisco where Neilan will complete the Selig Red Seal Play," The Cycle of Fate," of which he is the author as well as the producer.

"THE WOMAN WHO DID NOT CARE" (Selig).

Eugenie Besserer, the noted French emotional actress, will have exceptional opportunities in the forthcoming Selig multiple reel production entitled: "The Woman Who Did Not Care." This strong society drama abounds in magnificent sets and scenic locations.

CENT A TICKET TAX IN ONTARIO.

By W. M. Gladish, Toronto Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

New Tax Levy on Tickets to All Kinds of Amusements.

TORONTO, ONT.—Following closely upon the announcement by the Federal Government of Canada that a business tax would be levied upon all companies in proportion to certain excess profits in order to provide revenue for war purposes, the Ontario Provincial Government, at the instigation of Hon. Mr. McGarry, provincial treasurer, has decided to impose a taxation upon all amusements, principally moving pictures, by the levying of a special fee upon all patrons of picture houses, theaters, amusement parks, race and athletic meets and other events. In the case of the film theaters, patrons will pay an extra cent tax at time of purchase of admission ticket of 5c., 10c. or 15c. A higher tax will be imposed on more expensive tickets. The revenue from this source is expected to run over $500,000 per year and is to be used to meet war expenditures.

The Province of Quebec already has a one-cent amusement tax for moving picture patrons and other Canadian Provinces may follow the example of Quebec and Ontario, it is intimated.

MAY ISSUE SUNDAY LICENSES.

Toronto, Ontario.—Because of doubts regarding the intentions of some theatrical promoters in holding Sunday performances in moving picture houses for patriotic or Red Cross purposes, the City Council of Toronto has decided to ask the Ontario Legislature for power to regulate Sunday benefit shows by means of licenses. None other than a patriotic, war fund or similar concert is permissible on Sunday in Toronto and the civic authorities believe that some managers are taking advantage of the privilege. By means of the license system, the city would control the disposition of the receipts, it is declared.

BECOMES ONTARIO BLUE BIRD.

Toronto, Ontario.—Announcement is made by the Canadian Universal that W. A. Campbell, formerly Toronto manager of the World Film Corporation, has been appointed manager in Ontario for the Blue Bird features. Mr. Campbell has been with the World only a short time.

UNITED PHOTO-PLAYS GROWS.

Toronto, Ontario.—Henry Fischer of the United Photo-Plays, Limited, left Toronto for New York on March 2nd to complete preparations for the opening of a New York office which will take care of the releasing of various film plays in the United States and through which photo-dramas will be secured for the Canadian market. The move practically consists of the opening of an American office for a Canadian company although it is the intention to build up a separate business organization in the States for film renting purposes. The United Photo-Plays, Limited, have been buying reels on the open market and have dealt mainly in one, two and three-reel subjects. A brother of Henry Fischer, Meyer Fischer, has the Warner Features Company in Toronto, an exchange dealing with special features, but under a new management, it is understood, the Warner and United companies are to be more closely associated in future.

Montreal's New Theatres

Three New Picture Houses Open to Public—One Reopening—St. Denis, a Conover House, an Imposing Theater—Regent, New House of the Independent Amusement, Ltd.—A Worthy New West End Picture House.

By Gerald Gallagher, 1849 Park Av., Montreal Correspondent Moving Picture World.

MONTREAL, QUE.—This city has just experienced a most eventful moving picture week. We have seen the opening of three new theaters, and the reopening of a fourth. And we are given to understand that there are more to come, and that a legitimate theater will turn to the screen, and still another may run a big feature for an indefinite run next summer.

The St. Denis.

The largest and most imposing theater, speaking from an architeectural point of view, the Theater St. Denis, was opened to the public on Saturday, March 4, at 1 o'clock. The previous evening a private performance was held, at which the notables in the city attended. In a forthcoming issue of the Moving Picture World an illustrated article will be published giving a fair account of the many wonders embodied in the construction of this marvelous theater. Mr. Conover is to be congratulated on his house.

Mr. Beck, the organist at the Imperial, opened the ceremonies with a stirring march on the $30,000 Hope-Jones Wurlitzer Unit Orchestra. The pictures on the program included a Pathe travel picture of Holland, a Metro play, "Satan Sanderson," and a Pathe Phunphilm.

The Regent.

The new Regent theater, which also opened on the 4th, has chosen for a slogan "The House Palatial." It lives up to it. We will describe its interesting features in a special article to be submitted to the editors later.

The feature chosen for the opening of this theater was the Universal's subject, "The Campbells are Comin'." The picture was accompanied by Mr. William Eckstein, and we affirm that we have never heard such a suitable accompaniment to a film in Montreal, with the exception of that given to "The Birth of a Nation." At the critical moment in the play, when the Campbells come to the rescue, pipers from a local Highland regiment burst forth into a volume of Highland music. The rest of the program was fine.

After the performance the officers of the Independent Amusement Limited entertained guests in the board room of the theater. The Highlanders gave dances and music and Jim Rice, a local celebrity, recited a humorous piece about a French-Canadian baseball game. Chandos St. John Brenon, local manager for William Fox, started the forensic ball rolling by thanking the owners of the Regent theater for the lavish hospitality. Mr. Cousins, president of the company, responded, and was followed by other members of the company, including Mr. Frank Warnicker manager of the theater. Mr. Warnicker is one of the most popular film men in Montreal. He at one time managed the Lyric Hall, and has also been connected with the Mutual, General and World Film companies.

New West End House.

The latest West End house to open its doors was the Windsor Photo Plays. The house is under the management of Harry Bryan, who has been in the business for fifteen years, and has been connected with houses in New York, Philadelphia and Chicago. The decorations are green. Music is furnished by an orchestra. An innovation is that the girl ushers are dressed as Puritan maidens. The opening program was led by the Kleine subject, "Du Barry."

Brief Bits.

Montreal, Quebec.—The National Amusement Company, incorporated under the laws of the Province of Quebec, has taken over the two oldest moving picture houses in this city, the Ouimetoscope and the Crystal Palace. The Crystal Palace is using Paramount and Metro pictures.

Beamsville, Ont.—The Regal theater, Beamsville, Ontario, has had a change of policy which includes a switch to Universal service.

Montreal, Quebec.—It has been learned that the London theater has made another change in managers, this time Mr. Godel, who was previously manager of the Arcade in the same city, has taken over the active management.

Montreal, Quebec.—G. A. Margetts has been appointed agent for the Maritime Provinces for the Blue Bird Photo Plays Inc.

Montreal, Quebec.—The Strand theater, Montreal, makes the interesting statement that while up to January their record receipts had been attained during a showing of "Neptune's Daughter," this record has been smashed to bits by over $200 during the first week of the showing of the great Blue Bird feature, "Jeanne Dore," starring Sarah Bernhardt. And this remarkable showing was made during a blinding snowstorm.

Timmins, Ont.—The Empire theater, Timmins, Ont., was damaged to the extent of about $500 recently, when a bad fire broke out in the building next door.

Montreal, Quebec.—Sam Bernstein, of the Globe theater, announces that extensive alterations will be made to the house under his charge.

Montreal, Quebec.—Mary Miles Minter was a recent visitor to Montreal. She appeared in person on the stage at the Imperial theater, after the showing of a Metro feature in which she appeared, "Barbara Frietchie."

All Puffed Up.

Glen Kerr is back with us again, being now located at the Montreal office of the Mutual. By the way, while we're talking about the Mutual, aren't they the awful bunch? Now that they've got Charlie—why, it's hard to bear them. They have already given notice to their local landlord and will shortly move into larger and more luxurious quarters. What do you think of that? We're all right; but the office can't wear its hat.

Portsmouth Combination

Allied Theaters Company Formed in Portsmouth, N. H., Takes Over City's Theatrical and Picture Interests—Officers and Directors of the Company—Theaters Involved—Statement of Objects and Policies.

By William Flynn, Boston Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

PORTSMOUTH, N. H.—News of the recent consolidation of the theatrical interests in Portsmouth, N. H., and the subsequent closing of the Portsmouth and Scenic theaters, in that city, has created considerable interest among exchange men, exhibitors and others connected with the moving picture business throughout New England.

Allied Theaters Company.

A new corporation known as the Allied Theaters Company has been formed, the president of which is Col. John H. Bartlett, of Portsmouth. The other incorporators include Albert Hislop, of Portsmouth, vice-president; Willis N. Rugg, of Portsmouth, treasurer; Volney C. Badger, of Portsmouth, clerk. Besides these officers the Board of Directors of the new corporation includes William P. Gray, of Lewiston, Me.

The policy of the new corporation, which took over the theatrical and moving picture affairs of Portsmouth the first of this month, was outlined in a public statement issued by the officers of the corporation at the conclusion of the first meeting, which was held in the office of President Bartlett. The statement was as follows:

Too Much Competition.

"The public well knows from the past year's experience and observation that Portsmouth cannot support four big theaters running all the time continuously. If the Portsmouth public could so support them, it would be too great a drain upon the city generally to compel them to do so.

"It has been the current topic of conversation for a long time as to how the theater problem in this city could be solved so as to maintain for the city the great advantages which come to it through its reputation of being the best theater city in Northern New England without incurring the great disadvantages and possible serious conditions which might result from continuing the unreasonable and suicidal competition. At first thought the public might consider that they were getting the great advantage of the situation, but any situation in a city which is not on a permanent business basis is not wholesome or beneficial to the public in the long run, and, furthermore, Portsmouth is not getting the advantage of the competition.

"It has been apparent to all that the present system of running all the theaters could not long prevail, and we believe it is a matter of congratulation, not only to every theater owner, but to the city as a whole, that the following arrangement has been worked out and agreed to:

Holdings of New Company.

"The Allied Theaters Company is a corporation organized under New Hampshire law. It has secured an absolute lease of the Portsmouth theater for a term of five years with the privilege of renewal, and its intention is to run that house for the purposes for which it was primarily adapted, namely, the accommodation of a few of the great shows of the country, and such public local purposes as political rallies, local theatricals, mass meetings and other public assemblies, for which purposes it can be leased at a very low rental.

"It has obtained a lease for five years with the privilege of renewal of the Colonial theater, and also a similar lease of the Olympic theater. It has also obtained a lease of the interests of William P. Gray and the Badger Brothers in the Scenic Temple or Pierce Hall theater, including the good will, right of service and the efficient management of William P. Gray and the Badger Brothers.

Has New Policy.

"The policy will be to make the Colonial and the Olympia, the two new and palatial theaters, the places where the bulk of the business will be done. Pierce Hall will be run for overflow purposes on big days for dances. There will be no intention of closing any of the properties any more than is necessary for successful management.

"As between the Colonial theater and the Olympia theater, for the present at least, the following policy will be adopted:

"At the Colonial Charles W. Hodgdon as manager with his force of assistants at the Olympia, will transfer his popular vaudeville and vaudeville methods from the Olympia to the Colonial. He will run there at each show four acts of vaudeville and four new short, snappy reels of pictures, including the Daily Newspaper movies. His prices there will be, in the evening ten cents in the gallery, twenty cents in the orchestra. In the afternoon ten cents all over the house, children five cents.

"At the Olympia William P. Gray as general manager will establish the best feature picture house in Northern New England, running the Triangle, Fox, Paramount and other first-class pictures. Those who have seen Mr. Gray's houses in Maine have seen them crowded with picture people, alone, while the vaudeville house across the street has been thinly attended. People of Portsmouth will continue to have the best that the Scenic Temple has had, with something added. The prices at the Olympia will be: ten cents straight all over the house, both afternoon and evening, except that children will be admitted for five cents.

"We have thought it best to make this plain, frank and open statement to the public in order that they might fully appreciate our position and motive.

"We trust the plan will appeal to the public as a rational one and that they will give us their cordial and hearty support, and we promise to give them, in value and quality, every cent's worth of entertainment we possibly can and make our ends meet. Good amusement is a good thing for a Navy Yard city, particularly. We need your help; give us a boost."

The statement was signed by John H. Bartlett, Aubert Hislop, William P. Gray, Volney C. Badger and Willis N. Rugg.

THREE NEW CORPORATIONS.

Boston, Mass.—There are three new Massachusetts amusement corporations, namely the Consolidated Film and Amusement Company, the Grove Hall Hippodrome, Inc., and the Grove Hall Theater, Inc. The first two corporations are capitalized for $100,000 each and the last one for $50,000. Massachusetts men are promoting all three ventures.

Consolidated Film Amusement Co.

Frank Keezer, of Nahant, is president and treasurer of the Consolidated Film and Amusement Company; Harry W. McIntyre, also of Nahant, is clerk, and these two men with Mr. George W. Pratt, of Boston, make up the board of directors. There are 20,000 shares of common stock, each share having a par value of $5. According to the certificate of incorporation only four shares have been issued, two to President Keezer and one each to Mr. McIntyre and Mr. Pratt.

Grove Hall Hippodrome, Inc.

In the Grove Hall Hippodrome, Inc., there are 1,000 shares of common stock of a par value of $100 a share, the president is Edward F. Heenan, of South Hanover, Mass.; Benjamin Silber, of No. 16 Faulkner street, Malden, is treasurer, and Parker J. Brown, of Revere, clerk. All three are members of the board of directors, and each holds one share of stock.

Grove Hall Theater, Inc.

Of the Grove Hall Theater, Inc., James J. Tibbetts, of Boston, is president, A. W. Philbrick, of Boston, is treasurer and clerk. They are both members of the board of directors, of which Charles C. M. Loeffler, of Boston, is also a member. The common stock has a par value of $10 a share and there are 5,000 shares, only four of which have been issued.

New Fox Road Men.

Toronto, Ontario.—Manager Mitchell Granby, of local Fox office, has been joined by C. M. Crawford of Boston, who will work on the roads radiating from this Canadian Metropolis.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

BIG FEATURE IN SMALL CITY.

How Exhibitor Karnes Made Good on "Peace" Film in Blacksburg, Va.

By Clarence L. Linz 635 Tenth St. N. E. Washington, Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

BLACKSBURG, Va.—The question of getting a fair return from the money invested in the theaters and their equipment is an all-absorbing one with the exhibitors at the present time in face of the rapidly increasing cost of doing business. The public has been educated to looking upon motion pictures as a five-cent proposition and often it is not a fair admission price. The law of supply and demand is more largely felt in the motion picture business than in many of the other industries. The average small town exhibitor has not the population to draw from that would seem to warrant his booking the high grade features. Yet Exhibitor J. A. Karnes, of the Lyric theater, in Blacksburg, Va., with a population of less than 15,000, did it. There came requests for the exhibition of "The Battle Cry of Peace," but figuring the cost as compared with the population, it seemed out of the question. More requests were made and Mr. Karnes went among his patrons and signed up 150 of them at $1 each, and then he wired booking that feature.

A large production of this kind necessarily requires appropriate music, but undaunted, Mr. Karnes went ahead and secured 50 more subscriptions at the same price, and then he hired an orchestra that had played to the "Battle Cry" in Norfolk. By that time, subscriptions came to him, and when the box office receipts were checked up, Mr. Karnes found that he had made a neat little profit, satisfied his patrons, and literally put Blacksburg on the map as a "first production" town. He co-operated with the people and now they are with him for the showing of other equally prominent films, and his name is to be noted on the roster of exhibitor-celebrities as being the first man in the State, if not in the country, to get dollar-admissions on the showing of a popular film.

Newark Screen Club

Prominent Exhibitors and Exchange Men Behind Idea of Forming Film Men's Organization—A Permanent Body to Be Formed—Interest Evinced Delights Backers—Local Business Will Be Benefited by Such a Club.

By Jacob Kalter, 501 Century Bldg., Newark Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

NEWARK, N. J.—Following the lead of the other larger cities, Newark will soon have a real Screen Club, if the plans of the several enthusiastic backers of the movement do not go astray. Since the Exhibitors' Association has proved farily successful, it was thought that a Screen Club, admitting anyone connected with the industry, would be a much better success. George Stone, of the Bergen theater, at 328 Bergen street, is certainly an enthusiastic rooter for the proposed club. "I am heartily in favor of the plan to organize a Screen Club in Newark. It would fill a long-felt want here." Thus Mr. Stone expressed himself Wednesday.

Leo. F. Levison.

Another film man, and he's an exchange manager, who is in favor of the plan is Leo F. Levison, manager of the local World Film office. Mr. Levison was a charter member and secretary of the Pittsburgh Screen Club. It was largely through his efforts that the club was formed there. At the time of writing, Mr. Levison is ill, but it is hoped that he will soon be back at his Newark office, ready to take the initial steps toward the organization.

HATCH FILM OPENS OFFICE.

Newark, N. J.—The J. Frank Hatch Film Company, with offices in Pittsburgh, opened Newark offices at 284 Market street, formerly occupied by the Greater New York Film Rental Company. The offices have been under the personal charge of Mr. Hatch, but the permanent manager, who will soon be installed, is William Schell.

UNIVERSAL MAN MISSING.

Newark, N. J.—Samuel Glaubner, road man for the Universal, at 286 Market street, Newark, has mysteriously disappeared, for no apparent reason whatsoever. There is absolutely no clue as to his whereabouts.

LYCEUM INSPECTED BY PUBLIC.

Newark, N. J.—The public was permitted Thursday, March 10, to see the wonders of the "Lyceum Atop Proctor's Palace" for the first time. The finishing touches are being made this week; otherwise the entire place is ready for use. One of the wonders of the theater is that it is a combination theater and dance hall; that is, the dance floor can be lowered at will when occasion demands it.

Although built above the Palace, the Lyceum is complete in every respect. The egress from the building is easy, as there are twelve exits from the roof garden. Three elevators carry passengers to and from the roof. The house has a seating capacity of 1,400, which, together with the 2,800 held by the Palace, means that over 4,200 people can be accommodated at the same time in the one building. The house will be under the same management as the Palace, Lewis R. Golding, manager, and R. J. O'Crowley, Jr., assistant manager.

Max Not Samuel.

Irvington, N. J.—The Irving theater, Springfield avenue, was bought by Max Singer, and not Samuel Singer, as reported erroneously last week in the Moving Picture World. We take this opportunity to correct the statement.

Marbachs to Dance.

Newark, N. J.—The Otto Marbach Association, of which Otto Marbach, chief booker of the Royal Feature Film Exchange, is the president, will hold its second annual ball March 25th, at Kunzmann's Hall, Sixteenth avenue and Eighteenth street. Several of the local film "boys" are members of this social organization, and it is expected that a goodly number of film men will be present.

Rambonnet Back Home.

Newark, N. J.—Edwin A. Rambonnet, who acted as special representative for Essanay's "The Strange Case of Mary Page," has just returned from the Philadelphia territory, where he worked out of the General Film's office, 1308 Vine street. He reports excellent bookings on the serial. He will probably work now from the General Film's Newark office, 16-18 Beaver street. Mr. Rambonnet, being an old-time and experienced film man, has no difficulty in making friends among the Jersey exhibitors. This, in a way, accounts for his success.

Local Film Shown.

Newark, N. J.—Proctor's Palace theater, Market street, Newark, showed during the week of March 5, the thrilling moving picture drama, "A Twentieth Century Romance." The film has many local scenes, and many important local personages have also been screened. The film is the product of the Post Film Company of Chicago, and stars Miss Marie Post. An interesting view was one showing over sixty Newark tots in the role of a real baby show. R. J. O'Crowley, assistant manager of the Palace theater, had charge of many of the local scenes.

Keeney Shows Feature.

Newark, N. J.—In addition to the regular vaudeville bill, Keeney's theater, Halsey and Branford streets, Newark, will show a feature at each performance. The new policy went into effect March 6, during which week the B. S. Moss Film Company's production, "One Day," was shown. Every week a new feature will be given.

Universal Commercials.

Newark, N. J.—"Universal Jerry" Kraker, who has charge of the film at the Universal Fair, 286 Market street, is rejoicing over the recent arrival of a lot of good commercials. Many of the local exhibitors will also rejoice, as this is the first time that the Universal could really boast of good commercials. No complaints this time, Jerry assures us.

Those Queer Pennsylvania Censors

The Big Anti-Drink Picture, "Prohibition," Comes to Philadelphia and Is Seen by Breitinger and Other Censors.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—It is a matter of common knowledge to those who read the papers and are interested in the moving picture industry, that it has long been the cry of the State Board of Censors that there were entirely too many films depicting drinking scenes and other essential luxuries always associated with the gay white way.

Invitations were sent to many well known Philadelphians to attend a private exhibition of the photoplay entitled "Prohibition," at the Chestnut Street Opera House, on Friday, March 3. Among those invited were many prominent clergymen, including the Rev. Homer W. Tope, district superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, and H. M. Chalfant, editor of the American Issue. Everyone who witnessed the production of the film seemed to be of the opinion that it was an extremely educational picture and that one who saw the picture must of necessity be favorably impressed against the use of strong liquor.

However, not so with J. Lewis Breitinger and his fellow censors, for in their estimation the film was extremely nauseating in parts and certainly had to be censored before being shown in public. When asked to explain the censoring of such a film, Mr. Breitinger made no reply, but nevertheless the picture was subjected to many eliminations.

Mr. Chalfant, voicing the opinion of those present, said:

"I cannot understand why the censors eliminated any part of the drama. The picture is essentially a lesson to certain men who are addicted to strong drink, and to boys. There is absolutely nothing objectionable about the picture, and the only persons who could find fault with the production are the saloonkeepers and brewers. The film is a body blow at their business and carries a convincing message that temperance must be adopted by self-respecting men and women. I would gladly permit members of my family to view the picture and am sorry that its effectiveness has been injured."

When a man of Mr. Chalfant's calibre can see no objection to a picture and heralds the film as a lesson of morality for the public at large, does it not seem laughable that a few unknowns should step in and tear the same film apart exclaiming that it is of an objectionable nature?

THOMAS B. TAYLOR IS 75.

Trenton, N. J.—Thomas B. Taylor, treasurer of the Trenton Theater Building Company, owners of the Trent theater and the Taylor opera house, recently quietly celebrated his birthday anniversary. He has reached his seventy-fifth milestone, but is just as active and hale as in the days of long ago, when the opera house which bears his name was one of the few theaters in the east. Mr. Taylor has been associated with the theatrical business for many years, and he is thoroughly acquainted with the ins and outs of the business from A. to Z. He has seen all of the celebrated stars of the former days of the legitimate productions, and has been in intimate touch with their personal and professional careers. Mr. Taylor has witnessed the growth of the theatrical industry from infancy and is one of the firm adherents of the moving picture industry, claiming that it has opened a field for unlimited study and research. Although born in the days when the moving picture was unknown, this veteran is now of the opinion that it is a far greater art than that of the legitimate stage.

POTTSVILLE THEATER BURNS.

Pottsville, Pa.—News comes from Pottsville of a most disastrous fire which entirely consumed the big estate known as the Slater Building. The Garden moving picture theater, one of the best known houses in that section of the state of Pennsylvania, was demolished during the conflagration and lovers of the silent drama will be forced to patronize other theaters in that locality for some time to come.

A COAL MINING PICTURE.

Wilkes-Barre, Pa.—Robert H. Seip, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., an expert of the United States Bureau of Mines, recently gave a moving picture exhibition in the auditorium of the Reading Boys' High School, Reading, Pa., of the processes of mining, manufacturing, handling and transporting anthracite coal, from the time that it is loosened from its bed in the mine until it is ready for delivery.

NORTH CAROLINA LETTER.

By C. L. Linz 635 Tenth St., N. E. Washington, Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Asheville's New Sign Ordinance.

ASHEVILLE, N. C.—New electric sign regulations have been adopted by the city commissioners of Asheville. These require that electric signs be of metal, illuminated with incandescent light bulbs, placed two lamps of four candle-power each per square foot on both sides of the sign surface, and no sign may have less than twenty-four such lamps. A further requirement is that both sides shall be illuminated each night, for not less than six nights each week, until 10 o'clock. Permits must be obtained before the signs are erected and all connections and electrical wiring must be inspected and passed upon by the city electrical inspector.

New Chapel Hill House.

Chapel Hill, N. C.—This college town, has a new motion picture theater which is one of the finest in the state. It is situated in the heart of the village, near the postoffice. The interior decorations are very attractive. The building is two stories in height, the upper being arched and giving an added appearance to the house. It is steam heated, and everything has been done to make it up-to-the-minute in every respect. It is equipped with two late model projection machines. The theater is operated by students and recruits from Carolina's Glee Club comprise an orchestra which pleases the patrons of the house with college songs and popular airs.

Theater Turns to Films.

Winston-Salem, N. C.—The management of the Paramount theater, here has announced that this house will hereafter be devoted to the exhibition of an exclusive program of motion pictures, these replacing the tabloid musical comedies which formerly appeared at that house. The Paramount will be opened each day at one o'clock and the performance will run until 10 p. m.

Ideas and Notes.

Winston-Salem, N. C.—"The Girl and the Game" serial has been having so heavy a run at the Elmont theater in Winston-Salem that it was soon found that the seating capacity of that house was insufficient to accommodate the large number of people who are interested in these pictures. Because of this and to give an opportunity to all who desire to see the serial an opportunity, the booking has been changed over to the Paramount theater, a much larger house.

Gastonia, N. C.—The Broadway theater which was opened in Gastonia about two weeks ago has just added a sixteen piece Seeburg orchestra.

Asheville, N. C.—Manager L. Blomberg, of the Strand, Asheville, had as his guests the workers of the newspaper offices in that city last week during a showing of "The Fourth Estate." The Strand theater orchestra furnished an elaborate musical program during the exhibition of this feature. The news people took especial interest in the production because of its being a newspaper story and showing every phase of the work done.

Censorship Mass Meeting

Pittsburgh Screen Club to Hold Big Public Gathering on April 2—Will Be Part of Campaign Against Censorship in State—Club Moves to New and Larger Quarters in Lyceum Theater Building.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—The Pittsburgh Screen Club is arranging for a mass meeting in the interests of the moving picture industry, to be held in this city Sunday, April 2. An announcement of the details will be made soon by the committee, which has taken steps to secure a number of out-of-town men prominent in the trade to deliver addresses. The gathering will be part of the campaign recently launched by the club to bring matters such as censorship more directly before the public.

The Pittsburgh Screen Club has secured larger and more centrally located quarters and will move in the near future from the Cameraphone building to the Lyceum theater building. The rooms decided upon are double the size of the old quarters, which have been crowded as a rule to overflowing by the large attendance at the weekly meetings. While no definite announcement has yet been made, the new headquarters will probably be formally opened with a big "house warming" early in April.

STRAND AT OAKLAND OPENS.

New Theater on Forbes Street, Near Atwood, a Credit to Its Locality.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The latest and, in many respects, the finest addition to Pittsburgh's long list of modern photoplay theaters is the Strand, on Forbes street, near Atwood. It has just been completed and opened in a fitting manner to the public of that district, known as Oakland, one of the most exclusive sections of the city. The Strand is the newest link in the Rowland & Clark chain of houses.

Approaching the theater from either side one notes that large and impressive electric sign which states: "The Strand Photoplays," while at the top is an illuminated clock that can be seen from a considerable distance. Passing under the marquise, which extends to the sidewalk, one enters the spacious lobby and is immediately struck by the artistic simplicity of arrangement and decoration. The center of the entrance lobby is occupied by a circular ticket lobby with marble base and plate glass top. Back of the entrance lobby, a handsomely furnished passageway extends the width of the building. Keeping to the right on entering, one passes first the manager's lobby, then an exit lobby, next the ladies' retiring room, then turns to the left and enters the auditorium proper.

The splendid impression gained of the theater from the exterior and lobby is heightened still further by the luxurious furnishing and convenient arrangement of the auditorium. There are aisles on both sides of the house and one down the center, with a cross aisle about half way down front. The aisles are wide and the slope gradual yet sufficient to allow everyone to see unobstructedly. The screen is in the front of the house so that the audience faces Forbes street. A magnificent Moller organ, installed by Peloubet & Co., supplies the music. The lighting is of the total indirect method, with side wall brackets, giving a subdued light that is at the same time brilliant enough to make the finding of seats remarkably easy. Exits in addition to those on either side of the front of the house are situated in the rear of the auditorium. The men's retiring room is in the rear to the right. In the projection room has been installed new apparatus of the latest and highest type. The Strand will seat upward of 800, and the chairs provide ample "leg room" between rows.

Metro, Paramount, Fox and Red Feather —feature pictures only—are being shown, with a complete change of program daily. The theater is open continuously from 2 p. m. until 10.30 p. m. The admission charge is fixed at ten cents. The Rowland & Clark theaters comprise the Regent, one of the finest picture theaters in Pittsburgh; the Strand, the Arsensal, the Bellevue, the Belmar and the Oakland. Each of these, with the exception of the last named, seats over 600 and embodies the last word in theater construction. A. J. Simon is resident manager of the Strand.

FILM MEN'S BILLIARD CONTEST.

Lively interest is being displayed by billiard enthusiasts among Pittsburgh film people in a championship contest now being played between a number of prominent moving picture men for a handsome silver trophy. A series of games is under way at the Olympic billard parlors, beginning last week, and the much-discussed question of supremacy with the cue will soon be a settled fact. P. Antonoplos, of the East End Cameraphone theater, has offered a beautiful loving cup to the winner. The contestants are Max W. Herring, A. W. Cross, H. A. Lande, John Long, J. E. Davis, H. C. Grelle and Mr. Antonoplos.

Ambrose Lantzy Buys the Grand.

Portage, Pa.—Ambrose Lantzy, formerly manager of the Grand theater at Barnesboro, Pa., recently purchased the Grand theater at Portage, Pa., from Charles Baird and has taken charge of same. Mr. Baird formerly conducted two houses in Portage, but will now devote all his time to the other house, the Pastime.

Alhambra's New House Organ

McKeesport, Pa.—The Alhambra theater, McKeesport, has begun the publication of a very live and attractive house organ. This theater runs Blue Bird, V-L-S-E and General service and business is very good, Manager J. E. McCoy states.

Washington, Pa.—The Rex theater at Washington, Pa., has been purchased from John Abraham by D. W. Burton, a former well-known exhibitor of this district. The Universal servise is being used.

Business Notes.

The Lyric theater, McKeesport, Pa., which recently installed a Power's 6-B machine, has completed its booth equipment by putting in a new Simplex machine. Both are motor driven.

The Imperial theater, Beaver avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa., is installing its own electric light plant. The new manager of this house, Tom Gilbert, reports an exceptionally good business.

The Columbia theater, Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa., has greatly improved its projection by the installation of two new Simplex motor driven machines purchased from the Feature Film & Calcium Light Company.

New Washington Theater

Federal Amusement Company About to Build Picture Theater With Novel Features —Will Seat 4,500 Persons—Spanish Pergola Around Roof Garden Auditorium With Tables for Refreshments.

By Clarence L. Linz, 635 Tenth St., N. E., Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The Capital is to have one of the most modern theaters in the United States if the plans of the Federal Amusement Company are carried to completion. These plans contemplate the erection of a $100,000 fireproof building with all of the "fixings" that will make it stand out as the peer of the motion picture houses of the National Capital.

The new house is to be on the site of the present Lyric theater, at Fourteenth and Irving Streets, Northwest, Henry Wasson, proprietor of that house having agreed to turn in his holdings for similar holdings in the new project. In addition, adjacent property has been secured at a purchase price reported to approximate $35,000. The plans for the structure have been prepared by Architect Horace W. Peaslee, and these will produce a seating capacity of 4,500. The main auditorium with the gallery will accommodate 2,500 persons, while an open-air roof garden will take care of the remaining 2,000 people.

A Refreshment Pergola.

A striking feature incident to the latter will be an adaptation of the Spanish pergola, or latticed arbor. This archway is to be covered with vines and will extend entirely around three sides of the open-air auditorium, the fourth side being left for the screen, etc. Tables are to be placed beneath the arch, and patrons will be served with refreshments while viewing the performance. A promenade will also extend around the roof, outside of the arbor, and this will be lined with benches. An escalator, or moving stairway, will convey patrons to the roof garden.

This theater is to be devoted exclusively to photoplays and it is announced that a uniform admission of ten cents will be charged. The prime movers, or organizers of this project are G. L. Stabler and R. W. Powers. It is stated that work will commence on or about May 1, and the construction will be completed some time during the summer.

The New Company.

The Federal Amusement Company was recently incorporated under the laws of the District of Columbia with a capital stock of $2,500 divided into shares of a par value of $1.00 each. Five trustees are named in the incorporation papers to manage its affairs for the first year, these being Samuel Greenberg, John H. Harris, Philip M. Maley, William Hutcherson, and James L. Crawford. The principal offices of the company are given as 911-915 H Street, Northeast. The charter grants the right to the company to engage in the exhibition and production of moving pictures and theatrical and vaudeville performances in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, as well as to acquire and deal in real estate.

Good Advertising Stunt.

A "Who? What? Where? Quiz" in the Washington Herald of Saturday, March 4, where there was offered $200 in awards in gold and merchandise, created no little amusement for those entering into the contest, and provided a considerable amount of publicity for the sixty-one merchants and business men whose advertisements containing questions to be answered by the readers were printed in the paper. In many of the advertisements, the name of the person or firm concerned was omitted, and thus it became necessary for the person desiring to get a share of the prize money to make a personal visit to the place in question and practically "dig" out for himself the answers to the questions, and one of the provisions of the contest was "You must go to the advertisers in person. Do not write or phone for information." The contest ended on March 8.

Nos. 28 and 53, reprinted below, are apparently the advertisements of Crandall's and Moore's theaters, respectively. The Cosmos theater featured its vaudeville entertainments and one of the burlesque shows was also represented.

> Why are the Shows at These Theaters the Best in Town?
> Olga Petrova Appears Sunday, Monday and Tuesday in "The Soul Market" at One of These Theaters. Many of the Scenes in the Picture were Photographed in This City. Name the Localities.

The contest attracted thousand of people who did not enter the contest for the purpose of securing prfzes, but who took time enough to endeavor to puzzle out the answers and thus the advertisements accomplished their purpose. All of the firms entered are expressing satisfaction with the results.

Starting a Serial in Lent.

Serials in Washington have never been as successful as one might desire, although in the surrounding territory they are said to go exceptionally well and, in fact, this is evidenced by the records made by some of the well-known serials. Exhibitors have side-stepped them, preferring to stick to "one-night shows." Considerable publicity has been given to "The Strange Case of Mary Page," and this fact was of no little interest to Harry S. Wolf, manager of Meader's Southeast theater, but how to put it over was a question. Mr. Wolf is connected with several enterprises in Washington and he has been quite successful in each. He believes in publicity to the fullest extent—although he does not generally believe in free passes for motion picture shows. However, he overcame his scruples this time to the extent of issuing somewhere in the neighborhood of 2,000 cards bearing the following inscription:

Courtesy Of MEADER'S THEATER
To Exhibition Of First Episode Of
"The Strange Case of Mary Page"
THURSDAY, MARCH 9th
From 6 To 11:15
MOST SENSATIONAL MYSTERY SERIAL EVER PRODUCED
Admission by Card Only
Positively no Tickets on Sale

"I am doing this," said Mr. Wolf, "to create enthusiasm over this serial. I am sure that if the people of my section see the first episode they will become so interestd that they will want to see all subsequent issues. The early part of Lent is always lacking in business and it is quite a serious matter to start off on a serial at this time. If the people fail to see the first episode there will not be that inquisitiveness to see the rest of the serial—but I am almost willing to bet that there will be very few people who will not avail themselves of our invitation to visit the show without charge."

L. & R. Film Adds to Forces.

M. Rosenberg, junior member of the L. and R. Film Distributors, has opened an office in room 204 of the Bank of Commerce and Savings building from which he will handle the business in the District of Columbia, Virginia, Maryland, Delaware, West Virginia, North Carolina and Kentucky. This concern is now marketing three prints of "The Spoilers" and is meeting with no little success for this feature is proving very popular in the territory named. A. N. Waters, traveling representative of this firm, has just returned from a six-weeks' tour of Kentucky. He reports exceptionally good business all along the line and will again leave in a few days for North Carolina. Veno Faulkner, formerly connected with the management of the Casino theater, at Seventh and F streets, Northwest, has joined the sales force and will cover the states of Maryland and Delaware. The latest recruit is Louis Berman. Mr. Berman is known to practically every exhibitor in this territory by reason of his having been head of the shipping department of the local V-L-S-E office since its establishment. He is to have his first experience in road work with films in the Virginias.

Many Out-of-Town Film Men.

A large number of out-of-town film men visited Washington last week. Among these were C. O. Moss, who covers the Virginia territory for Pathe, Inc., who came here to pay his respects to the new manager of the local exchange, Mr. O'Donnell; Alan J. Bachrach returned to participate in the meeting of the employees of the Washington branch of the V. L. S. E., and Dan O'Brien of Charlestown, W. Va., where he is acting as manager of the Cincinnati-Buckeye Film Exchange, paid a short visit to his many friends here. Mr. O'Brien reports an increased business in his territory and declares that there are signs of permanent improvement. He predicts, however, that regular service will soon play the most important part in the film industry, and that features will lose considerable of their popularity. He is now furnishing a weekly service of 28 reels and two multiple reel subjects. M. S. Siegel, representing the Electric Theater Supply Company, of Philadelphia, was also noted among the visitors

The Lafayette Goes.

The Lafayette theater, on Pennsylvania avenue, near Thirteenth street, Northwest, is to be dismantled, according to current reports, and to be converted into a store property. This house has been closed for some time and has never been considered as a money-maker.

United Film's New Automobile.

Sidney B. Lust, proprietor of the United Film Service in this territory, is to be seen flying about town in a Hudson touring car. Business must be good. However, the auto is to serve a double purpose, for one of his employees is to use it for emergency purposes in transporting films from the office to the theaters. Mr. Lust is doing everything possible to emphasize service and is constantly putting into operation that which will promote the efficiency of his business.

J. S. Hebrew Visits.

J. S. Hebrew, manager of the Philadelphia office of the V-L-S-E, was a visitor in Washington last week. Mr. Hebrew is slowly recovering from a severe attack of rheumatism and la grippe, but despite this he is right on the job.

Supreme Court Takes Up Sunday Question.

Chillicothe, Ohio.—Ohio exhibitors are awaiting the action of the Supreme Court of Ohio which is expected shortly to hand down a ruling to determine whether motion picture theaters come under the state law prohibiting Sunday "theatrical performances."

Clarence Myers, proprietor of a motion picture house in Chillicothe, was held to have violated the state law by giving Sunday exhibitions. He appealed to the Supreme Court after having lost his case in the Court of Common Pleas of Ross County and the district appellate court. Myers contends motion picture houses do not come under the meaning of the law.

The company, which has an elaborately equipped studio at 717 Superior avenue, has completed four pictures and will commence releasing after April 1.

Flowers in profusion are used in the lobby and on the stage. Mr. Hyman has his 12-piece orchestra seated on the stage, which presents a garden scene, with electrical effects. Mr. Hyman used his showmanship with the picture, "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," last week. Preceding the picture the stage showed a forest scene, dimly lighted. The lights were slowly increased until the scene was brilliant. This action was accompanied by orchestra strains of the song which bears the same name as the picture.

Louisville's Growth

Census of City for New Directory Shows 132,710 Names, an Increase in One Year of Nearly 2,200 Names—City Now Has a Population of Over 300,000 People as Probable Patrons of Its Moving Picture Shows.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

LOUISVILLE. KY.—Moving picture exhibitors of Louisville perused with great interest the latest report of the local directory publishing company which shows that the population of the city is increasing satisfactorily. The newest directory has a total of 132,710 names, including only residents inside of the city's boundary. Louisville uses a multiple of two in estimating its population from directory figures and claims 265,420 residents. The city has a number of large suburbs which are not included in these figures, to say nothing of the big floating population from the other two Falls cities. A conservative estimate of the population is said to be in the neighborhood of 300,000 showing that Louisville should be in position to support the numerous fine theaters which are operated here. The gain compared with last year is slightly under 2,200 names, but a number of new theaters came into existence during the year.

TREND OF LOCAL ADVERTISING.

Managers Depending less on Novelties and Passes Than Before.

Louisville, Ky.—Local moving picture exhibitors have apparently decided that the daily press is the most effective means of calling the public's attention to the plays on the screens. For a time the city was literally papered with passes and various forms of free admission. Novelty forms of advertising have dropped off to some extent during the past few weeks, and the downtown theaters are now using more space in the papers than for some time. Noting many of these big advertisements the stranger would be led to believe that the exhibitors were warring among themselves, whereas they are actually operating in harmony, and the local exhibitors' league is practically a 100 per cent. organization. The new Rex theater, the Strand, Walnut, Alamo, Mary Anderson and Majestic theaters are among the largest advertisers at this time. The Mary Anderson recently used a page in the Herald announcing the first episode of the new big serial, "The Iron Claw," the first showing of which was made on March 8. This serial will be run as an extra feature every Wednesday and Thursday. The first episode was shown with the five reel feature "The Writing on the Wall," a V-L-S-E production, and a comedy.

Second Street Theater Nearly Ready.

Louisville, Ky.—The Second Street Amusement Co., of Louisville, is rapidly getting its new theater at Second and A streets completed. Work is now being pushed on the interior of the theater which when completed will be one of the finest outskirt houses in the South. The front of the building is of white tile and massive cut stone. The walls are of brick. The building will be practically fireproof throughout.

Hilltop Increases Capital.

Louisville, Ky.—The Hilltop Amusement Company, of Louisville, has increased its capital stock from $13,000 to $25,000. The company operates the Hilltop theater in Crescent Hill. Alfred P. Knopf is president of the concern which has been in operation something over a year. Others signing the papers were William Johnson, Allen W. Hudson, Ben O. Ford, and Peter Knopf, Jr., owners of more than two-thirds of the capital stock. The stock is divided into 250 shares of the par value of $100 per share. The company is planning to increase the size of the theater a little later on.

Drops Admission to 10 Cents.

Louisville, Ky.—The Rex theater has reduced night admission prices from fifteen to ten cents in keeping with the prices of the other local theaters. Through a typographical error one of the local newspapers announced that admission prices at the theater would be five cents, but this statement was corrected on the first page of a later edition.

Personal Mention.

Stanley Stoehr, of the Princess theater, Henderson, Ky., which recently burned, has been in Louisville for several days calling on relatives.

Percy Smith, manager of the Louisville office of the Mutual Film Corporation, recently spent several days at Danville, Ky., and other points in the Bluegrass.

N. L. Lefkowitz, a representative of the Standard Film Company, of Cincinnati and Cleveland, returned to the Buckeye state after calling on a number of local exhibitors and talking some special feature material.

While in Louisville, B. M. Vandawalker, special representative of the Indianapolis office of the General Film Co., ran a special performance at the Majestic theater to show the local exhibitors the new Kalem serial "Social Pirates." Mr. Vandawalker spent several days in the Falls Cities.

A recent visit was paid to Louisville by Walter Wessling, of the Cincinnati Pathe Film Exchange. Mr. Wessling called on several of the exhibitors who are running Pathe service in the city.

J. H. Brooks, manager of the Lyric theater, New Albany, Ind., has been very ill for several weeks, and has been operated on. He is reported to be recovering slowly.

Features and Business Notes.

A. C. Farrel, manager of the Louisville office of the Central Film Service Company, has made a number of bookings on the six-reel film "Traffic in Souls," which made a good showing in New York and also on the road. This film was shown at the Masonic theater, of Louisville, several months ago at fifty cents and a dollar. It has been shown at the Star theater, and is booked for showing at the Empire, the Norman, the Victoria, of New Albany, and the Columbia, of Frankfort.

The Majestic theater of Louisville recently played a one-day return engagement of "The Golden Chance," featuring Cleo Ridgely and Wallace Reid. This picture made a big hit when shown at the theater in February and many requests were received for its return.

The Walnut theater, while showing a swift-moving Keystone Comedy, "Cinders of Love," featuring Chester Conklin and Slim Summerville, advertised that all Louisville policemen and firemen who attended in uniform would be admitted free of charge on Wednesday. This picture shows the keen rivalry between the Keystone cops and the fire department. Lillian Gish, in "Daphne and the Pirate," was on the screen at the same time.

SHOWS IN CHATTANOOGA.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., 1404 Stark Bldg., Louisville Correspondent of M. P. W.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN.—This and other Tennessee cities have experienced the worst weather during the past two or three weeks that has been known for years. Chattanooga recently had seven and one-half inches of snow the heaviest fall registered in some thirty years. Heavy snows were also encountered at Dresden, Knoxville, Jackson, Manchester, White Bluff, Clarksville and many other cities. Even Decatur, Ala., was crippled by sleet. Street car lines in many cases were tied up, and snow plows came out of the dust and cobwebs to clear paths for traffic. The Bijou theater, of Chattanooga, Tenn., reported excellent crowds at the showing of "The Birth of a Nation," in spite of the inclemency of the weather, and the fact that the film was playing a return engagement.

MORRISTOWN THEATER BURNS.

Morristown, Tenn.—Read's theater, of Morristown, Tenn., one of the landmarks of the city was recently destroyed by fire. The fire started at 5.30 o'clock in the morning, and the entire interior and properties were burned, leaving only the rear walls and smoke stack standing. These were later dynamited for fear they would fall. The fire originated in the boiler room and spread to the property room directly above before it was discovered. The loss will exceed $25,000 and is partly covered.

TO ENLARGE ITS THEATERS.

In connection with extensive improvements which are planned by the Signal Mountain Amusement Co., of Chattanooga, it is understood that the company will remodel its string of theaters which when completed will be among the best in the state.

Crescent to Be Imperial.

The Crescent theater, 812 Market street, may be entended back the full length of the block, giving it a seating capacity of 900. It is to have a balcony seating 200 people and its name will be changed to the Imperial. Work on the Crescent will be started at an early date.

The Alcazar.

It is planned to increase the seating capacity of all of the theaters in order that the company may play the highest class films at standard prices. The Alcazar, which now seats 700 people may be enlarged to seat 1,600.

Picto to Be Alhambra.

It is planned to increase the seating capacity of the Picto to 700. The name of this theater will be changed to the Alhambra, and when the improvements are completed the old Alhambra will be closed.

The Colonial.

The seating capacity of the Colonial will be enlarged to 800. A general movement has been started in many parts of the country to increase seating capacities as with a small seating capacity moving picture theaters are unable to obtain revenues large enough to pay for the best grades of first run pictures.

WANT SKILLED OPERATORS.

Nashville, Tenn.—At a recent meeting of the Nashville, Tenn., Trades & Labor Council, a resolution was adopted calling upon the City Commissioners to reconstitute the present motion picture operator's examination board, so that only competent operators may be used in the Nashville theaters. It was charged in the resolution that a recent fire in one of the Nashville theaters was due to the incompetence of the operator. The legislative committee of the organization was instructed to appear before the City Commission and request that a competent board of examiners be appointed and that the owners of moving picture theaters be compelled to employ competent men in the operating rooms.

NO PASSES TO THE QUEEN.

Knoxville, Tenn.—Following a rumor that the Queen theater, of Knoxville, was cutting prices in connection with a special offer recently made for dollar day, the company came out with the statement that the Queen is not cutting prices. It further stated that the management had a better business policy than to cut prices one penny.

ST. LOUIS NEWS LETTER.

By A. H. Giebler, St. Louis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Return of "Birth of a Nation."

ST. LOUIS, MO.—"The Birth of a Nation" opened at the Olympic theater on March 5th for a four weeks run, and Manager Sanford says that in spite of the fact that the pictures played in St. Louis for one hundred and fifty nights during the previous engagement, the box office is showing almost exactly the same receipts as the opening days of the film on its original run. The Symphony orchestra that was used in Chicago came here with the picture, and much of the film that was cut out on the previous showing on account of the agitation against the picture then, have been restored. Scenes of the Tuskegee Institute, showing the rise and development of the Negro race since the time of the reconstruction days, are now being shown with the film.

A TALK BY N. H. SPITZER.

N. H. Spitzer, of the Blue Bird Company recently gave an interesting talk to Kansas City exhibitors on the important topic of Good Will in the business of managing picture theaters. Among his special topics he had this to say about courtesy and attention:

N. H. Spitzer.

"Courtesy and Attention—How many of you have given these two strong business builders the thought they are entitled to. Have you ever thought how little they cost you and how much they will return? I don't care how strong your program may be, if you don't make your patrons feel at home your good judgment of pictures is wasted. Let your cashier wear a smile; let your door man know the value of a nod; and let your usher finish this off with his little attention, and your patrons cannot feel anything but welcome, they are bound to make comparisons with other houses where this is conspicuously lacking.

"The Good Will of an audience has helped even a poor picture many a time."

Minusa Branches Out.

E. R. Anderson, of the Minusa Cine Products Company, is very enthusiastic over the business his company has done during the past year. Mr. Anderson says the Minusa Company is negotiating for a large building to be used for a factory, which will increase their capacity for the making of screens fourfold. "Business looks exceedingly good for the coming spring and summer season," said Mr. Anderson. "Exhibitors over the country are getting ready for the open air business. We have already filled several orders for screens for out of doors theaters. Everything goes to show great promise for warm weather doings." Mr. Anderson also reports the sale of a great many screens to schools, lodges, clubs, and organizations of that kind.

Sam Lears Stocks Up.

Same Lears, of the Lears Theater Supply Company, says business never looked so good. Exhibitors are making more money than they did a year ago. and there are four deals now on for theaters to be opened in the down town district. "The airdome business is taking an early start," said Mr. Lears. "Exhibitors came into my office two weeks ago with snow on their hats and left orders for open air equipment. They may be early, but it is the early bird that gets the worm in the show business, and things look so promising that we have put in a stock of fifty new machines to fill orders with."

Cincinnati Cenors

Not Satisfied With Decisions of Ohio State Board of Censors, Local Reformer Claims Municipality Has Right to Extend and Enlarge Upon Board's Decisions —Thinks Board's Orders Are Disregarded.

By Kenneth C. Crain, 610 Nat. Bank Bldg., Cincinnati Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CINCINNATI, OHIO.—This city seems in again for local censorship agitation. The Ohio Board of Censors is none too liberal; but no board could satisfy everyone and we ought to go back to a committee of the whole nation. There are some who think that they alone are able to judge righteously. Certain of these gentlemen appeared on March 7 before the mayor and declared that in certain cases eliminations ordered by the censors had not been made, though shown with the board's mark of approval.

Rev. John F. Herget, chief of the local morals censors, criticized the State Board for not enforcing its orders more effectually, and urged that the authorities give more attention to the productions shown in the photoplay theaters. Dr. Herget also claimed that while city authorities cannot veto an act of the State censors, they can extend or enlarge an order, and even suppress a film, although it is not apparent how a conflict could be avoided if the city suppressed a film approved by the board.

Specifically, the suppression of two films shown in the city during the week of March 5 was asked by the morals squad, "as a warning." The city authorities did not take the action asked, but promised to consider the matter and to act if circumstances seemed to warrant. It will be recalled that some months ago the former city administration refused to permit the exhibition of a film which had been approved by the State board, on the ground that further eliminations should be made; and while in that case the fight ended in practically a draw, it is possible that the whole issue will be opened up again if an element claiming to represent the clergy insist upon it.

PICTURES IN CHURCHES.

Harm of Them Pointed Out—Churches Can't Compete With Regular Show.

Cincinnati, Ohio.—Exhibitors in Cincinnati noted with mixed emotions a report of remarks attributed to John L. Alexander, of Chicago, first general secretary of the Boy Scouts and a prominent Sunday-School official, before a meeting of local ministers and Sunday-School superintendents, relative to moving pictures. Mr. Alexander declared that the church cannot expect to compete with the moving picture theater, and that its efforts to do so are generally unsuccessful because it does not as a rule have pictures of a grade equal to those shown in the theaters. Incidentally, he indicated an opinion that even if this were not the case," pictures should not be used as a "bait' to get young people to go to church.

Exhibitors in many localities have noticed with some alarm the growing tendency of churches to show pictures more or less regularly, although accepting this as a deserved tribute to the popularity of pictures, and as a direct indorsement of their merit as an instructive and harmless form of entertainment. If Mr. Alexander's views are generally followed here, the result will be the removal of some competition caused by churches. As an astute youngster pointed out in this connection, he can go to a church picture-show, take two girls, and satisfy his conscience by dropping a nickel into the contribution plate to pay for the evening's entertainment.

SUNDAY LAW VALID.

Chillicothe, Ohio.—A decision which may prove to be of more than passing interest and importance to exhibitors all over Ohio has been handed down at Chillicothe, O., by the Court of Appeals, to the effect that a statute providing that theaters may not open on Sunday is valid, and applies to moving picture theaters. The statute is an old one, which has apparently not hitherto been invoked, as it has generally been considered as virtually obsolete and in the "blue-law" class. Myers Bros., of Chillicothe, carried the case to the Court of Appeals. If the decision is generally followed it will obviously give the element favoring Sunday closing of picture shows a powerful weapon.

CHANGES IN V-L-S-E OFFICE.

Cincinnati, Ohio.—A reorganization of the V-L-S-E sales force in Cincinnati has been accomplished by C. E. Holah, the new manager. J. G. Lytle has been placed in charge of the Indianapolis territory under Mr. Holah; F. B. Chase, formerly branch manager of the Western Union, has been placed in the Ohio and West Virginia territory, and Tom Neer remains in charge of Kentucky. Mr. Elliot also continues as assistant manager. Mr. Holah has charge of the booking of "The Battle Cry of Peace" in Cincinnati, and intimates that a long run at Music Hall may be announced later.

MANAGER HOLAH PLEASED.

Cincinnati, O.—Manager C. E. Holah, now in charge of the V-L-S-E offices in Cincinnati, after some months with the Pathe exchange, received as many messages of congratulation as a popular debutante on taking hold of the "Big Four" offices, not to mention the flowers. Floral tributes were thick in the office on the day of his assumption of authority and the new manager was given a first-class send-off.

Dayton's Olympic Reopens.

Dayton, Ohio.—The Olympic theater, of Dayton, has reopened its doors after being closed for six months. R. E. Alexander, for years owner of the old Lafayette theater, acquired the house some time ago, and has spent a considerable amount in remodeling it. A gold fiber screen, a new indirect lighting system, a Wurlitzer organ, and complete redecorating, comprise some of the improvements which have made the house thoroughly up to date and more attractive than ever before. A feature a day will be shown.

"Peace" Film in Cincinnati.

Cincinnati, Ohio.—The first public exhibition of "The Battle Cry of Peace" in Cincinnati, aside from that held a few weeks back under the auspices of the Shriners at Music Hall, took place on Sunday, March 5, at the Lyric theater, that house having an open date on that occasion. Packed houses prevailed during the entire day, although the prices were the highest which have yet been charged for moving pictures in Cincinnati, ranging from 50 cents down to 25; and the enthusiasm with which the picture was received gave fresh evidence of its power and of the feeling in favor of the popular issue of preparedness.

Muchmore, one of his sales representatives, went down to Shelbyville, Ind., last week, to attend the opening of the Strand theater, with Triangle service. W. C. Atlanta to Have Another Big Theater Wiseberg Building Leased—W. T. Murray, Geo. Pheles and Sig Samuels to Build 1,000-Seat Theater—$230,000 Involved.

By A. M. Beatty, Atlanta Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ATLANTA, GA.—W. T. Murray, George Pheles and Sig Samuels have leased the Wiseberg building, 41-43 Peachtree street for ten years at $18,000 a year. They have already started the work of converting this building into one of the largest and finest motion picture theatres in the south. The transaction involves $230,000. The ten-year lease calls for $180,000. The theater will cost $50,000, and will seat 1,000 people. It will be a new building, as nothing but the side walls of the Wiseberg structure will be used.

Work began Wednesday, March 1, and the lessees plan to open the doors to the public about June 1. The new theater will be in the very heart of Atlanta's busiest center, only three doors north of Edgewood avenue at Five Points.

The theater is designed solely for a motion picture house. There will be no vaudeville.

The front will be constructed with white terra cotta and green Spanish tile. The style of architecture will be that of the Spanish Renaissance.

The entrance lobby is to be twenty-three feet wide, twelve feet deep and twenty feet high. A new feature will be th lounge room between the main floor and the balcony. This will be a large room, comfortably fitted. On one side there will be a dressing room for ladies, on the other the offices of the manager of the theater.

Another feature will be the ventilating, heating and cooling system—a system which will maintain the same temperature winter and summer and which will keep currents of fresh air circulating at all times. Intake fans on a level with the main and balcony floors will draw in fresh outer air and will force this over coiled pipes. The fresh air in winter thus heated by hot water and in summer cooled by ammonia will rise from the floors through many openings beneath the floors. An exhaust fan in the ceiling will draw out this air, thus keeping up a constant circulation.

W. T. Murray, lessee, is the manager of the Alamo No. 2 theater, and is a theatrical man of very wide and successful experience. He will be the general manager under whose supervision the new theater will be operated.

B. Lee Smith to Run Strand.

B. Lee Smith, former Atlanta newspaper man and for some time past a well known motion picture exhibitor, has returned to Atlanta to take charge of the Strand theater.

After an illness of over a month, Ralph De Bruler, former manager of the Strand theater, is out again. Mr. De Bruler resigned the management of the Strand to take charge of the new Piedmont theater at Forsyth and Luckie streets just before he fell ill.

Mr. De Bruler is planning big things for the Piedmont, which will be open about March 15th.

Colonial, a New Theater

Detroit Is to Have a Big New Picture House to Seat Over 2,000 Persons—Clare and Graham Hoffman Take Long Lease on Site at Woodward and Sibley—Work Will Start About May 1 and House Should Be Ready by October 1.

By Jacob Smith, 503 Free Press Building, Detroit, Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DETROIT, MICH.—Hoffman Bros., Clare and Graham Hoffman, have taken a long lease on the northwest corner of Woodward and Sibley streets, and will erect on the property a huge theater seating over 2,000 to be devoted to motion pictures. At present the property is occupied by a church and some billboard signs. It is planned to capitalize at $200,000 and put a small amount of stock on the market.

The property has ninety feet on Woodward and 160 feet on Sibley street, and is six blocks north of Grand Circus Park. It is convenient to the Woodward, Brush and Fourteenth carlines. The building itself will be three stories high and will be Colonial in style; in fact, the name of the theater will be Colonial. It will be of red brick and terra cotta and will have Colonial trimmings. Work will start about the first of May and the building and theater completed about the first of October. C. Howard Crane, who designed the Majestic and the John H. Kunsky theaters, has been selected to design this new playhouse. There will be four stores on the first floor, with offices and lofts on the two upper floors, and from these it is expected to realize a sufficient amount to pay all the ground rental, so that there will be absolutely no rental required for the theater. The total rental paid for the lease of the property for the term of years is said to run over a million dollars.

Hoffman Bros. also control the new Hippodrome theater in course of erection in Saginaw, expect that playhouse to be operating by May 1st.

They started in the theatrical business about two years ago when they opened the Palace theater on Monroe avenue, which has proven a big success.

STYLE SHOWS POPULAR.

Detroit, Mich.—The Style Show at the Alhambra, the week of March 6th was a success. The week of March 13th it was given at the Washington theater. Ten good looking models cavorted on the Alhambra stage with the very latest spring gowns and suits, hats and shoes, furnished by local merchants. The spotlight was used on the different models. The regular stage setting was used around stairs that took up the entire stage. Most of the models would start at the top and walk slowly down the stairs and make their exit at the bottom of the stairs, which would be the regular first entrance. The music was appropriate. Each time a model appeared in a new garment there was applause, showing that the audience was highly interested and attentive. Mr. Kunsky, of the Alhambra theater, was well satisfied with the Show and so were the merchants who co-operated with him. The Style Show is sure to be repeated each year.

Film Folk at Mardi Gras

New Orleans Mardi Gras Attracts Many Visitors—Prominent Film Men and Their Families at Hand to Enjoy Festivities—Manager Al G. Shear Gives a Dinner Dance—Notable Film Men in Town.

By G. M. Cheney, New Orleans Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—Mr. Al. G. Shear was host at a Mardi Gras dinner dance given at the Hotel Grunewald. The guests were Mr. and Mrs. Herman Fichtenberg, Mr. and Mrs. William H. Gueringer, Mrs. Sally and Miss Edna Gueringer, Mr. and Mrs. Gaston Dureau, Nat Sobel, Miss Bertha Sobel, Same Dembow, Jr., William Oldknow, Howard Gale, F. W. Swett, Mr. and Mrs. Ned E. Depinet, of Dallas; E. V. Richards, of Shreveport; Maurice F. Barr and Mr. and Mrs. Louis H. Andrews.

R. M. Watkins, president and general manager of the Southern Metro corporation, with headquarters in Chattanooga, was in New Orleans. He came for a combined social and business visit to Karl A. Bugbee, local manager of Metro. Mr. Watkins is fresh from a visit to New York, where he attended the meetings of the board of directors of the Metro Pictures Corporation. This is the first Carnival that Mr. Watkins has seen in New Orleans, and he expressed himself as being delighted with his stay here.

George L. Cox, of Chicago, director of the Child's Welfare Film, with Will Buckley and eight players, arrived Sunday, and helped to swell the number of film visitors of New Orleans' famed Mardi Gras. Mr. Cox, however, is on business. He came here to get a few finishing scenes for the film "Uncle Sam's Babies," or "The Future Generation," which is to be released April 1.

With Mr. Cox are Mr. Buckley, Norman Harris, Elizabeth Wallace, Helen Thornton, James Powell, Fred D. Harey, Francis Demerest, Harvey Tipton and George Barker. Mr. Cox has conferred with Dr. W. W. Butterworth, president of the New Orleans Child Welfare Commission, and it is probable that New Orleans will furnish Mr. Cox some excellent scenes for the forthcoming production. The company will go from here to Rock Hill, N. C., and then to Havana, Cuba.

On the same train with Mr. Cox was William J. Davis, owner of the Illinois theater, Chicago, and William Pinkerton, head of the detective agency in Chicago. Mr. Pinkerton arranged for quarters for the venerable exhibitor at the Hotel Grunewald, and had quite a time securing them, due to the fact that even cots at the hostelry were worth five dollars a night.

NEW ORLEANS EXCHANGEMEN.

All Got Their Pictures in the Times-Picayune.

New Orleans.—Every exchange manager in New Orleans broke into print recently. The occasion was a special moving picture page of the New Orleans Times-Picayune, and on a half page was reproduced the picture of the eleven local managers, as follows: K. A. Bugbee (Metro), R. S. Verleye (Paramount), Ross Hardenbrook (World), Al. G. Shear (Consolidated, Universal), Ernst Boehringer (Triangle), R. S. Barron (Fox), Raoul Junet (Pathe), Howard Gale (Kleine-Edison), H. G. Morrow (General), and R. King Evans (V-L-S-E).

In his chatter about them the Times-Picayune man said: "To hear them talk about each other when a business deal is on, one would conclude that they are as fine a set of pirates as ever scuttled a ship, but to meet them personally, they are each and every one of them gentlemanly, considerate and obliging."

Will Buy State's Rights.

New Orleans.—Jac. Miller, who recently opened up his new Empire theater at 1010 Canal street, says that he is in the market for state rights films, and that he invites correspondence from any individuals or firms having film of this character.

Triangle Popular Here.

New Orleans.—That the Triangle program will be a permanent institution in New Orleans is shown by the fact that all local attendance records are being broken at the Triangle theater. Last week it was thought that "Betty of Greystone" had broken all attendance records, when Manager Ernst Boehringer counted 7,122 paid admissions on a single day, but this mark was shadowed, and shadowed for some time to come, on March 2, with Billy Burke in "Peggy." More than 10,000 persons witnessed the performance on that day, and several more thousands could not get standing room.

It was necessary on that night to give an extra performance of "Peggy." The management announced that on the following Monday and Tuesday midnight shows will be run to accommodate Triangle pictures. The Triangle is making local history, and well they might, for the program, not the least of which is the Keystone comedies, has taken tremendously with the New Orleans public.

Picture Show Vandals.

"Picture vandals," as they are called by the police, entered the new Empire theater, 1008 Canal street, recently opened up by Jac. Miller, through a rear door, drove nails in the motors of the exhaust fans, cut the coils of all electrical connections, and practically wrecked the electrical fixtures in the theater. Ralph White, chief electrician, reported the matter to the police, but no clue to the miscreants could be obtained. Mr. Miller is at a loss to explain the occurrence. He at once had the damage repaired, and opened as usual the same evening.

Southern Film Service Grows.

The Southern Film Service Company, in removing to 315 Carondelet street on March 1, announced an important extension of its business to the New Orleans correspondent of MOVING PICTURE WORLD. E. A. Segrave, a brother of H. A. Segrave, the New Orleans manager, will open up what will be the main office of the company in Chicago, within 45 or 60 days. H. A. Seagrave declared that the company will gradually branch out until the South is dotted with exchanges or branch offices. Mr. Seagrave has lately been handling "Guarding Old Glory" and other films with marked success.

Southeastern Theaters Corporation.

The Southeastern Theater Corporation, Inc., has been chartered at Baton Rouge, with a capital stock of $5,000, which may be increased, at the discretion of the board of directors, to $25,000. The objects are to operate moving picture theaters, skating rinks and film exchanges.

Officers elected on February 21 are as follows: Joseph L. Brunet, president; Marcus Edwin, vice-president, and Robert J. Reynolds, secretary-treasurer.

Savoy Theater Company.

Birmingham, Ala.—The Savoy Theater Company, Inc., has been chartered at Birmingham, Ala., by O. J. Greener, W. H. Tomppert and Mrs. Lola Tomppert. The authorized capital, $2,000, is all paid in.

Among Local Film Men.

New Orleans.—Al. G. Shear, manager of the Consolidated Film Supply Company, took first prize for the best decorated auto in the recent parade held in honor of G. Putnam Stevens, Imperial Potentate of the Mystic Shrine, a visitor in New Orleans.

Woodville, Miss.—Sam Rosso, president of the Woodville Bottling Works, Woodville, Miss., opened a new house in that town on March 7. He has ordered in New Orleans an Edison and a Simplex projector.

New Orleans.—Maurice F. Barr, Blue Bird manager, has returned from a trip to lower Mississippi. He was out seventeen days and turned in fifteen Blue Bird contracts.

Pineville, La.—It is a noticeable fact that many state institutions are turning their attention to the use of motion pictures for the entertainment and instruction of the inmates. This week a representative of the Louisiana State Hospital at Pineville, La., visited Exchange Row and purchased a Power's 6-B projector for use in the institution.

The house has a seating capacity of 850 and music planned for the opening, played by the new pipe organ, costing $5,000, was well received. The heating and ventilating system for the new theater is the most complete that could be installed and cost $3,000.

MINNEAPOLIS NEWS LETTER.

By Perry S. Williams, Minneapolis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Real Cowboy and Screen Kind.

ST. PAUL, MINN.—Wallace Coburn, the "cowboy poet," is in St. Paul forming a motion picture concern for the purpose of producing western films and has the aid of L. W. Hill, president of the Great Northern railroad, in floating his company. He has received a letter from C. M. Russell, of Montana, who is known as the famous painter of cowboy and western life generally. Mr. Russell read of Mr. Coburn's company and wrote the letter about the cowboy types of the plains and the screen as he thinks they are. His letter follows in part:

"This kind I don't know; he's not down in natural history. (Thus he lets down the picture cowboy.) This species is almost extinct," he continues in dealing with the real cowpuncher, "He knew horses and could tell you what a cow said to her calf. The floor of his home was the prairie, his roof the sky, which often leaked. His gift of God was health and he generally cashed in with his boots on. He was only part human, but I've always liked animals."

New Theater in St. Paul.

That another motion picture theater was about to be added to the list already running in the Twin Cities became known when a permit for the construction of a playhouse, to cost $12,000, was granted to Gust Marks in St. Paul. The new theater will be located on Dale street between Lawson and Hatch streets.

St. Paul, Minn.—Beverly B. Dobbs, of Nome, Alaska, is showing films of the north with his lecture, "A' Top of the World in Motion" in the schools here. The programs are free and large attendances are the rule at every showing.

S. R. Clingan, formerly handler of the Famous Players' products in Northern Michigan and Wisconsin, has been made manager of the Minneapolis office of the Zenith Feature Film Company. He succeeds Marcus Ross, who goes to the Twin City Film Company.

Fort Worth Sunday Vote

Opposition to Sabbath Shows in City Gets Out Injunction and Delays Vote for Ten Days—Exhibitors Are Busy Consolidating Recent Gains and Give Free Shows on Sunday—Labor Unions Help—In Other Cities.

By S. A. M. Harrison, 618 Comal St., Dallas Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

FORT WORTH, TEX.—The opposition to Sunday opening of theaters in Fort Worth pulled off a coup that will delay a decision for a little while. A temporary injunction was requested against the city commission to prohibit the holding of the election scheduled for March 8. As the law requires ten days' notice to parties in such a suit, the election will not be held on the date planned, the ten days carrying over that date.

In the meantime the exhibitors are doing everything possible to augment the sentiment in their favor. Publicity is given to every argument in favor of Sunday exhibitions, particular stress being laid on the constitutional rights of freedom of action and the necessity for clean Sunday amusements to counteract the evil amusements that exist.

On Sunday, March 5, practically all the houses were open, invitations being exhibited at the doors in the name of union labor. No donation boxes were kept and no collection taken, as these have been held in the courts to be an evasion of the law.

One manager said that fully 35,000 people had visited the houses between 2 and 10 o'clock in the evening. When the doors were first thrown open enough people were waiting to fill each house.

The exhibitors are receiving support from every source. Besides the moral support given by union labor as a whole, the moving picture operators tendered their services for the free exhibitions, and the exchanges have furnished the necessary pictures without charge.

On the same date Waco had her first Sunday exhibitions since the matter was voted on some time ago. Everything was quiet and the houses did a good business.

Corpus Christi may swing into line soon. Recently the Sunday lid has been on so tight in that town that not even a hiss of escaping steam could be heard and it is expected the boiler will explode, and in the reaction some reasonable regulations made. Even Mr. Joy Rider had to provide his gasoline on Saturday or leave "Little Henry" and the rest of them in the garages on Sunday, and nothing stronger than a drink of water could be bought—not even soda water.

Changes in Fox Forces.

Dallas, Texas.—Several changes have been made in the office personnel of the Fox Texas company. Allan Motter and David Motter have resigned. Miss Florence Cox has been promoted from stenographer to booking clerk and Miss Doris Burner is now bookkeeper.

L. D. Willis, assistant general manager, was in Dallas during the latter part of February, conferring with Mr. Byrd on various business matters. During the first part of March, H. S. McLeod, traveling auditor, made his formal inspection of the books and accounts.

General Has New Traveler.

Dallas, Texas.—Manager D. Prince of the General Dallas office, has "signed" a new salesman in H. T. Peebles, who recently resigned from the Mutual in San Antonio. Mr. Peebles was in Dallas a few days and left March 6 for his first trip in the new affiliation. Mr. Peebles has been in the film business in Texas for a number of years and is well known in the territory as a "live one."

Dallas Exchange Doings.

Manager W. M. Byrd, of the Fox office, made a trip to south and east Texas the latter part of February and reports conditions encouraging. He says Will Horwitz, who was recently added to the Fox selling force, has made a "clean-up."

Ned Depinet, of the Universal, made a trip to Houston and returned with an optimistic smile on his face.

United States rights to the lately completed Jack London production of South Sea Island pictures have been bought by A. R. Allen and associates of Dallas. State rights will probably be sub-vended.

Publicity Man in Dallas.

H. C. Watts, of the Pathe publicity department, was in Dallas the first of March on special business in connection with "The Iron Claw." Mr. Underwood says Mr. Watts was some hustler, and that between him and the regular force they are now using five prints of that serial in this territory.

Xydias Handling "Peace" Film.

A. J. Xydias was in Dallas about the first, talking of the nice business he is doing with the "Battle Cry of Peace," which he is taking over Texas on a percentage basis. Mr. Xydias has not given up his Houston house, nor has he ceased making things interesting for the censors of that town. He is working the "Peace" picture as a new venture, starting out more in jest, but now being in earnest as the results have been so good.

"X." got mixed up in an automobile accident in Juarez, Mexico, recently which necessitated his incarceration in a jail in that city for a few hours until the results of the accident were declared nil. But while in durance vile "X." spent his time wondering, in case he were lined up against a wall in front of a bunch of soldiers, who would make the Houston censors earn their pay.

Childress, Texas.—The Childress Amusement Company, Childress, Texas, has purchased from Barnett a 1916 Motiograph and are figuring on another. R. L. Bryant, of Roxton, Texas, also has a new Motiograph, from the same agent.

Dallas, Texas.—E. E. Belcia, formerly of Jacksonville, Texas, is in Dallas, dickering on new affiliations. Mrs. Belcia and Mr. Peebles of the General each have new sons, the first in each case and both born about the same time. The four parents got together the first Sunday in March to compare. This correspondent has a little respect for his life and so will not express any opinion. Of course, the opinions of the two "daddies" are unshaken.

Oklahoma, Okla.—Jack Lewis, formerly representative of J. D. Wheelan Film Company at Oklahoma, has resigned to accept the agency of the United Film Service for the same territory.

Dallas, Texas.—E. W. Copley, one of the pioneers of the exhibition field, has leased the building at 1601 Elm street, Dallas, for the purpose of erecting a new house. This will be in the heart of the "white lights," next door to the Old Mill theater.

NO OMAHA INJUNCTION.

Exhibitors Denied by Court—Must Keep Out Children While Epidemic Lasts.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

OMAHA, NEB.—The order by the department of health that children under twelve years of age should be debarred from moving picture shows during a scarlet fever epidemic is within the powers conferred by the statute, Judge Leslie held. Accordingly, he denied an injunction sought by twenty-one Omaha exhibitors to restrain the board from enforcing the order which was hurting business. Health Commissioner Connell expected to remove the ban about March 15, as the disease is abating.

Max Selicow, an exhibitor who filed a petition, alleging he was deprived of his liberty by Chief of Police Dunn in enforcing the order, was allowed a writ of habeas corpus.

MAX WEISFELDT PROMOTED.

Omaha, Neb.—Max J. Weisfeldt, who has been assistant manager for the Mutual Film Corporation at Minneapolis, has been made manager of the exchange at Omaha, succeeding J. H. Mergener, who resigned some time ago.

Weisfeldt conducted a moving picture theater at Plymouth, Wis., for seven years, being a young pioneer of the photoplay industry in the Badger state. Later he was with Mort Singer, the vaudeville man, in Chicago. A couple of years ago he took a road position with the Mutual at Minneapolis, resigned to open a supply house, but sold out and went back to the Mutual. An unusually bright spot in his record soon after his return is noticeable. He handled "The Diamond from the Sky" and is credited with getting this serial into 92 per cent of the houses in his territory.

AGAINST SPITTING.

Omaha, Neb.—E. A. Van Husan, manager of the Laemmle Film Company, aided an anti-spit movement in the city by having "Anti-Spit" notices run in practically all the theaters in the city. He also contributed $10 to the campaign. Mrs. Van Husan was nauseated by the expectorations of a man on a street car and was ill two days.

Transportation Hearing

San Francisco Film Board of Trade and State Railway Commission Put Off Hearing on Film Carrying on Passenger Trains and Boats—Death of Lieutenant-Governor Eshleman, the Cause—Rule Against Films Suspended.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North St., Berkeley Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—The proceedings brought by the Film Exchange Board of Trade of San Francisco against the Southern Pacific Company and other transportation concerns in California, relating to the carrying of films on passenger trains and boats, were to have been heard before the State Railroad Commission on the morning of Feb. 28th, and on the appointed hour the leading film exchange men of the city were present, with their attorney, Maurice L. Asher, but the hearing was halted by the sudden death of John M. Eshleman, lieutenant-governor of the state and the first president of the commission.

Commissioner Devlin moved an adjournment out of respect to Mr. Eshleman and the hearing was postponed until a date to be set later. Attorney Asher in a few brief words, set forth the extreme care that was being exercised by film exchanges and by exhibitors in handling films and asked that the rule of the railroads that film could not be carried on trains and boats after the first of March be suspended until the Railroad Commission had acted upon the complaint that had been prepared. This request was readily granted by George D. Squires, representing the Southern Pacific Railroad.

"THE SPOILERS" RETURNS.

The great Selig production, "The Spoilers," was shown in its new form at the Portola theater during the first week in March and its former successes were duplicated. During the entire engagement full houses were the rule at every performance and during the evening hours the line of ticket holders frequently extended in to the street. This showing is a remarkable one when it is considered that "The Spoilers" has already been shown for four full weeks at this house, as well as for one week at the Gaiety near by, not to mention dozens of theatres in the outlying districts.

Blanche Sweet Week at Imperial Theater.

For the first time since the management of the Imperial theater decided upon two changes of program a week instead of one, has one star held sway for an entire week at this popular house. During the first week in March "The Ragamuffin" and "The Blacklist," both featuring Blanche Sweet, were presented and the public took kindly to the innovation. These productions are to be followed by Mary Pickford in "Poor Little Peppina," and the recently established policy will be set aside to permit of a full week's run.

Leon Netter Off for New York.

Leon Netter, formerly manager of the All-Star Feature Distributors, Inc., has left for New York, this being his first trip to that city. Before leaving San Francisco he was made the recipient of a handsome gold watch from friends in the local film trade and left with the best wishes of a host of friends ringing in his ears.

Progress on New Houses.

Work has been commenced on the Strand theater, to be erected at Ellis and Mason streets, and construction work is well under way on the new theater in the hotel district on Geary street, just above Powell. The announcement is made that the Rialto theater, on the site of the old American on Market street, will be opened early in April, when improvements costing in excess of $70,000 will have been completed. All of these will be devoted to the showing of moving pictures.

Serials Please Pantages Patrons.

The Pathe serial, "The Red Circle," has pleased the patrons of Pantages theater so well, and has proved to be such a drawing attraction that the management of this circuit has booked "The Iron Claw." This serial will be started at the San Francisco house on March 19th, and will be shown one week later at Oakland. It has also been booked at Spokane, Portland and Seattle, where the Pantages Circuit conducts vaudeville houses.

Pictures at Legitimate Houses.

The Columbia theater, the stronghold of the legitimate stage in San Francisco, was given over recently to a week of moving pictures, the Creatonia Film Corporation having secured the house for the presentation of two feature productions, "Mme. Sarah Bernhardt at Home," and the "Princess of India." During the same week the Cort theater was also given over to moving pictures, the attraction being Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Castle in the "Whirl of Life."

Theater Changes Hands.

The Sunset theater, 630 Irving street, conducted for some time by Stanley & Malm, has been purchased by the Bodin Amusement Company, of which J. R. Bodin is manager. The former proprietors will remain with the new management for a short time and are considering the proposition of opening a vaudeville house in the Sunset district later on. Mr. Bodin is an experienced business man and during the recent Exposition had charge of one of the large concessions.

Colored Films Cause Suit.

A suit has been filed in the United States District Court against Herbert Payne, president of the California Motion Picture Corporation, by James S. Rear, a promoter of Vancouver, it being alleged that a contract to promote the manufacture of colored pictures has been violated. According to the complaint a contract was entered into between Rear and Payne, whereby the latter was to form a company for the exploitation of a color photography process invented by Charles F. Jones, of San Francisco. It is alleged that this contract was not fulfilled.

Sig Grauman, manager of the Empress theater, and president of the Screen Club of San Francisco, has returned from a trip to Los Angeles and San Diego.

G. A. Metcalfe, who recently made a trip to Seattle, Wash., to open a branch supply house, secured a good location at 1210 Fourth avenue.

Mike Zar, with the Turner & Dahnken Circuit, went to Watsonville recently to take charge of the T. & D. theater there, pending the arrival of a permanent manager. The outfit of the Lyric recently purchased by this circuit has been shipped to San Francisco.

On the Open Market

Exhibitors Discuss This Question of Growing Importance—Some Portland Exhibitors Favor Getting Away from Long Term Contracts—Out-of-Town Men Have Not Considered Question.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

PORTLAND OREGON.—The preference of exhibitors for buying films on the open market if that market becomes available, has been discussed by exhibitors in this city and diverse opinions have been given. Managers getting their service under contract have not been inclined to state their views on the subject, but the tendency seems to be to get away from long term contracts. One prominent exhibitor stated that he looked toward the increasing number of good films on the open market with much favor and expected to see a time when all good features could be got from this source. Another downtown exhibitor was of the opinion that the open market would have a tendency to put the selling of feature films on an auction block basis and for this reason did not favor the trend toward the open market.

Road men returning from the far corners of Oregon, Washington and Idaho, stated that exhibitors throughout their territory contract for features as formerly, usually four or more at a time, and that the open market has few advocates outside of Portland.

AN ARTISTIC EXHIBITOR.

Portland, Ore.—E. J. Myrick, manager of Jensen & Von Herberg's Columbia theater, Portland, has made that theater a house of surprises. Mr. Myrick inaugurated afternoon tea service at the Columbia, he replaced the mere men ushers with pretty red-haired girls, and when the girls persisted in laughing at Triangle Keystones, he substituted more matured and staid maidens garbed in natty uniforms of his own design; from his lamp house he throws a firelight glow upon the screen when a picture not tinted for firelight shows an active fireplace; his St. Valentine's Day audiences were greeted by a pretty doll seated on an electrically lighted moon swung across the stage during intermissions and he arranged a patriotic surprise for Washington's Birthday. The Columbia is the Triangle house in Portland.

E. J. Myrick.

T. M. A.'s DANCE.

The Portland Lodge of T. M. A., of which many of the local film fraternity are members, gave its annual ball on February 29. As the dance started at 11.30 and continued well into the morning, the city administration suspended the 12 o'clock closing dance ordinance during the event. Of the film men on the committee were Louis B. Christ, of the Pickford and Al Sather, of the Ideal.

SOL BAUM JOINS BLUE BIRD.

Portland, Ore.—Sol Baum, formerly manager of the People's theater, Portland, and later exploiting feature productions with Orton E. Goodwin, has been appointed manager of the Portland Blue Bird office to replace F. S. Peachy who has returned to San Francisco. Mr. Baum spent a week on the road lining up his territory before taking active charge of the office.

District Manager Visits.

Portland, Ore.—C. J. Kerr, Northwest Manager of Metro, with headquarters in Seattle, was a recent visitor in Portland en route from Lewiston, Idaho, to Seattle and was the guest of honor at the weekly luncheon of the Oregon Motion Picture Men's Association at the Oregon Hotel March 2. Mr. Kerr stated he was well pleased with the business conditions in the cities he visited.

World Film Office Leaves.

Portland, Ore.—Acting under telephonic instructions, evidently given by Denham Palmer, western division manager, the Portland office of the World Film packed its entire paraphernalia over night and silently returned to Seattle. The reason for the move was not disclosed. Portland exhibitors stated that the local World office had been a great accommodation to them and were disappointed. Fred Locher, who had charge of the office, was rapidly working his way into popularity on Film Row and his departure to the Sound City is regretted.

Universal Publicity Man.

Portland, Ore.—Al L. Krause, formerly treasurer at the Orpheum, Portland, has been employed by the Film Supply Company as publicity manager for the northwest offices, including Portland, Spokane and Seattle. He will make his headquarters in Portland. The Universal is the first exchange in the city to employ a man whose exclusive duty is to handle publicity.

Burnside Theater Sold.

Portland, Ore.—The Portland Amusement Company, controlling the Globe, Casino and American theaters, have purchased the Burnside theater from George M. Harris. The new owners took charge of the house March 4.

With the Road Men.

A. W. Crank, road man for Metro, returned to Portland recently from an extended tour in the eastern part of his territory. He reports prosperous conditions in the cities visited, and stated that without exception the theaters in the wheat belt are running the best services on the market.

J. H. Baum, who recently returned from eastern Oregon for the General Film, has joined the forces of C. R. Coulter, of Seattle, and will exploit features on the road. Norwin Haas, representing Mr. Coulter, was recently in Portland territory with "Beating Back." This picture and "The Escape" has been booked solid through eastern Oregon for return dates.

Heard on Film Row.

The Sunset theater, Portland, used an attractive lobby display for Metro's "Dimples," shown recently. The decorative scheme, laid out by Chas. E. Couche, was that of a Georgia dell, the lobby being a bower of foliage and the floor carpeted with moss.

During the week of March 5, the Royal Guatemalan Marimba Band, which played at the San Francisco Exposition, was an added attraction at the Columbia.

George Reisner, who owns the Lyric theaters in Raymond and South Bend, Washington, was a recent visitor in Portland booking service.

H. H. Brownell, a Portland cameraman, has received a preferential commission to represent the Mutual Weekly in this territory.

Shedd, Ore.—R. F. Hamilton has opened a new house at Shedd, with Pathe service.

Moscow, Idaho.—The Orpheum theater is undergoing extensive alterations which, when completed, will give the house doubles its present seating capacity. A new pipe organ is being installed, also entirely new equipment. R. S. Tucker is the manager.

ALL HONORARY MEMBERS.

Denver Club Wants Stars to Visit—Coming and Going.

By E. C. Day, Denver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DENVER, COLORADO.—Every film manufacturer in the world and all the leading photoplay actors and actresses are to be made honorary members of the Rocky Mountain Screen Club as a result of action taken at the second weekly luncheon of this organization. The suggestion was made by President Harry T. Nolan and was adopted unanimously.

Also a campaign to put Denver on the traveling routes of the famous screen stars was launched and will be vigorously pushed. As a result it is hoped to have a visit from each and every moving picture actor or actress who passes this way going East or West.

It was voted to hold the weekly luncheons of the Screen Club every Friday at the Savoy Hotel. On the last Friday of each month ladies will be admitted to the luncheons. There are a number of the fair sex interested in the moving picture industry here both in the exhibiting line and on the exchange staffs. It was to accommodate these as well as the wives and sweethearts of the members that the new plan was adopted.

H. A. Callahan Here.

H. A. Callahan, special representative of the Essanay company, has concluded a week's visit in Denver as the guest of W. H. Cree manager of the General Film exchange. He expressed himself as well satisfied with conditions in this territory and predicted increased prosperity for the moving picture industry generally.

Mr. Callahan was a guest at the weekly luncheon of the Rocky Mountain Screen Club, and gave the officers of this new organization many helpful suggestions for improving and building up the club.

To Fight for Sunday Shows.

Montrose, Colorado.—The recent victory of moving picture exhibitors of Grand Junction in their fight against Sunday closing has resulted in a move being started in Montrose to lift the ban on Sabbath amusement. In Grand Junction, Harry T. Nolan and his associates in the theater business won the battle single handed and Montrose exhibitors are planning to adopt his methods in their struggle.

Nolan fought to retain Sunday amusement while in Montrose and theaters are now closed on Sunday and the theater owners there will have to initiate a movement to let down the bars. The matter was voted on in the Town Council recently and also the exhibitors claim that there were enough votes pledged to pass the ordinance when the matter came up, the councilmen lost heart and refused to legalize Sunday opening.

Now it will be necessary to circulate petitions and get the matter before the people under the Initiative and Referendum. This will be done in time for the city election in May.

In Grand Junction the newspapers refused to support the theater owners and it became necessary for the exhibitors to publish a paper of their own. The same plan will be adopted in Montrose if the necessity arises.

Wouldn't Spoil Serial.

The Ideal theater at Sydney, Nebr., has been quarantined on account of an epidemic of scarlet fever. An odd concession has been made to Exhibitor J. A. Bentley, however. The health authorities have granted him a permit to open one night each week to show the "Girl and the Game" so as not to spoil the sequence of this serial.

Girls Make Good Exhibitors.

Miss Rene Tuhey, manager of the Strand, selects all the Strand programs and is said to be the equal of any man on Curtis street as a judge of the merits of films.

"So many girls are crazy to act for the pictures that they seem to have lost sight of the fact that it is the theaters, after all, that are the most important," said Miss Tuhey. "There is no reason why girls should not make a success with the motion picture theaters and it seems strange to me that more of them do not try it."

Buy Joy Theater.

Ralph Kaylor and Thomas Cleaves have purchased the Joy theater on Larimer street. They will remodel the house and open it as a first class moving picture theater.

VANCOUVER NEWS LETTER.

By E. C. Thomas, Vancouver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Premier Bowser's Candidate Fails.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—The recent election of M. A. Macdonald, over C. E. Tisdall, the Bowser government's choice, by a vote of practically two to one, is of great importance to the exhibitors of British Columbia in that it indicates what may be expected in the coming general election now promised for some time in the summer.

Following Attorney-General (now also Premier) Bowser's decision that it would be best not to risk a general election last fall, as planned, the outrageous management of the censor's department, said to be under his instructions, served to turn against him most of the few remaining moving picture men of the province who had not been so affected by his previous refusals to afford them any relief.

The agitation following the rejection of "The Spoilers," and the force of public opinion thus aroused, practically forced the Attorney-General to review and pass this subject, and brought about a new era for the moving picture interests. Many, however, including exhibitors and exchange managers, have expressed the opinion that the present comparative leniency is simply for the purpose of getting votes, and are of the opinion that if the present incumbent is re-elected, a return will be made to the old standards.

The Liberal party, on the other hand, have indicated their willingness to grant an appeal board, and treat the moving picture industry generally as a legitimate business.

Change in Plans for New Theater.

Vancouver, B. C.—Amended plans for the new theater and office building to be erected by the National Amusement Company at Main Street and Broadway, Vancouver, indicate that the structure will be four stories in height, with a frontage of 100 feet on Broadway and 132 feet on Main street. The plans call for a large stage, and a fine organ will be installed.

Theatrical Federation Elects.

Vancouver, B. C.—The Vancouver Theatrical Federation, comprising the Musicians', Stage Employees' and Moving Picture Operators' Unions of Vancouver, has elected the following officers for the year 1916: President, J. Rundell; vice-president, W. E. McCartney; secretary, H. C. Roddan; treasurer, A. N. Harrington; business agents, P. Burraston and J. Pitman.

Speech by the Reeve.

Victoria, B. C.—A novelty in political campaigning was introduced to the Victoria public at the Avenue theater on a recent evening, when a challenge addressed to the mayor of the city was read by the reeve of Oak Bay on behalf of Hon. A. C. Flumerfelt, calling upon the Liberal candidate to answer certain questions in connection with the campaign.

The Orpheum in Vancouver was used on two successive evenings by the candidates and speakers of the opposing parties.

New Manitoba Corporation.

Winnipeg, Manitoba.—The latest issue of the Manitoba Gazette announces the incorporation of the Avenue Amusement Company, Ltd., with a capital of $20,000. The incorporators are H. B. Webster, W. J. Sutherland, Levi Weatherbie, James Hunter and B. L. Deacon. This is a moving picture company.

Local Notes of Interest.

H. E. Lotz, the General Film Company's new district manager for Canada, was a recent visitor to Vancouver.

Some very entertaining slides are being used at Vancouver theatres to assist the 143rd Battalion (B. C. Bantams) in their recruiting campaign. The latest slide shows Charlie Chaplin announcing that he has joined the Bantam regiment.

W. P. Dewees, of the Rex theater, Vancouver, has gone to Montreal to confer with E. A. Fenton over the final details of the deal giving to the National Film Service, Ltd., the Triangle distribution rights in Western Canada.

Disregarding Censors

In Spokane, Commissioner of Public Affairs F. M. McBroom Wants to Have Fine of $100 Imposed for Not Following Cuts of National Board of Censorship —League's Intelligent Handling of the Situation.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SPOKANE, WASH.—One or two local moving picture managers have been accused of violating the rules of the National Board of Censorship in using portions of pictures which the board had ordered cut out. Commissioner of Public Affairs in Spokane, and moving picture censor, F. M. McBroom, has drafted a drastic ordinance carying with it a maximum fine of $100 for any violations of the censorship rules in the future.

At the request of the Theater Managers' Association a lengthy conference took place between the managers and Commissioner McBroom, March 2, resulting in the ordinance being laid on the shelf for the present.

Assurances were given the commissioner that there would be no more violations and it was pointed out that it was unfair to make all come under drastic regulations because one or two had been violating the orders of the National board and the local censor.

The picture men were represented by Ralph Ruffner, manager of the Liberty theater, and president of the association; Will T. Reed, manager of the Casino theater, and Dr. H. S. Clemmer, manager of the Clemmer theater. They promised to see that all eliminations ordered by the board were made before the pictures were offered for public exhibition and to notify the managers of film exchanges that unexpurgated editions were not desired. Verbally, they agreed to constitute themselves a sort of vigilance committee to keep the screens free from immoral pictures.

Clemmer Ushers Dance.

A dancing party was given at Kellar's hall, Spokane, Wash., February 29, by the Clemmer Ushers' Glee Club, an organization made up of ushers at the Clemmer theater. Employes of four moving picture theaters were present. Mrs. Eva Langley and Charles Rapp furnished the music.

Spokane Show Notes.

The Ince feature, "Peggy," with Billie Burke, was booked by Manager Ralph Ruffner of the Liberty theatef for presentation at that playhouse for an entire week, beginning March 5. Mr. Ruffner went to Seattle to book the production.

For the week of March 12 the Selig production of "The Ne'er-Do-Well," based on the popular novel by Rex Beach, has been secured. This is outside of the Triangle releases, but was booked because of its unusual nature. The picture is said to be the biggest the Selig studios have done since "The Spoilers."

Miss Irene Fifle of Seattle has begun an indefinite engagement at the Class A theater as soloist, incidentally marking the return to Spokane picture show houses of the professional vocalist. Manager Lee S. Forbes recently determined on this additional attraction for his house.

Manager Ralph Ruffner has engaged Gene Miller, accordionist.

LUBIN.

THE NEW JANITOR (March 20).—This picture was originally scheduled for release on February 7. A synopsis of it was published on page 1010 of the issue dated February 12.

THE CRASH (Two Parts—March 21).—The cast: Clifford Ware (L. C. Shumway); Ross Grant (George Routh); Harvey Bean (Melvin Mayo); Sylvia, his daughter (Dorothy Barrett); Mary, a maid (Helen Eddy); Grant's partner (Robert Gray); Another father (J. H. Colby). Written and produced by Wilbert Melville.

Ross Grant and his partners, one of whom is an ex-telegrapher, are owners of a mine in Mexico. Grant is money-mad, and it is a great blow when he discovers that the mine is worthless. He determines to promote stock in it and reap a harvest. A telegraph instrument is installed in Grant's shack, and he gives a code to his companions before leaving for the States.

In a large American city, Harvey Dean is a rich broker. His daughter, Sylvia, an ardent stamp collector, is loved by Clifford Ware, a young engineer now employed by Dean. Grant meets Dean and interests him in the mining stock, until finally Dean agrees to invest $50,000 the following month. Grant, thinking the money sure, acts upon the advice of a friend, and plays the stock exchange.

Meanwhile Clifford discovers that Dean is going to invest in the mine, and asks permission to investigate it. Dean consents, and Clifford leaves for Mexico. Grant learns of Clifford's mission from his tool, the maid in the Dean household, and telegraphs to his partners to make Clifford their prisoner, and force him to write a favorable report on the mine. This is done, but Clifford asks to write a harmless postscript to the letter. After some argument, Grant's partners allow him to do so, and Clifford writes, "Perhaps Sylvia would be interested in adding these Mexican stamps to her collection."

Dean receives the letter, and is pleased at the favorable report. The important day on the exchange has come for Grant. With Dean's money he can swing the market so as to clean a half million. But just as Dean is about to hand Grant a check for the money, Sylvia arrives breathlessly, to show her father a message that was written under the stamps on Clifford's letter, and it states that the mine is worthless and he is held prisoner. Without Dean's money, Grant is ruined. Clifford makes his escape from the partners, and Sylvia ever afterwards looks upon the two Mexican stamps as the most precious of her collection.

A SISTER TO CAIN (Three Parts—March 23).—The cast: Yvonne Ismay (Helen Wolcott); Iona Page (Evelyn Page); Hashiwa (George Routh); Hoppy (Benjamin Hopkins); Millionaire's friend (Melvin Mayo); Dancers (Gene Liserani and Dorothy Dufee); Tom Marston (Jay Morely); Donald Phelps (Allan Forrest); Boggs, the wardrobe lady (Adelaide Bronti); Police Sergeant (W. J. Spencer). Written by Julian Louis Lamothe. Directed by Edward Sloman.

Yvonne Ismay and Iona Page are two dancers in the same company. Yvonne is the hail-fellow-well-met kind, while Iona is of the deceitful sort. Tom Marston, a reporter, is in love with Yvonne. She will have nothing to do with him, being infatuated with Donald Phelps, a millionaire. Phelps takes Yvonne to the Japanese Palace after the show, where the proprietor, Hashiwa, sees her and is attracted to her.

At a dinner party one night at which Iona is present, her demure way attracts Phelps, much to Yvonne's anger. Phelps finally throws Yvonne over for Iona, an action which makes the former jealous, so with the help of Boggs, a wardrobe lady at the theater, she keeps tabs on Iona's correspondence. One night, she learns that Phelps has asked Iona to marry him prior to an important and immediate business trip of his, and he asks her to meet him at the Japanese Palace after the show. Furious, Yvonne goes to the meeting place to find Iona alone in the room. There is a quarrel and Yvonne, getting the worst of it, stabs Iona with a hat pin. Frightened, thinking Iona dead, Yvonne goes to leave the room and faces Hashiwa, who has witnessed the performance. He says he will take care of Iona and say nothing if Yvonne will come to him when he calls her. She is too frightened to do anything but promise, so Hashiwa lets her go while he goes to Iona. Phelps, arriving a little late, receives a message purporting to be from Iona, telling him she cannot meet him that night. Piqued, he leaves and sails for Europe the next day.

Marston goes to Yvonne, hoping for a clue. She, crazed with fright and remorse, will tell nothing, but he finally manages to get from Boggs the news of the meeting at the Japanese palace. Hashiwa denies all knowledge of the disappearance, but Marston, not satisfied goes to the police, who raid the place. That same night Yvonne is handed a note from Hashiwa telling her to come that night. Yvonne goes to the Japanese Palace. Hashiwa seizes her, and there is a struggle. The police arrive and raid the palace. Hashiwa drops Yvonne and leaves the room to face Marston and the police. Iona tells how Hashiwa kept her a prisoner in the Palace, and bitterly upbraids Yvonne for her part in the performance. She adds that if it had not been for Yvonne, she might have landed "that old fool!"

Donald, reading of Iona's disappearance in the papers, has returned to America. He arrives at the door of the room in time to hear Iona's remark concerning himself, and the subsequent conversation. As Iona goes to leave she faces Donald, and tries to pull off some of her baby tricks again, but he is wise. Hashiwa is taken off. Yvonne is repentant of her treatment of Marston, who forgives her.

THE STRANGE CASE OF MARY PAGE (Episode No. 9—"The Accusing Eye"—Two Parts—March 20).—This episode deals with the testimony of Meredith, an actor known to Mary Page and her friend Amy, who obtain employment as an artist's model. He helps the girls find like employment, and they, while disliking it, are compelled to accept. Dave Pollock finds a painting of Mary and later seeks to force an entrance to her apartment, only to be frustrated and beaten by Meredith. The police surgeon who rushed to the scene at the death of Pollock is the next witness examined. He hurls a bombshell into the camp of the defense by declaring the retina of the dead man's eye held a picture of the last person he saw. A photograph is produced. In the man's eye is seen the image of Mary Page!

THE STRANGE CASE OF MARY PAGE (Episode No. 10, "The Clew"—Two Parts—March 27).—The mayor of the small town is on the witness stand with the opening of this episode. He tells how at the time of the murder Pollock was a candidate for congress against Langdon, and that the former failed in his attempt to buy off the younger man, and therefore attempted to discredit him. In a debate Pollock is made to look ridiculous by Langdon and he resolves to straightway put a blot on the lawyer's reputation. A fraudulent photograph of Langdon and a woman whose questionable reputation is obvious is exhibited and it reaches Mary Page. She is astounded and having learned of other plots, attempts to warn her lover, and comes under the power of the woman who is helping to entrap him. Bound and imprisoned in a room, she removes the 'phone receiver with her teeth and communicates with Langdon. At this point in the testimony Philip receives word from his detective that he has discovered men who had a difference with Pollock in a card game of the night preceding. It is a new clew.

CANIMATED NOOZ PICTORIAL NO. 7 (Cartoon by Wallace A. Carlson—March 22).—This is a split reel release. The first five hundred feet contains an animated cartoon which is a burlesque on the current topics of the day. Among the topics reviewed this week is the blowing up of the Talcum Powder and Munitions plant at Bayruhm, Pa. It is suspected that the blowing up was due to an explosion, but the constabule has not as yet determined. It is interesting to note that our camera man is on the job when the thing happens, not when it is all over. Another interesting topic is the fishing apparatus invented by Gene Yuss. This makes fishing an ideal sport while you sleep. One of the features of this apparatus is the use of well trained bait. The unpleasant duty of putting the worm on the hook is eliminated, the trained worms crawl onto the hook of their own accord. William H. Taft is also caught by our camera man while indulging in his favorite pastime "Cow-pasture billiards," sometimes called golluf. The remainder of the cartoons are devoted to one of Dreamy Dud's experiences in an African Jungle.

The remainder of the reel contains scenes taken in and about Santa Fe, New Mexico.

NUMBER 13, WESTBOUND (Three Parts—March 20).—The cast: Marion Culmer (Kathlyn Williams); Orson Kimball (Guy Oliver); Daniel Culmer (Fred Hearn); Mrs. Culmer (Lillian Hayward). Directed by Frank Beal. Written by Elliott Flower.

Daniel Culmer, a crusty old farmer, is constantly at war with the railroads. Marion, his niece comes to visit him. Tom Garland, a resident of the community, falls in love with Marion, but tells Tom seriously that she can never marry him, and he leaves for the city.

In his difficulties with the railroad, Uncle Daniel claims damages for the deaths of three cows. Orson Kimball, a substitute telegraph operator, laughs as he forwards this claim to headquarters. That night Kimball receives a message to hold Number 13, as the operator had failed to hold the limited at Milford and that a terrible wreck will ensue unless the train is stopped. There is only one connecting point between the scene where the wreck must occur and the telegraph messenger's office. That point is the home of Daniel Culmer. Orson rings up the Culmer home and Marion answers. He says: "For God's sake flag Number 13 before it passes your farm. Hundreds of lives are in danger."

Marion, alone in the house, secures a lantern and hurries to the railroad embankment. She falls down the embankment, is rendered unconscious, but later recovers her senses, and flags the approaching passenger train. As she does so she falls unconscious on the tracks and the locomotive stops just a few feet from her. She is taken to the tower station where Orson thanks her for her bravery.

In the meantime, Uncle Daniel and his wife return home from a church festival. Not finding Marion home, Uncle Daniel jumps to the conclusion that Marion has eloped with Tom Garland. He starts out in search of them after notifying the sheriff. The sheriff sees Marion and Orson Kimball together, and believes they are the eloping couple. Orson Kimball is shoved into jail, while Marion is taken to the sheriff's home.

Later, Marion takes the keys from the sheriff's house, goes to the jail and there liberates Orson. Together they start toward Marion's home, but Marion says: "I'll never return to Uncle Daniel." Orson then says: "Tonight's adventure will compromise you. We must go to the city and be married." Marion agrees, for she has learned to love the operator. Before they start for the city there comes a message of congratulation from the superintendent of the railroad to Orson and to the girl who flagged the train.

KNICKERBOCKER STAR FEATURES.

THE WITCH OF THE MOUNTAINS (Three Parts—March 24).—The cast: Trixie (Marguerite Nichols); John Otis (Gordon Sackville); Frank Otis (Richard Johnson); Mrs. Otis (Corenne Grant); Hiram Goodwin (Frank Erlanger); Con Murray (Bruce Randall); Jim MacDonald (Bert Francis); Annie Finnigan (Ruth Lackaye).

WANTED—News of Frank Otis, Age 27. Identification—long scar on chest. Left Mayville 12 years ago. His father will forgive and place on road to fortune. Address John Otis, 124 Grove St., Mayville.

Frank took into his confidence two strangers. At the mention and sight of the scar upon Frank's chest (his one positive means of identification) Con immediately communicated to his pal the astonishing information that he bore a similar scar and they quickly outlined a plan to investigate the tale of a promised fortune by impersonating Frank. That night Frank accepted their invitation to go for a good time and in the darkness, they felled Frank, leaving him for dead.

Trixie a little "Wharf-rat" lived with a washerwoman amid squalor and evil influences. In passing a cave she was attracted by moanings. She rescued Frank and assisted him to her home. Con and his pal arrived in Mayville and deceive John Otis, who tells them of the treasure of a befriended hermit. Frank convalescing, wins Trixie, and takes her to Mayville. Frank finds his father's cottage deserted. A duplicate of the hermit's crude map was brought to light, and they were able to follow Otis.

John and his two companions' introduction to the interior was beset with adventure and weird experiences. They had been warned of the much feared "Witch of the Mountains" that they were told bode evil for anyone who transgressed within her domain. With the aid of the chart they soon realized that they were well on the trail and at this juncture John was set upon, the map stolen and his body thrown into the dense shrubbery for dead.

The much abhorred "Witch of the Mountains" proved to be flesh and blood and when cautiously making her way through the undergrowth she came upon the prostrate form of John Otis. She dragged him to her cave. Con and Jim soon found the treasure in the Cliff Country, which was designated as the secret spot upon the rude map. After a day's labor they unearthed a chest of gold and silver coin. "The Witch of the Mountains" stood like a luminous white spectre outlined at the entrance of the cave; the menacing figure was uncanny. The pair with terror dashed madly away to their death.

Frank, Hiram and Trixie were met by a sickening and horrible sight. Crumpled up in hopeless forms lay the bodies of Con and Jim. Consternation as to the fate of John came upon them. They located the cave where the fortune lay in full view with no explanation why it had been abandoned.

Trixie discovered the "Witch's" hut in the gully, informed Frank and Hiram and there they found John, under the care of a sad faced but demented woman. Association with human beings after an isolation of years slowly brought light into the heretofore blank mind of the old woman and with a joyous, hysterical cry of recognition, she threw herself into the arms of John Otis, her long-lost husband. The re-union completes her story of years of suffering and darkness is related and all are re-united.

The elder misunderstands her affection toward him and is shocked when, returning unexpectedly to the cabin, he finds her in his brother's arms.

Consumed with rage, he is about to fire at them through the window when he sees that the girl is wearing a scarf which he recognizes. It is one of two worked by the hands of his mother, now dead, who had sent them as her last gift to the boys far away. At sight of the scarf memory floods his heart, and he lets fall the weapon. The eye-witnesses in Mrs. Bronson's suit for damages against the railroad having disappeared, her lawyer forces the issue by drawing a striking parallel between the case and the strange murders at the Cafe Epicure. He himself had seen young Walters shoot down Belle Bolter and her companion, but at the trial the witnesses taken by the police did not appear, and on several occasions the lawyer saw the murdered man and woman walking the sereets. Refusing to believe himself victim of a hallucination, he did some detective work and traced the mystery to the murderer's millionaire father, who had almost proved that the crime never occurred.

BUNGLES LANDS A JOB (March 23).—The great and only Bungles, treated with scorn, contempt and later violence, wandered despairingly along the streets. Everything seemed at an end, so far as he was concerned. Seeing a trolley car approach, he laid his head across the rails and awaited death with a calm face. To his horror he found that the car had turned down another track and that he was still in the land of the living.

Resting for a moment beneath a hotel window he found himself suddenly enveloped in the folds of something soft and filmy. Then he is flattened to the earth by a pair of shoes landing upon his head. A change takes place. A piece of glass does the duty for a razor and off comes his mustache. A few movements and his old rags are thrown aside and he becomes some female.

Then follows a series of exciting experiences as Bungles, impersonating a woman, seeks employment and friends he finds both with the theater folks, and finds in addition to work, trouble that ends his delicate plot.

BEHIND THE FOOT LIGHTS (March 24).—Pokes, the property man at the Vim theater, incurs the hostility of Prof. Jabbs the wonderful Escape King on the opening day of the performance. Jabbs is very fond of posing in the lobby of every theater where he is featured as the star act. Here he meets Ethel, Poke's sweetheart, and invites her into the theater to watch his act. Pokes sees his fickle sweetheart in the front row flirting with Jabbs and in his rage he resolves to get even with his lordly rival.

Discovering that the secret of Jabbs' escape from the padlocked barrel, consists in a false bottom, Pokes maliciously nails up the bottom securely. Jabbs does not discover the trick until after he has been securely locked into the barrel by Pokes in full sight of the audience who become alarmed. Pokes with fiendish glee packs dynamite into the barrel on top of the almost suffocated Jabbs and after lighting the fuse rolls the barrel out of the theater. Then seizing Ethel, who of all the audience has remained in the theater, the arch villain rushes her to the office of a Justice of the Peace. Just as the marriage ceremony is about to commence, Jabbs who has been hurled high in the air by the force of the explosion, falls into the same office, and throwing Pokes out through the window, proceeds to marry the now-willing Ethel himself.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE

GRAFT (No. 14—"The Iron Ring—Two Parts—March 13). The cast: Robert Harding (Richard Stanton); Dorothy Maxwell (Jane Novak); Stamford Stone (Glen White); Jack Stevens (Jack Abbott); Mark Gramble (Wadsworth Harris).

The great steel industry of Pittsburgh had been disturbed by a rumor of a merger of the Cambride Steel Plant and the Oldtown Tube Works. They decide to prevent this union by crippling the opposing industry by a strike. Stone, head of the Graft Trust, calls Mark Gramble, head of the Labor Trust, "the man who creates strikes and then furnishes strike-breakers to end it." He instructs him not only to bring about a strike at the Oldtown Tube Works, but to destroy the plant.

Robert Harding, the Youngstown lawyer, who came to New York to aid Bruce Larnigan, whose mind was shattered in his fight against the Trusts, realizes that his task is a physical battle rather than a legal one. Two attempts have been made on his life.

Dorothy Maxwell, for the sake of Bruce Larnigan, to whom she was engaged—determines to place in Harding's hands her father's diary, containing the names of the remaining members of the Graft Trust, in spite of the fact that her father—one of the Larnigan victims, has become hopelessly paralyzed in his fight against Tom Larnigan. She visits Harding's office, which happens to adjoin that of Stanford Stone, carrying the diary with her.

Stone has seen her enter and suspects her errand. Knowing that Harding is out, he follows her and accuses her of treachery to the Trust. She slips the diary in Harding's open desk and closes the top. Stone springs at her just as Harding enters. The latter escorts Dorothy to the door and afterwards forcibly ejects Stone.

Harding dislikes and suspects Stone, and his selection of this particular office was for a purpose. After assuring himself that Stone has left the building, he bores a hole through the wall into Stones's office and attaches a distaphone in the opening. A few hours later he hears Stone and Gramble discuss the probable success of their plan to wreck Youngstown.

Harding dashes from the office and takes the first train west, his only thought being to save his city, where his influence is great. His hasty exit discloses to Stone the presence of the distaphone. In fright he makes hurried preparations to flee from his office—never to return—as he knows Harding has found him out.

Harding arrives at the Ohio town in the midst of the disorder and does much toward restoring normal conditions. The infuriated citizens are bent on lynching two of the paid labor agitators who have been arrested, but Harding holds the mob back. "Don't waste your anger on these hired thugs," he says. "I am going for the man higher up." As he speaks, he taps the diary Dorothy has left for him and which he thrust into his pocket just before his hasty departure.

Stone, in his anger and defeat, determines to revenge himself on Dorothy. Masked and disguised, he gets into her bedroom, and with a knife raised above her to strike, is only prevented from accomplishing his purpose by the grandson of Dorothy's old nurse, Molly Kelly, in a most unusual way. Stone escapes. Harding returns to New York with the sheriff of Youngstown. They find Stone has disappeared, but promptly locate Gramble and place him under arrest. The confession of his frightened "agitators" make his conviction easy. Another member of the Graft Trust is eliminated.

GRAFT (Episode No. 15—"The Patent Medicine Danger"—(Two Parts—March 20). The cast: Robert Harding (Richard Stanley); Jack Stevens (Jack Abbott); Stanford Stone (Glen White); H. S. Blanchard (W. Harris); Mrs. Larnigan (Nanine Wright); Dorothy Maxwell (Jane Novak).

Harding has secured the diary containing the secrets of the "fifteen" from Dorothy. He is in a position now to proceed openly against the two remaining members—Stone, the president of the Graft Trust, and H. S. Blanchard, head of the Patent Medicine Trust. Stone has deserted his office and is in hiding. Blanchard, who cannot leave, determines to meet the crisis half way, so he invites Harding to his office over one of the big retail drug stores, for a conference. Harding has been investigating some of the evils of the patent medicine business. Some of the cases which came under his observation follow.

Two young men, out for a good time, find the saloons closed. They purchase some of the patent medicines containing a large percentage of alcohol and become intoxicated.

A young girl takes a couple of headache powders which contain a drug. A "cadet" has watched her, follows her out of the drug store, and has no difficulty in getting her into a house of ill-repute in her dazed condition. Later the girl becomes a "dope" fiend.

A certain class of doctors, of no standing, make a practice of writing prescriptions for drug users; this is known to the drug stores, who do nothing to stop it.

Armed with this knowledge of the subject, Harding goes to the conference arranged by Blanchard. The latter has prepared himself for the battle in another way. He has concealed in the room three doctors, two attendants from the insane hospital and a magistrate—all in the pay of the Graft Trust.

Harding plunges into the subject. Blanchard accuses him of being insane and calls forth the doctors to examine him. Harding sees the trap set for him and tries to escape. The two attendants overpower him and put him in a straightjacket. The doctors declare him insane and dangerous, the commitment papers are signed and Harding is taken to a private mad house on the Sound.

Dorothy has followed Harding to the conference and has witnessed the commitment of Harding by peering through the transom. With Stevens she plans his rescue. Dorothy succeeds in getting some steel saws into Harding's cell. His attempt to escape is discovered, however, and he is being removed to a safer cell when a sudden and unexpected dash for liberty on his part takes the guards by surprise. He gains the roof of the building and dives into the Sound where he is rescued by Dorothy and Stevens in their motor boat.

Blanchard has the fright of his life when he beholds the wild-eyed and dishevelled Harding glaring at him with his back to the closed door of the office. Harding denounces him as a menace to humanity. He says: "You have had me declared insane, the State cannot hold me responsible for my acts, it is my intention to kill you." Blanchard pleads for his life. Harding drags him from the building and into the street. A crowd quickly collects. Harding tells them of the evils that are laid at Blanchard's door. The crowd becomes stirred to frenzy and makes an attack on Blanchard. He is rescued, more dead than alive, by the police. In the excitement Harding slips away.

This sensational incident directs the attention of the law to the patent medicine evil, and Blanchard and his kind are indicted by the Grand Jury. Later the Pure Food Commission raids a number of drug stores. Harding adds another name to the list of the men who have paid.

Bill had a few of these the Star Boarder began to magnify to the little wife, who fell for his slander. After a time she grew so discontented that she decided that life was too short to live with so worthless a man as Bill.

The Star Boarder was then happy and immediately after the divorce popped the question to her and they were married. It was raining terribly while the ceremony was performed, which was a bad omen, but the Star Boarder called a cab to take them home, and lo and behold who should arrive but Bill with his old jitney bus. Bill rescued her from them and turned his whole gang over to the authorities. The gang in turn squealed on Bill and he landed behind the bars. A TOYLAND MYSTERY (March 23).—Produced by R. F. Taylor and W. W. Wheatley.

In this interesting novelty manikins are made to move as human beings. Jerry, a humble but tactful and ingenious youth, is a suitor for the hand of Tillie, the beautiful daughter of Snitz, the butcher. Unfortunately, Snitz is looking higher than Jerry for a son-in-law, and highly disapproves of his suit. He has leanings, however, toward Slowfoot, a local Sherlock Holmes, with some reputation as a detective. Circumstances make it seem as though Slowfoot was about to win the lady. These are the circumstances:

Snitz has just received a consignment of Canada mutton, whose olfactory qualities are extremely delectable to Bosco, the bulldog. Bosco is irresistibly attracted to the butcher shop, and when no one is looking he appropriates the largest and juiciest leg of lamb in the place. Snitz doesn't see him getting away with the meat, but Jerry, who is calling upon Tillie, and endeavoring to escape the notice of Snitz, sees the dog stealing the leg of lamb.

Immediately the robbery is discovered Snitz takes on as though his safe had been cracked. So eager is he to recover the lost leg of lamb that he promises his daughter's hand in marriage to the person who recovers the missing leg. Among others, Slowfoot is called in and told of the unusual reward for the solving of this mystery. He immediately starts out on a thoroughly professional search for all of the clues which might aid him, and after cataloging them starts to beat up the country for miles around in an effort to locate the criminal. Jerry is keeping very still, for he knows who the criminal is, but where he is is quite another matter.

How he tracks the dog to his lair, recovers the leg, brings it to the butcher, and wins Tillie, ends the story.

LOVE AND VACCINATION (March 20).—The cast: The Doctor (Lee Moran); His Sister (Betty Compson); The New Arrival (Eddie Lyons); Snitch (Neal Burns). Scenario by H. Wendell Phillips. Produced by Alec Christie.

A young doctor and his sister arrive at a popular summer resort in quest of practice. The doctor finds things very dull. The majority of the visitors at the resort are entirely too healthy to need the services of a doctor, so he and his sister decide upon desperate measures to secure patients.

Eddie, a young man, arrives at the resort, and the sister decides he will be the first victim to start her brother's reputation. Eddie admires the girl and inquires concerning her. The clerk tells him that she is a trained nurse and is staying at the hotel with her brother, who is a doctor. In order to become acquainted Eddie pretends that he is sick and makes it convenient to get sick in the girl's presence. The doctor takes the case, and determined to make something out of it, pronounces his patient suffering from small-pox. The news spreads in the resort and the doctor has his hands full. With professional visits at $5 a throw, and vaccinations extra, the doctor is soon in the way to become well fixed.

The nurse, however, has all of her time taken up in caring for Eddie, and the doctor calls to his assistance Snitch, the house detective. They try to quarantine Eddie in his room, but he objects to his nurse attending other cases, and his arrival among the guests creates a new panic. Eddie decides that he has been quarantined long enough and disappears from his room.

The local detectives are put on the case and soon run him down. He is brought back to the doctor's office and discovers that he has brought prosperity to the new practitioner. The doctor shows Eddie the proceeds and Eddie persuades him that as he has been the cause of his unexpected prosperity he has some claim on the girl. The doctor agrees that the family needs a hustler like Eddie and leaves him and the girl to work out their own future.

THE WRONG BIRD (March 24).—The cast: The Bride (Billie Rhodes); The Groom (Ray Gallagher); The Boys (Neal Burns, Ed. Burns and Harry Lyons). Scenario by Al. E. Christie. Produced by Horace Davey.

The newlywed's first meal after the return from their honeymoon does not turn out much of a success. The bride is willing, but lacks the technical training necessary to an appetizing meal. Hubby, as a consequence, leaves for work in a half starved condition.

Newlywed arrives at the office, gaunt from hunger, and when the boys attempt to rally him on being married, he comes to the defense of his wife's cooking, and blandly states that he has just had a most delicious meal at home. The boys are inclined to doubt his statement, and remark that as he has such a marvel of a cook, it seems strange that he doesn't invite his friends around to have a decent meal some time. On the spur of the moment he does invite them to dinner that night, and, calling the house, tells his bride.

The grooms's hunger gets the best of him, and he slips the office boy a bill to get some sandwiches. While he is stealthly consuming them, one of the boys sees him and calls the attention of the others to his voracious appetite. They realize there is something wrong, and rather than be disappointed, order a meal for five to be sent to the groom's house that evening. Hubby, knowing his wife's limitations, orders a meal for the bunch to be sent to his house.

Wifie goes shopping and gets everything in sight, but every dish she tries her hand at is a failure. As the time for the arrival of the guests approaches, she goes next door to borrow some flour, and sees the appetizing turkey her neighbor has cooked. Wifie returns in time to greet the guests and, realizing that there is nothing to eat, steals her neighbor's turkey and pretends it is her own cooking. The boys think it is the one they ordered, while Hubby believes he sent it. In the meantime, the neighbor misses the fowl, and, following the trail of gravy, locates the "loot." While she is giving wifie a piece of her mind, the two dinners which were ordered arrive, and things are finally explained. Hubby decides that never again will he try to fool his friends, while they decide that single blessedness is good enough for them. The neighbor is appeased and hubby kisses away his wife's tears.

The MADCAP QUEEN OF CRONA (Two Parts —March 21).—The cast: The Madcap Queen and Marcia Avery (Grace Cunard); Prince Frederick (Francis Ford); Count Michael (Jack Holt); Sir Richard Hutt (Neil Hardin). Written by Grace Cunard. Produced by Francis Ford.

Marcia Avery, an American girl, while sightseeing in the little principality of Crona, learns that she is the exact image of the queen of that country, who, because of her frivolous ways, is known as the Madcap Queen.

The queen is loved both by Prince Frederick and the Count Michael, and the prince seems to hold the most of her favor. The queen is tired of court life and often wishes she could get some one to take her place for a short time in order that she may have what she calls some fun. Marcia and the queen meet one day and become very friendly because of their likeness. After a great deal of persuasion the queen finally induces Marcia to take her place as queen for a week.

The councillors, thinking Marcia the real queen, inform her that she must marry within the week. Before leaving the Madcap Queen had warned Marcia not to flirt with the prince, but the warning is superfluous, as she takes a great liking to Count Michael and the prince finds himself slighted. He cannot understand what he thinks a sudden change of heart on the queen's part, and after catching the Count embracing what he thinks is the queen, he seeks the count out and insults him. They arrange the duel for that evening in the count's rooms.

That evening Marcia is wandering about the castle and through a mistake gets in the count's rooms. Before she can escape the parties to the duel come in and engage in a fight. Spellbound, the girl watches them fight and in the struggle the curtains are torn down, disclosing the girl. She fears for the count's life and in the excitement goes to his arms. Chagrined, Prince Frederick leaves them together.

Sir Henry Hutt comes in and arouses the anger of the Count, who, in anger, knocks him down. The day of the wedding arrives and Hutt, enraged because Count Michael had struck him, incites the populace against the crown. Prince Frederick calls to extend his apologies, but finds that the "queen" and Count Charles have gone for a motor ride. The councillors announce that unless the queen comes back by twelve o'clock the throne will be transferred to Prince Frederick. The villagers are beginning to cause trouble and the hour of twelve has almost arrived when the Madcap Queen returns from her vacation. She finds a note that the Prince had written her, telling her that as she seems to favor the Count, he is going away, as he cannot stand to think of her love being given to some one else. Hearing the noise outside, the queen hurries out and is greeted by cheers from the assembled villagers. The Prince is so overcome with astonishment that his habitual reserve is swept away and he actually smiles. The queen is so happy at making the Prince smile that she impulsively embraces him, and as the cheers are still ringing the Count and the girl he thinks is queen return. Explanations follow and the Count decides that he is well suited with his choice, even if she is not queen, while the Prince and the Madcap Queen receive the congratulations of all.

MONNA VANNA (Three parts—March 25).—Giannello was the son of a goldsmith, who had been commissioned to set some jewels for Monna Biancaone, one of the great ladies of Pisa, and mother of the beautiful Vanna. Father and son set out together to take the jewels to the lady. Vanna is gathering roses and loses her ring. Gianello finds it for her, and she binds up his hand, which has been torn by the thorns. From that day the young people think of nothing but each other, though their station in life is so far apart. Vanna, however, is betrothed to Sir Guido Colonna. Gianello, divining that another will gather the sweet flower, climbs the wall of the palace to see Vanna once more. He is surprised by some of the palace retainers and taken for a thief. He is led into the presence of Vanna and her mother, and the young girl identifies him as the goldsmith's son and asks to have him taken back to his father. This is done. Gianello protests to his father that he is not a thief, but says that no one shall ever know his secret. His

"Hell's Hinges" is the title of the latest TRIANGLE PLAY in which W. S. Hart appears. Seldom has there been a motion picture so intensely interesting, so absorbing. Not for a moment is your audience permitted to relax or forget the stirring action on the screen. No time or money was spared to make this TRIANGLE PLAY so good that it would set a new standard. For the benefit of one stirring scene only an entire town was destroyed by fire—actually burned to the ground.

Triangle Film

"Hell's Hinges" is just the kind of a motion picture that the public love. It's the kind of a picture people want to pay money to see because it is real—There is no sham, or bluff. A real bad man becomes converted and is willing to die to protect the girl. He fights for his life and wins in the end.

Supporting Mr. Hart are three TRIANGLE STARS who have many other successes to their credit—Clara Williams, Louise Glaum and Jack Standing.

father is angry and determines that his son shall become a soldier.

The captain of a band of adventurous soldiers is glad to accept Giannello as a recruit. The goldsmith's son makes a willing soldier. Pisa in the meantime is rejoicing in the marriage of Vanna and Sir Guido. But their happy days do not last long. The Florentines move against the Pisans and Pisa is invested for a long siege. The siege lasts a long time and the people of the city are nearly starving. At last Guido is forced to send an envoy to the Florentine general to beg for peace terms. Prinzivalle, as he is now known, is none other than the goldsmith's son, Giannello, who has become commander of the Florentine forces. He dictates the following terms:

"Pisa shall have peace and victuals only if Monna Vanna comes to me this night bringing the fairest roses in her garden."

Vanna accepts the terms for her people's sake. In the meantime Prinzivalle has sent the food supplies to the city. The signal of acceptance of the terms glows from the tower of Pisa, and Vanna comes to the tent of the general. They talk together and at last Vanna recognizes in him the son of the goldsmith. He tells her that Pisa is already fed, and she gives him the roses she has brought.

Vedio, his lieutenant, comes to warn him that the Florentines are furious and are coming to arrest him. Vanna promises him that Pisa will save him out of gratitude. He goes with her. But Guido proves unworthy of his noble wife. He refuses to believe in her innocence and Prinzivalle is sent to the dungeons. Here Vanna joins him, declaring that Guido's outrageous words severed the tie between them, and that she is free to follow her heart. Vanna unlocks the door and they leave together.

JOKER.

IT NEARLY HAPPENED (March 25).—The cast: Bilkins (Wm. Franey); Samanthy, his wife (Gale Henry); Hasherino (Milburn Morant). Written and produced by Allen Curtis.

Bilkins and his wife, Samanthy, two rubes from Squash Center, arrive at the summer resort to spend a vacation. The two "moss-backs" find much that is new and novel in the up-to-dateness of the hotel. They think everybody is trying to get their money, and their efforts to outwit the bellboys, elevator and other employees of the hotel are ludicrous.

Hasherino is the headwaiter of the dining-room and his fine, dashing appearance has won the hearts of all the female contingent. Samanthy falls a victim to his politeness and contrasts his dashing appearance to Bilkins, to the disadvantage of the latter. Marie is the waitress, and she makes a hit with Bilkins. While Bilkins is carrying on a flirtation with Marie, his wife is doing the same with Hasherino, and each couple manage to make a date to meet that night.

Bilkins and his wife are both trying to figure some way to leave each other without disclosing their errand, and each is glad when the other leaves. Marie tells Bilkins a hard luck tale and gets his sympathy to such an extent that he loosens up the purse-strings and gives her a roll of money. Hasherino plays on the heart of Samanthy, and in the absorption of his love-making he manages to deprive her of several pieces of jewelry.

Each of the couples plan an elopement for the following night and manage to return to their room without being discovered. Next day husband and wife prepare for the elopement and their efforts to avoid being found out by each other cause many complications. At last dark arrives and Bilkins and wife retire to their room.

Bilkins hangs his suitcase out the window, while Samanthy hides her clothes beneath the bed. On a pretext of going outside to smoke Bilkins escapes and leaves a note with the clerk to deliver to his wife in fifteen minutes. He then goes to the appointed trysting place. Samanthy gets ready for flight and leaves a note on the table for Bilkins.

Hasherino and Marie, who is really his wife, count the proceeds of their hard luck tale, finding themselves very far ahead, decide to leave on the first train. Marie writes a note to Bilkins and arranges it so that he cannot miss it. Her husband writes Samanthy, telling of his marriage and thanking her for the jewels. The wily pair safely escape.

Bilkins, nervously waiting, decides to sit down, and does so only to hastily rise. He finds Marie's note; it has been fastened to a pin and left on the seat. Samanthy finds the note from her "lover," and, realizing she has lost out, determines to get her note before Bilkins. Bilkins breathlessly rushes to the clerk and asks for the note. He learns it was left in his room. Husband and wife, each on the trail of their note, come face to face in the room, and there is much manoeuvering to get their respective notes without the knowledge of the other. They finally get the wrong notes, but tear them up without reading, and a happy reconciliation follows.

AIN'T HE GRAND? (March 21).—The cast: Prof. Bosco (Ed. Sedgwick); Grip Hoaley (George Barnes); Slim Hoover (Victor Potel); Mrs. Slim Hoover (Jane Bernoudy); Her Maid (Eileen Sedgwick). Written and produced by Roy Clements.

Prof. Bosco, "The World's Famous Magician and Hypnotist," and his "Metropolitan Company," which consists of "Grip" Hoaley, reach Centerville after a long walk from their last stand. After "putting up" at the hotel, conducted by Slim Hoover, Prof. Bosco bills the town and gives a performance at the opera house.

The "punch" trick of "The World's Greatest Magician and Hypnotist" is the standing of "Grip" Hoaley, supposedly under hypnotic power, on his head. This trick made a great hit with the Centerville audience, but when Prof. Bosco attempted the stunt with the town belle the cowboys in the audience start to shoot up the show. "Grip" Hoaley makes a get-away, but Prof. Bosco "gets his."

THE CRIMSON TRAIL (Two Parts—March 24).—The cast: Toni (Clara Byers); Dick (Stanley Walpole); Baptiste (Lindsay Hall); Hilda (Edith Roberts). Written and produced by Winthrop Kelley.

Antoinette Halvey, called "Toni," is a reckless and sensual woman, who runs a gambling house in one of the large cities of Northwest Canada. She has as her favored lover Dick Hallam, a captain of the Royal Mounted Police. Hallam comes to her resort to break off the affair, announcing his intended marriage to another. Toni's jealousy is aroused and she tells Dick that she will break up his home and regain him for herself.

Toni learns that Dick is slated at headquarters to be sent out into the wilds upon the next big case. A man, who turns out later to be her deserted half-breed husband, has sought refuge in her resort, where he is hiding from the mounted police. Toni sees an opportunity to rid herself of the half-breed and to separate the newly-married Dick and Hilda. Having advised the police that Baptiste will be found in hiding in a distant frontier camp on a specified day, she decoys him thither and waits for Dick to arrive in pursuit.

Hallam arrives, having lost his horse on the way, but still guarding two carrier pigeons which Hilda has given him as a parting gift, that he might send back messages to her from the wilderness. While he is in the act of arresting the outlaw, Toni discovers the birds and releases one with the message to Hilda that her husband is reunited with his former mistress. The bird reaches home and the shock is almost fatal to the bride. During a night spent in the cabin the prisoner breaks his bonds and is in the act of revenging himself by murder upon the worthless woman who has sold him when Dick discovers him. A fight ensues, in which the outlaw is killed.

Toni finds herself at last victorious at every point. She is alone with Dick. But a change has taken place in her own heart that night in the cabin when her life was saved from the murderer's knife. Her one urgent wish now is to repair the evil she has done. They are without horses and have only scant provisions. After severe hardships they finally reach the Athabasca River, which flows down to the nearest station, Fort McMurray.

At one time Dick is reduced to the necessity of killing the remaining pigeon for food, but Toni prevents him. She makes him write at her dictation a message to Hilda: "I love you. Meet me at Fort McMurray.—Dick." When he has released the bird she confesses that she had sent the mate back with a wicked lie. They build a rough raft and trust to the current to bring them to safety. At last one night they find their food suply all but gone. Dick tries to force the greater share on her, and to humor him she seems to assent.

She knows that if he can be kept alive for two days longer he will reach the fort and Hilda's arms. During the night, as he is sleeping, she opens her wrist with her knife, and, softly kissing him, swoons across his knees. Hilda, in response to the second message, arrives at the fort. The following morning the raft is seen sweeping past on the stream and a boat it put off to tow it ashore. Dick and Hilda are reunited.

ON DANGEROUS GROUND (March 23).—The cast: Louis Goldenberg (Murdock MacQuarrie); Rachel, his daughter (Rene Verne); the stranger (William Canfield). Scenario by James Dayton. Produced by Murdock MacQuarrie.

Louis Goldenberg and his daughter, Rachel, arrive from Europe. Both are laden with bundles, and Rachel drops her head shawl. As she stoops to pick it up she is bumped by a strange man. She glances timidly at him, but her father looks threateningly at the stranger and pulls Rachel along with him.

The old Jew and his daughter find lodgings in the poorer part of the city, and the stranger, who has followed them, gets the number of the house. Rachel comes out with a basket to do the simple marketing and is overtaken by the stranger on the street. They walk along to a quiet street, where Rachel is induced to sit with the stranger on a bench. He offers to buy the better groceries for her, which she refuses. The old Jew sees them come back and is furious. He sees the fellow leave and follows him to his own house in the rich part of town. He warns Rachel to beware of the stranger.

Time passes and the old Jew is doing better. He now has a push cart from which he peddles his wares. He is loved by all on the street. This makes him the object of envy of the other peddlers and they taunt him. The Jew one day sees a fight between some urchins, and as the odds are against one of them, he takes his part and separates them. The old Jew is caring for the child when they meet a big burley Irishman, whom the child recognizes as father. He is grateful to the old Jew and goes with him to his cart. Meanwhile some one has burned the old Jew's cart and they arrive to find it a smouldering heap of ashes.

Rachel dresses up in her best, takes her basket and sets out. She is met by the stranger, who has been waiting for her appearance. Finally he persuades her to take a cab ride with him and as an excuse to get her to his room tells her he wants her to meet his mother. She comes in and the stranger tries to caress her.

Meanwhile her father has arrived home and, finding her gone, begins inquiring for her. He finds that she has gone with the stranger and sets out to the house accompanied by a crowd. He is joined by his friend, the Irishman, and they break their way into the stranger's house, asking for Rachel. He has gagged her and locked her in another room and denies that he has seen her. She works the gag loose and is discovered by her father. The Irishman wallops the procurer mercilessly, and the story closes with the old man happy with his restored child in his arms.

Mary's aunt proposes that the girl disappear and that she and Mary's friend, Dr. Willis, take her to a lonely place and try and break the dreaded habit. Mary consents.

The aunt leaves and is kidnapped. Her father and Courtney exert every effort to locate the girl. Unwilling to risk notoriety, they secure the services of private detectives. Mary, meanwhile, responds to the treatment. Her father receives a note from the girl, stating that she is in good hands and begging them not to search for her. Courtney believes that this letter is merely a blind.

Aunt Jessica develops a severe case of pneumonia and is compelled to leave the two, while she goes to the city for treatment. She had planned to send a nurse, but on her arrival in the city she became unconscious and is taken to a city hospital. Dr. Willis, an old school mate and also an old sweetheart of the girl, finds his old love returning. He manages to keep this secret from the girl. The two are forced to remain together, expecting the arrival of the nurse every day.

When Mary's aunt regains consciousness several days later, she hurries a nurse forward with instructions to take care of the girl. The detectives, meanwhile, have located May. Courtney and the detectives arrive at the doctor's just at dinner time. Courtney, peering through the window, sees Mary tying an apron around the doctor and the two acting like children. He enters and upbraids the girl for her unfaithfulness. She starts to explain, but, remembering Courtney's hatred toward the dope fiend, refuses to give any explanation, but pleads with him to trust her for a while longer, but he denounces her and states that under the circumstances he wouldn't trust his own sister. The doctor pleads also with Courtney.

Courtney leaves in a rage and Mary is very much broken up. The doctor tells her that for a whole week she has not taken any drug, and that he thinks she is strong enough to go home.

Three weeks later Willis is much surprised by a visit from Mary and her aunt. Mary has broken her engagement with Courtney and the aunt has come to offer the doctor payment for his services. He refuses the money. The aunt begs him to come to the small town until informed that Mary is expecting to spend some time with her aunt and, turning to the girl, he sees that his presence would be greatly desired. The aunt smiles and realizes that in the future Mary will have the doctor to see that she never becomes addicted to the drug habit again.

THE DESPERADO (March 22).—The cast: The Desperado (Rupert Julian); The Sheriff (Jack Holt); The Child (Zoe Bech). Scenario by Calder Johnstone. Produced by Rupert Julian.

In the early days of Oklahoma, the incoming pioneers were having a hard struggle for existence. The scarcity of wood forced the settlers to take lumber from a government preserve. The government, to stop the depredations, issued a call for deputies, and as the fees loomed very large in that time of want, there was no scarcity of men to fill the places.

Among the first to accept service was young Yeager, the son of a Virginian. From his association with rough companions the young man soon became the hardest drinker and gambler of the lot. In the county seat was a gambler by the name of Latrobe—a man of the West, cold, hard and strictly "out for the money." The gambler was successful in cleaning out young Yeager. From that time onward, Yeager changed and was known as the desperado. It was his vowed intention to "get" Latrobe and those who had helped the gambler to "fleece" him.

At the time the story opens, the sheriff was being severely criticised because of his inability to catch the Yeager. He determined to use a trap and posted a noitce where he knew the desperado would see it, accusing him of cowardice and boasting that he would not come to town.

Yeager accepted the challenge, and, entering the town, found himself in a trap. His main idea in making the trip was to kill Latrobe, and instead he found himself the target for half a dozen sharpshooters, but escaped after wounding several of his assailants. In the melee he was shot through the upper lip, and while searching for a water hole, comes across a nester and his family, a wife and little girl. The nester tells of his hard luck and states that he wishes he could invite the stranger to stop for a meal, but that rations are very low.

The desperado takes a liking to the child, and tells the family that he only wants to rest. He and the child become friendly, and the baby notices his bleeding lip when she asks him to kiss her doll.

Before leaving that night, the stranger gives the girl a bundle of bills, and makes her promise to keep his gift a secret until the morrow. Then he rides through off through the night.

The next day, while the desperado is trying to elude a posse following him, he is almost unseated when his horse dodges a striking rattlesnake. Dismounting to see if his horse has been struck, he notices the footprints of a child nearby and then sees the trail of a wagon. He surmises the child has wandered away from its parents, and is fearful that she may meet the rattlesnake.

He searches nearby, and finally locates the child. The child had missed her doll and came back to search for it. It was at that point that the snake had been disturbed and bitten her. She is crying bitterly, "I have been bited." He ties a tourniquet above the wound and, knowing the action would mean his own death, sucks the wound with his bleeding lips. When the others find the two, the child is out of danger, while the desperado, smiling in his death agony, is safe beyond the reach of the law. On a hillside there is a grave marked only by a stone on which has been engraved: "And Christ ain't a-goin' to be too hard on a man who died for a little kid."

A SOCIAL OUTCAST (Three Parts—March 20).—The cast: Benjamin Blair (Ben Wilson); Frederick Monsey (Charles Ogle); Jim Henderson (Joe W Girard); Dick Cropsey (Jack Newton); Mary (Dorothy Phillips); Mrs. Dooling (Mrs. J. H. Brundaeg). Written by Samuel Greiner. Produced by Ben Wilson.

Blair, a young lawyer, has landed the nomination for the office of district attorney. Frederick Monsey, his political opponent and an unscrupulous politician, resolves to bring sinister influence to bear to discredit Blair. One day Blair saves Mary from the clutches of Jim Henderson, her lover, who is beating her up because she could not give him all the money he asked of her. Finding the girl in a pitiable condition, he sends her to his home with instructions for Mrs. Dooling his housekeeper, to take care of her.

The girl recovers and Blair is about to assist her in one way or another when Jim appears, claims her as his wife and confronts the two. Blair discovers that they have never been married and, deciding to save Mary, he ousts Jim from his home. Jim reveals the situation to Monsey and his associates, but in a light which makes it appear that Blair is lodging, for immoral purposes, somebody else's wife at his home. The newspapers give prominence to the affair and before there is any possibility to clear up matters Blair's reputation is ruined. Stella Daily, his sweetheart, returns him his ring. Mary is beginning to comprehend that she is bringing about the ruin of the man she loves. She decides to leave his house, but when she reveals to him her intention he commands her to stay. Due to the extreme bitterness of his soul there arises in him an uncontrollable craving to cast aside conventionalities and act in a way calculated to prove to the world how little he cared for its good will. As a result he marries Mary.

She is his wife—but only in name. In his hatred of humanity he hates her, too. He allows her to do very much as she pleases, while he spends his time behind closed doors, writing a book which is an indictment of humanity. Mary turns out to be fully equal to the situation. Instead of claiming the full rights of her position and squandering the money of which she has lavish control, she dispenses charity in the slums.

One day Blair has occasion to watch her at her Samaritan labor. He gradually is beginning to realize that out of the debris of his past there gleams before him a diamond of the purest quality. He never finishes his book. The time comes when his reputation is re-established and Dick Cropsey, his former political manager, offers him the nomination for the office for which he was once so ignominiously defeated. He refuses it, answering that he has been appointed to a more congenial office—the office of husband and parent, for his wife has recently presented him with a bouncing son and heir.

THE PHANTOM THIEF (March 21).—The cast: Mrs. Price (Gretchen Lederer); Mr. Price (Val Paul); the Professor (Arthur Moon). Written and produced by Harry G. Stafford.

Mrs. Price is a somnambulist, an affliction which is a source of more or less worry to her husband. The day following an especially annoying night, a client of Price's expresses him two thousand dollars in currency, as "earnest money" on a contract. Price sends his clerk to bank the money, but the clerk arrives too late to make the deposit and Price places the currency in his office safe. The day's work done, Price, fearing to leave the money in the office, takes it home with him and places it in a wall-safe in the library.

The Prices retire; Mrs. Price not a little worried because of the presence of the money in the house. The next morning Price goes to the safe but finds the money missing. Caught in the door of the safe Price finds a bit of lace. Instantly he suspects his wife has, in the course of her nightly "prowl," removed the money from the safe and hidden it elsewhere. Together they search the entire house, but to no avail.

Price bethinks himself of a friend, one, Professor Borel, who is an eminent neurologist. He calls upon the professor, explains the situation and receives the professor's assurance that the application of auto-suggestion will clear away all the difficulties. Having arrived at the Price home, Professor Borel requests Mrs. Price to retire to bed, just as she did the night before. Mrs. Price obliges and the professor induces hypnosis, then applies the suggestion. Mrs. Price rises from her bed, descends to the library, recovers the money from its hiding place, and replaces it in the wall safe. Professor Borel awakens his subject, who retires to resume her every day attire.

Price thanks Professor Borel, then enquires concerning a cure for Mrs. Price's malady. The professor suggests a simple measure and takes his departure. That night, having acted upon the professor's suggestion, Price awaits developments. Mrs. Price starts to "prowl," but, upon coming in contact with the professor's curative vehicle, awakens somewhat suddenly and loses no time in settling herself in bed again.

When he is unable to attend a big reception she is giving, she becomes convinced that he has ceased to love her.

During the reception John returns and seeks his wife. He finds her in a secluded corner. Unseen, he overhears Miriam promise to give her answer to the interloper on the following day. John arranges a yachting trip and among the guests invited is the man who is trying to break up his home. The development of the plot is stirring and the denouncement full of thrills.

PANSY POST PROTEAN PLAYER (March 21).—The cast: Pansy (Frances Keyes); Manager Intelligence Office (Jay C. Yorke); Mrs. Gray (Edith Diestel).

The manager of an employment agency was extremely unhappy. The success of his business depended on his ability to get commissions, and he was so fortunate in the selection of applicants that when they once obtained a place they never left it. Of course, the ideal situation is one where maids continually change employment, but the manager for a long time did not see how he would be able to bring this about. Then Fate brought a meeting with Pansy Post, Protean Player. Her lightning change act had failed upon the stage and she was headed for New York by rail, walking. The manager suggested to her that she be his entire staff of domestics, changing costumes until a customer was satisfied, and that as quickly as possible she would leave her new place and come up and divide the commissions with him.

This arrangement worked out like a charm for a while. Pansy flitted from place to place and the commissions came rolling in. Then the unexpected happened. Pansy's last employer, who had hired her under several different disguises, came in and complained that her "last girl" had run away and had been married to her son. The poor manager of the Intelligence Office scowled at the unhappy mother and simply said, "Woman, your son has ruined my business." He knew what he meant, but the woman didn't, and often wondered why the loss of one applicant should put a flourishing Intelligence Office's business out of commission.

PEDRO THE PUNK POET (March 23).—The cast: Pedro (Jay C. Yorke); Landlady (Carey L. Hastings); Actress in Wild West Show (Frances Keyes).

Pedro was the only poet in Pumpkinville, and he was part of the program at every village entertainment. This was partly due to the fact that talent was scarce, and Pedro was always ready to recite some of his many masterpieces. Perhaps this explains why all his friends advised him to go to the Great City and become famous. Anyway, he harkened to their counsel—and went to town, intending to set it afire—poetically.

The town didn't burn up—it didn't even smoulder. Day by day Pedro found his stock of money growing smaller, until finally he was dead broke. He had no money for clothes or amusements, and had it not been for his fish-line he would have starved, for he was too proud to beg. But he hooked bottles of milk from adjoining window-sills, and when his landlady put a dog in his room to keep him out, he sold the dog to an actress in a wild west show, and was able to pay something on account of his board bill. Yes, poets are compelled to resort to all kinds of expedients.

An editor "went crazy" over his poems, so crazy that it looked for a time as if he were headed for an asylum, and a truckman hired him to write a poem to his sweetheart, but the girl threw the truckman down after she read the effusion, and the truckman made the poet "eat his words," an unpleasant thing when the words are written on stiff brown paper. All of which explains why Pedro went back to Pumpkinville, and why he is again the star feature at the village entertainments.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 26, Monterey, Cal.—"Keeping Up with the Joneses" (March 12).—Monterey, Cal., with its seventeen long miles of drive through the golden sunshine along the rock-bound shores of the Pacific, forms the subject for the Gaumont company's twenty-sixth number of the split reel scenic photography of American wonder spots. There are gorgeous views of the surf, pounding up against the barrier of rocks, of the glimmering ocean, of the wonderful cypress of Monterey, about which is written the quaint conceit that they floated from far-away Japan, since only here and in the land of the cherry bloom are they found. There is the home where Robert Louis Stevenson spent a number of his years. But the marvels of the picture, mostly, are those of the scenic and natural splendors of Monterey and its neighboring country. The second half of the reel is devoted to the doings of "Pa" McGinnis in his efforts to assist "Ma" and "Julie" in keeping up with the Joneses.

A detective who has been watching for "peeping Tom" thinks the father is the man he is after. Rube breaks in on the scene and takes the place of the errand boy in flirting with the butcher's wife. The butcher returns to find his wife gone with Rube, and gives chase with revolver in hand.

Rube and the butcher's wife go to a cafe to indulge in a little liquid refreshment. Their party is interrupted by the entrance of the enraged butcher, and another chase takes place. The butcher goes to Rube's home to avenge himself for Rube's attentions to his (the butcher's) wife, and Rube's wife joins in the chase, which leads to the bathhouse at the beach.

There are much diving and swimming, and a duel at the bottom of the tank. The argument between Rube and the butcher is settled by the intervention of the errand boy, and all is peace and happiness.

LOVE, DYNAMITE AND BASEBALLS (March 5).—The cast: A Baseball Pitcher (Jack Dillon); The Count (Arthur Moon); The Bride (Priscilla Dean); Her Father (Russell Powell). Directed by Jack Dillon.

Count Ferdinand Jasbeau, refuses to wait for his bride in spite of the pleadings of her father, who tries to convince the Count that the rain and floods are delaying her, which was the truth of the matter.

Through machinery trouble, Grace finds herself up to hubs in mud, and is assisted by a baseball pitcher who happens along in his Ford. While he is fixing the car, two crooks hold them up, and after being robbed, the baseball pitcher succeeds in not only overpowering the robbers, but also gets back his money and jewelry, which they took from him.

How the baseball pitcher fought a duel with baseballs and proved to the girl that he was worthy of her, and how he exposed the Count as a faker, and proved he was also a crook and an associate of the hold-up men, is told in a breezy manner, in this picture.

SIGNAL FILM CORP.

THE GIRL AND THE GAME (Chapter 12 "Buried Alive"—Two Parts—March 13). Seagrue's sale to Rhinelander of the Superstition Mine did not go through smoothly. When the news of the sale reached the minority stockholders at Oceanside, Seagrue was accused of underhanded work and a meeting was called at which Seagrue attempted to give an explanation. After a stormy session, Seagrue brought all arguments to a close by purchasing the outstanding stock.

Well pleased with his final arrangements with Seagrue, Rhinelander went out to the mine, where he was met by Helen and Storm; all three then went in to confer with the foreman of the mining gang. At this time, the foreman confessed to Rhinelander the information previously conveyed to Seagrue—that the vein had been picked out. Not easily discouraged, Rhinelander instructed the foreman to make an effort to pick up the rich vein at the most likely spot and the men went to work with a will. Looking into the tunnel, Helen noticed that the wall near the roof seemed to be weakening. The foreman, however, declared the roof safe and the men continued blasting their way toward the precious ore. Helen, outside the tunnel, busied herself with other matters.

Suddenly a crash attracted all attention to the tunnel, where a cave-in now raised a solid barrier. Rhinelander and Storm had been caught with the crew in the tunnel. Efforts were made to clear the opening, but in the nervous excitement nothing was accomplished. Helen was the first to regain her senses and directed the men to telephone for doctors while she raced to the Neighbor Mine for assistance. At the edge of the cliff she came upon the aerial ore carrier. Instantly she grasped the hook of the frail carriage, pulled the release, and she shot across the dangerous declivity from top to bottom.

Reaching the Neighbor Mine, she quickly obtained assistance for those imprisoned in Superstitution Mine. Seagrue was advised of the accident, but, for reasons best known to himself, did not care to visit the mine.

Meanwhile, Rhinelander and Storm were calm. Of the imprisoned men, none of them lost his head. They toiled unremittingly to get through the obstruction before them. In the foul air, one after another of the men sank down in exhaustion. With the organized effort of the relief gang, a small hole was soon opened through the obstructed entrance, and Rhinelander cried out for water. Helen heard the cry. The next moment a water bottle was pushed into Storm's hand, and the half conscious men revived.

As soon as the opening was large enough, Helen, with a rope tied around her waist, climbed into the tunnel and worked heroically to save the exhausted miners. Rhinelander steadfastly refused to leave the tunnel until everyone else had been passed through the opening.

As Rhinelander crawled through to light, Seagrue elbowed his way through the crowd to congratulate him, and was astounded at the news from Rhinelander's lips. While the men in the mine had a close call with death, the valuable ore vein had been re-located richer than before.

Storm dismissed the work crew, and as they filed away, he joined Helen and Rhinelander. Seagrue stood within the gloom of the tunnel. He had taken out his contract and was looking intently at it. From it, he seemed to gain some hopeful idea—for he smiled.

THE TWIN TRUNK MYSTERY (March 17).—The cast: Luke Sharpe (Billy Armstrong); Jim, his assistant (Tommy Hayes); Slim Pete (J. A. Howe); His wife (Mme. D'Orcy); E. Z. Marks (Allen Williams); His wife (Grace Gibson); His daughter (Mlle. Ottawa).

Their business of detecting having been nil Luke Sharpe and his assistant, Jim, are entirely without funds and are about to be ejected from their lodgings when a telegram from a neighboring chief of police arrives calling them into case. The message says that E. Z Marks, his wife and daughter are on a train bound for the famous Hot Springs and that in their wake follows Slim Pete and his wife, noted jewel thieves, who are intent upon purloining some precious stones which Marks carries in his trunk. Luke and Jim are instructed to capture the thieves.

The telegram reassuring the landlady that her rent will be forthcoming Luke and Jim are again happy and start on their mission. They disguise themselves as baggage smashers and go to the depot to meet the train on which the diamond thieves and their prospective victims are scheduled to arrive. Luke and Jim place themselves prominently in evidence when Pete and the Marks arrive and obtain from them the checks for their baggage, promising to bring the trunks to the hotel.

After a series of difficult manouvers they get the trunks into the hallway of the hotel just outside of the owner's rooms, and an ambitious and tip-loving porter carries them inside. Unintentionally he mixes them since the trunks look exactly alike, so that the Marks get Slim Pete's trunk, and vice versa.

Luke has suspected Marks of being Slim Pete and he takes the rich man to the baths to make certain of his suspicions. They prove unfounded, however, and Luke starts out to find another clue. He peeks through the key-hole of one of the doors and catches a man in the act of disguising himself with false whiskers. Of course he conjectures that the unknown man is Slim Pete, and he hurries to the hotel lobby to announce to the assembled guests that he is about to capture the notorious crook and his wife.

Meanwhile the real Slim Pete and his wife have not been idle. They enter Marks' room, take the trunk they find laying there, have it placed in an automobile and while away with it till they reach the country. Upon stopping to open it, however, they discover they have been tricked for the trunk they have is their own.

Luke and Jim, in the hotel lobby, are anxiously waiting behind big marble pillars for the bewhiskered man and his wife to leave their room. As they are seen to approach the assembled group holds its breath. Luke makes a flying leap, captures the man, and Jim gathers in the lady. The joy of capture is short-lived, for the man soon proves himself a detective and Luke and Jim are ejected from the place to the tune of rapidly striking boots.

MUSTANG.

The Titan Motion Picture Company is getting along well enough without Mr. Gordon, leading stockholder and general western manager, when that important personage unexpectedly drops in upon them, at Truckee. They are in Truckee taking "snow stuff" and are so busy that much as Monty, the producer, admirers Myrtle Manners, the leading lady, he cannot find the time even to go skating with her.

Mr. Gordon, however, finds the time to visit the Ice Palace, but being supercilious and officious fails to make friends. Buck Parvin joshes him, and Myrtle, to whom he takes an immediate fancy, openly snubs him, despite his high and mighty position. Ignoring Gordon's order to call and see him at his hotel, Monty follows their program and takes the company to Donner Lake the next morning, and everything goes well till Gordon comes. Then he commences to get in the way and things happen to him.

Monty and Myrtle rehearse a scene perfectly, but it does not please Gordon. Myrtle suggests that Gordon show them how, and he does. He takes advantage of the scene and attempts to kiss Myrtle and she brings the butt of a revolver down on his head. He falls into the river, through the ice, and comes up blowing ice cold bubbles. After many mishaps, he reaches New York and lodges a complaint.

While Seligman, the head of the company positively refuses to discharge Monty, he compromises by agreeing to let Myrtle go. While they are talking, the office boy announces that "Snow Stuff" is ready to run, and they go to the projecting room to see it. Seligman pronounces it fine. Gordon dissents, and while he is explaining why the film is no good, the operator runs twenty-six feet illustrating just how Mr. Gordon would do it. Dupree had taken it while Gordon was showing them how. It is needless to say that Seligman refuses to fire Myrtle after that, or to mention the fact that Gordon resigns as western manager.

When Monty hears about it, his voice does

BEAUTY.

CUPID AT COHN'S (March 22).—The cast: Rosie (Carol Halloway); Yetta (Dixie Stuart); Jeven (Rea Berger); Abe (Johnny Sheehan); Clerk to Abe (Dick Rosson). Directed by Archer McMackin.

Jeven runs a Kosher restaurant. He has two daughters, Yetta and Rose, the former a trifle old and stiff, the latter pretty and full of life. Jeven schemes with his wife to marry off Yetta first. Rose is in love, unknown to her father, with Abe Levee, a rising young businessman, but knowing her father's tendencies in the matter of marrying his older daughter first, she is backward about telling him of her love affair. But his pathetic pining that Yetta be married hurts Rose and she suggests to him that if she married and went away maybe some other fellow would take Yetta. Her father admonishes her not to think of such a thing. She informs Abe that for the present their love making is at an end.

Jeven decides he will call in Cohn, the matchmaker, and have him find a husband for Yetta. Cohn gets out his booklet of names and suggests Abe Levee would be a likely young fellow. This is overheard by Rose. Cohn suggests that if he is given a picture of Yetta he will take it up with Abe. They give him Yetta's picture in an envelope, which he puts in his hat, while he finds out further particulars. Yetta, out of sympathy for Rose, substitutes Rose's picture.

Cohn chases up Abe and asks him why he doesn't get married. Abe refuses to listen but Cohn forces the issue and tells Abe that if he will marry the girl in the picture her father will give him a thousand dollars. Abe looks at the picture and finds that it is his Rose. He informs Cohn that he would marry such a girl for nothing. Cohn leaves to inform Jeven to get ready for the marriage. Abe sends a shirtwaist from his stock addressed to "My Darling" which is delivered to Yetta. The match is considered sealed and Rose's heart is broken, thinking that Abe has forsaken her.

On the day of the wedding, Abe comes to the restaurant which is in gala attire for the affair, meets the family, and asks to see the bride. He is all consternation when Yetta is led out. Yetta explains secretly to him and tells him to run away with Rose and marry her. They make a getaway and are married by a justice of the peace. Returning to the waiting guests, Abe insists that Cohn should rectify his mistake by marrying Yetta. She is willing and he consents finally in consideration of the dowry.

THE BUBBLES AND THE BARBER (March 25).—The cast: Fidgetti (Orral Humphrey); Mrs. Bubbles (Gladys Kingsbury); Sophia, her daughter (Mary Talbot); Mr. Bubbles (W. J. Tedmarsh); Marriage Broker (Ward MacAllister); Customer (E. C. Watt); Waiter (John Gough). Directed by Nate Watt.

The Bubbles have grown rich on soap and their limousine is crested with a monogrammed bar of soap. Mrs. Bubbles has social aspirations and plans to marry their daughter, Sophia, to a title. She wins Bubbles' consent and he telephones to the International Marriage Bureau where the broker promises to produce a count by eight that night.

The temperamental tonsoralist, M. Fidgetti, bows his last customer out and is approached by the marriage broker, who proposes that he pass as a count. For a financial consideration, Fidgetti consents and goes to his hotel where he provides himself with a dress suit from the clothes line below his window, and stops at the wine room to celebrate his good fortune with a couple of friends.

He forgets his engagement with the Bubbles and they wait. Some of the guests play cards and sing and the "last customer" drowses and goes to sleep. Bubbles phones the broker, who rushes off to find Fidgetti's place closed, and in desperation, he grabs a waiter in a beanery and presses him into service. The waiter arrives and is accepted with some disappointment and misgiving by father and mother and Sophia, whose figure is her fortune and whose face is her misfortune.

Mrs. Bubbles is "for" the count despite his frayed appearance. Fidgetti finds the Bubbles' card in his pocket, wakes up, hitches his old nag head first to his wagon and starts at top speed for the Bubble mansion. He discovers the impostor through the window and while he is talking and gesticulating, Fidgetti manages to drop a blackhand warning into his hand which causes him to flee.

Fidgetti then makes his entrance and is eager to claim Sophia, whose elegant form he has seen through the window. She has fainted during the excitement and bending over her, he glimpses her face—too late. She comes to and clasps him frantically about the neck and he resigns himself to fate. The commotion wakens the "last customer" who identifies Fidgetti as the barber and Bubbles gives him the choice between Sophia and jail. Sophia faints again as Fidgetti is led away.

AMERICAN.

THE CODE OF HONOR (Three Parts—March 21).—The cast: Frank Marvin (Alfred Vosburgh); Ruth Chase (Estella Allan); Bob Chase (Frank Borzage); Moine Valpar (George Periolat); Zena, Niece of Valpar (Vivian Rich); Monte (Ward McAllister). Directed by Frank Borzage.

Captain Frank Marvin and Lieut. Bob Chase and army draftsmen in the Ordnance Department. Marvin is working on plans for a submarine that is expected to revolutionize warfare. One of the foreign governments is anxious to obtain the plans. Valpar, an agent of this government, attempts to bribe Frank but fails. Frank is in love with Bob's sister Ruth. Valpar, learns Bob's weakness is women, and inveigles into his scheme his niece, Zena. Bob becomes infatuated with Zena, and Zena puts Bob to the supreme test of his love. Although as she says she is engaged to another, she will flee with him providing he steals the submarine plans. He steals the plans and delivers them to Zena. She tells him she will be ready to go with him in one hour. When he returns at the end of that time, Zena has vacated her apartments. Bob realizes he has been tricked. In desperation he leaves a note for Ruth, confessing all and saying he is going to end his life.

Frank in the mean time has discovered the loss. Aware that he alone is responsible for the plans he sends a note to Ruth telling of their loss, and declaring he is going to die. When Ruth receives the note she rushes into Bob's room to obtain his assistance, and there finds a note that Bob left. Rushing to the telephone Ruth attempts to call up Frank. The line is busy. Zena during this time has delivered the plans to her uncle. They attempt to catch a train but miss it. There is not another train until morning and they take connecting rooms at a hotel. Zena realizes that she really loves Bob and pleads with her uncle to allow her to return the plans. When he scoffs at her entreaty, she grabs the plans and runs into her own room, locking the door, and imprisoning Valpar.

Frank has gone to the docks to commit suicide, but he determines to make a final search of the safe, thinking perhaps he might have misplaced the plans. Zena telephones to Frank's office, in hope of locating Bob. Her telephone call halts Bob's suicide, and he rushes from the office, leaving his revolver on Frank's desk. Arriving in his office, Frank again looks for the plans, but his search is futile. He sees the revolver and believes that Bob has learned from Ruth the loss of the plans and that Bob has invoked the code of honor of the army to save him from disgrace. Ruth dons one of Bob's uniforms and hastens to avert the tragedy, if possible. Bob reaches Zena just as Valpar breaks down the door connecting the two rooms. Valpar, seeing that the game is up, flees. As Zena and Bob embrace, Bob suddenly remembers leaving the revolver on Frank's desk. Knowing that he is bound to discover the loss of the plans and that in finding the revolver he will believe suspicion has been directed against him, he hurriedly returns to the barracks with Zena. Ruth in Bob's uniform is making her way to Frank's room, when she is jostled by an intoxicated soldier. Her hat falls off revealing her long hair. Quick explanations follow and Bob and Ruth hurry to Frank's office. Confessions and explanations are made, Frank forgives Bob, and the entire affair ends in two marriages.

MUTUAL MASTERPICTURE DE LUXE.

IN THE WEB OF THE GRAFTERS (Signal Film Corp.—5 parts—Mar. 13).—The cast: Ethel Drew (Edythe Sterling); Bruce Kerrigan (Norbert A. Myles); J. Howard Bellaire (Millard K. Wilson); Whitey, the dope (Francis J. MacDonald); Madam Adelaide (Louise Hutchinson). Directed by Murdock MacQuarrie. Scenario by Al. V. Jefferson.

Bruce Kerrigan, a member of the traffic police, is selected to act as a graft-collecting tool for Mat McGuire, a politician. While directing traffic at his corner one morning, Kerrigan becomes acquainted with the mayor's daughter, Ethel Drew, when her auto collides with another machine. Ethel requests her father to have "Officer 495" assigned for special duty as doorman at the Mayor's reception that night. While on duty at the reception, Kerigan captures Whitey, the dope, who enters the mayor's study to steal evidence which the mayor has secured regarding the operation of gambling houses and other vice centers.

Later Kerrigan is caught in the act of collecting graft, and when he will not divulge the name of the man higher up, he is discharged from the police force. Assuming the disguise of a crippled tramp, he gets employment as a janitor in McGuire's political club, where he is able to steal the evidence secured by Whitey from the mayor's home.

Ethel is kidnapped and carried to the house of Madam Adelaide, where the mayor is lured to be enmeshed in a scandal. Kerigan discovers the fate of Ethel, and hastens to the house, where he finds her locked in a room, and escapes with her from the house. Upon the mayor's arrival, he is lured to a room in which he is locked with a woman, to be discovered there in a few minutes later by the ring of grafters.

Returning to his home, the mayor finds Kerrigan and his daughter. He wrongly accuses Kerrigan, and orders him from the house. Kerrigan meets Ethel outside and she persuades him to go to her father to explain his and her presence at the Madam's. The mayor will not listen and Kerrigan is again ordered to leave the house.

A hand is seen to enter between the curtains of the mayor's study, firing a shot which kills the mayor. Ethel finds her father dead. Kerrigan climbs in through the window at the sound of the shot, and the two are in the room with the mayor's body, when police arrive at the summons of the butler.

Although Ethel tries to confess the murder, Kerrigan is accused by Whitey. Kerrigan escapes from the room, and assumes a disguise to ferret out the murderer. During a secret meeting with Ethel, Kerrigan's disguise is penetrated by Whitey, who learns that Kerrigan is to deliver convicting evidence to Ethel at evening, and Whitey, awaits in ambush, and when Kerrigan arrives, they knock him out and kidnap Ethel. Later, Kerrigan follows them to an outlying house, where he rescues Ethel, who has saved the documents.

Between them, Ethel arranges a plan whereby McGuire, Bellaire, and Whitey are to be gathered together at the rooms of the clairvoyant. Kerrigan arranges for Ethel to take the place of the seeress, and through arousing the superstitions of the weak-minded Whitey, she forces him to confess, and throw the blame for the origination of the act upon McGuire.

As the picture fades out, the hands of Kerrigan and Ethel clasp over the crib of a baby, and the chevronned sleeves of Kerrigan show his reinstatement to position and honor.

A BIRD OF PREY (Thanhouser—Five Parts—March 16).—The cast: The Miner (John Lehnberg); Their Child (later) (Madeline Fairbanks); The Easterner (Robert Whittier).

In a little Western mining camp a man works day after day at his claim to win riches for his wife, whom he adores. The woman is dissatisfied with her lot in life and regards her husband as an impractical dreamer. Where the wife is young, attractive and discontented, the temtper, sooner or later, appears. And he arrives in the person of a young Easterner, who comes to the mining town in search of fortune. The miner welcomes the new arrival and gives him work on his claim. Gold is discovered, and the newcomer is made a partner in the claim, and sent to register it in the name of his benefactor and himself.

The miner does not know that the young Easterner has paid attentions to the wife, fanning her discontent, and telling her how happy she would be if she would only divorce her husband and go away with him. In the mining town the man from the East registers the claim in his name alone, and sells it at once to the proprietor of a dance hall. This man, with a number of hired thugs, goes to the mining claim and take possession, driving off the indignant husband. When the miner demands by what right he dares to seize the claim, the dance hall owner shows him the registry deed and a receipt from the Easterner.

Then, for the first time, the truth dawns upon the miner. He runs to his cabin to tell his wife the news, and finds her gone. A note tells him that she has left with the other man and intends to secure a divorce and marry him. Stopping at a near-by town, the fugitives are overtaken by the angry husband. A fierce fight ensues. A blow from the Easterner's pistol butt sends him to the ground unconscious. Then the wife and the Easterner board a train for the East, while the unconscious miner is carried back to his cabin.

In the East the wife secures a divorce from her husband and marries the other man. As the years pass the banker's wife learns her husband's true character. The desire for revenge has become almost an obsession with the miner, and when he is able to dispose of the timber lands he owns he leaves for the East. When he arrives in New York he discovered that his former partner is visiting a friend in the Adirondacks, and there he goes and hires a cabin where he can watch the banker and plan his vengeance.

The opportunity comes soon. The banker's host gives a handsome entertainment to his guests. While the gayety it at its highest, a stern-faced man lurks outside the house. Twice he raises his rifle to fire, and each time stays his hand, for if he pressed the trigger he would have killed his wife. As the banker stands alone, a groom sees the figure with the leveled rifle and springs upon him. The muscular miner easily overpowers the servant and escapes.

Several days later the banker's little daughter rides off through the snow-covered mountains. Night is falling when the riderless horse returned to the stable. The miner had found the child, sick and delirious, in the snow, had cared for her and decided to bring her up in ignorance of her real parentage. The former miner prospers. Temtped to recoup his losses by using the funds intrusted to his care, the banker is arrested and sentenced to prison.

Several years later, the former banker's wife is sent to a wealthy home where she was told that a housekeeper was wanted. In the owner of the handsome mansion she recognized her first husband. Gradually the heiress becomes attached to the housekeeper. The convicted banker escapes from prison and in his desperation appeals to his wife. She aids him. As he leaves he is seized. In the struggle that follows he is killed. The girl never learns that her father is slain by officers of the law, and the true story of her life is never told to her, for her foster father marries his housekeeper.

OVERALLS (American—Five Parts—March 18).—The cast: Herbert Drew (William Stowell); Harrison Warren (Perry Banks); Walter Daniels (Warren Ellsworth); Bettina Warren (Rhea Mitchell); Widow Malone (Sylvia Ashton); Peggy Malone (Estelle Allen); Flap-Jacks (George Ahren); Buck Finnegan (Jack Prescott); Casey (George Bailey). Directed by Jack Halloway.

The plot of the story is woven around Herbert Drew and Bettina Warren, the orphaned daughter of a wealthy magnate, the heiress of his property. Over her, as her guardian, is Walter Daniels, an unscrupulous young lawyer, who determines that he will marry her and keep the money in his control.

After the days of her mourning for her father, Bettina decides to go West to vist the construction camp. Daniels goes with her. When they arrive in the crude little Western town, Daniels is disgusted and is all for going back, but the capricious Bettina determines to stay.

The Easterner enters the sitting-hoom of the Widow Malone, the boarding-house keeper, where her daughter, Peggy, is busy scrubbing the floor. The girl accidentally splashes some ditry water on his trousers. In a rage he kicks over the pail, whereupon the irate young Peggy attacks him with her scrub brush. At this auspicious moment young Drew, the construction boss, enters and forces the dude to apologize.

On the other hand, Bettina wins the heart of every one but Peggy, who realizes at once the great difference in their stations. When Daniels learns that Drew is the construction boss, he fires him and engages in his place the good-for-nothing Irishman, named Buck Finnegan. Bettina protests, but Daniels impolitely reminds her that he is manager until she is of age. The change causes much dissatisfaction among the men. Finnegan's band starts a riot. Bettina is caught in a riot, and is rescued from harm by the deposed boss.

Soon after, the Widow Malone decides to give a dance in honor of Bettina. Finnegan's crowd come to break it up. After the fight, Bettina demands that Daniels reinstate Drew. He refuses. But realizing down underneath that there may be real danger in it, he conspires with Peggy to break it up. The next day the widow's daughter appears with her mother's ring on her finger, which she pretends is the gift of Drew.

Believing that the former boss loves Peggy, Bettina tries to occupy herself. But he again shows his cowardice and his caddishness by deserting her in a threatening danger from which young Drew bravely rescues her. The Easterner arranges that Finnegan's men shall "spread-eagle" his rival between two saplings.

When Drew does not apenar at the boarding-house, both Peggy and Bettina are seized with fear for his safety. They come together in their common anxiety, and inveigle one of Peggy's suitors, Flap Jacks, to go and search for him. He and his friends come upon him under the saplings which hold up the fainting form of the young foreman.

In his delirium, Drew repeats again and again the name of the woman he loves. Peggy confesses to Bettina the truth about her ring.

Drew is still diffident about speaking of his love to Bettina, and if it had not been that Flap Jacks, happy in Peggy's love, had not assured him that "clothes don't cut no figure a-tall and that's why Cupid don't follow the fashion," the picture migth not have ended so happily for all as it does.

a FEDERAL sign on your theater means a crowd at your box office

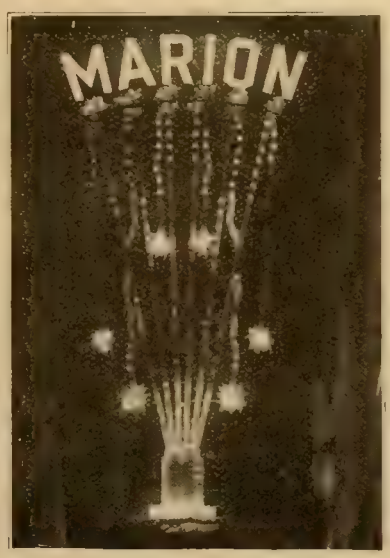
Good programs and good advertising are the life of any motion picture theater. No need for us to argue that. You may be presenting good programs, but are you advertising them the way you should—the way you could if you had a FEDERAL Electric Sign over your door?

you will find FEDERAL signs on leading theaters everywhere

The most successful operators of motion picture theaters—men who control three, four and five theaters in a single city—place implicit confidence in the drawing power of FEDERAL Electric Signs. They know better than to hide their light under a bushel.

the sign outside represents the show inside to the public

The movie-going public has come to recognize that the best programs are to be found in the modern theaters which make use of effective brilliant electric signs. The FEDERAL Electric Sign is the stamp of the alert motion picture theater proprietor, as well as a royal invitation of welcome to the passing public.



mr. Reynard wrote us:

Mr. E. F. Reynard, President of the Marion Photoplay Company, writes us: "On one of my trips West, I saw an unusually attractive theatrical display on the Majestic Theater in Cedar Rapids. The flashing operation was a stunner—positively the best I have ever seen. I made up my mind that a company that could build a sign like that could build one for me. So when I found you had manufactured that sign, I placed my order with you for one having a similar operation. That sign has been a winner for us in every way and your company has certainly treated us right."

in luxury as the favorite of a high-born Indian Rajah. Zoe is apparently contented with the jewels and affluence showered upon her until a young American artist, Craig Pitcairn, traveling in India, enters her life. Zoe gets up a flirtation with Craig and allows him to call upon her. Their friendship soon ripens into love. The Rajah, suspicious of the pair, sets one of his servants, Singh, to spy upon Zoe in her apartment. Singh is present behind some portiers during a love scene between Zoe and Craig, and when Craig has gone, Zoe discovers the presence of some one behind the curtain. Thinking it to be the Rajah and mad with sudden passion, Zoe stabs the supposed Rajah and then rushes from the room. On the stairway she meets the Rajah, alive and well. With him she returns to the room. Singh's stabbed body is discovered and the Rajah tells her that unless she marries him the next day, he will have her tried for the murder of his servant.

Zoe decides to flee to America. She is accompanied by a faithful Indian servant, Khula. She leaves behind her a note for Craig, telling him to follow her at once. After a bitter scene with the Rajah, Craig does so. In America Zoe and Craig are married. The warmth of her husband's love and the intimate appreciation of his character through her associations with him, brings to the heart of Zoe, the realization of her own unworthiness as his wife. Craig has married her without any knowledge of her past. Zoe decides that Edith, the daughter of her cousin Mary, is perfectly fitted for the honor and duties of Craig's wife and plans to disappear from Craig's life before her happiness shall be shattered.

Leaving a note to be opened in case of her death, in her writing desk, Zoe causes it to appear that she is burned in the fire resulting from an explosion in the automobile shed at the Pitcairn home. Edith who is not the sweet young girl Zoe has fancied her, but a greedy, designing young woman, finds the note and contrives to have it reach Craig.

In the meantime Zoe, accompanied by her servant Khula, has gone into the secret chambers of the old home, waiting for an opportunity to disappear from the country. She has left her valuable jewels as an heritage to Edith. Celeste, a model posing for Craig loves him and is jealous of Edith. She causes suspicion to be directed towards Edith that points to the murder of Zoe, and not death by burning. Edith is arrested but in the investigations attending the accusations, Celeste's share of the trouble is discovered, and Celeste, Craig and Edith are arrested. The Rajah, intent upon revenging himself upon Zoe arrives from India at the same time. A mob from the neighborhood of Zoe's home, aroused at the rumors of foul play, make an attempt upon Craig's life, accusing him of the killing of his wife. With the mob at his very heels, Zoe, who has been wounded in her struggle to reach her husband, appears at the last moment, clearing Craig of the charge. The rajah's threats are made harmless, by Khula's dramatic insistence that he killed Singh. Zoe assured that her attempted sacrifice has been wrong, finds happiness in Craig's affections.

THE BRUISER (American—5 Parts—March 23).—The cast: "Big Bill" Brawley (William Russell); Fen Bernham (Charlotte Burton); "Modest Tim" (George Ferguson); Norma Kenwick (Lizette Thorne); Manson Kenwick (Roy Stewart); Charley, Fen's Brother (Pete Morrison); Munsey, Mgr. (Al Fordyce); Butler (Eric Jacobs). Directed by Charles Bartlett.

Big Bill Brawley is a longshoreman by occupation and a prize fighter by inclination. Bill's sweetheart is Fen Bernham, a working girl. Manson Kenwick is head of the Kenwick Shipping Company, which was left him by his father. Norma, his sister, an idle society girl, is as anxious as he to sell the business because society is beginning to call them "The Dock Wallopers." Bill Brawley is elected chairman of the employe's committee which is seeking an increase in wages. Kenwick, through his manager, threatens Bill with the blacklist if he does not cease agitation for increase. Bill defies them.

An International Shipping Corporation, which is about to purchase the Kenwick Shipping Company, declines to close the deal until the labor dispute is settled. Tim Dirgan, one of the longshoremen, is secretly employed by Kenwick in an attempt to discredit Bill with the men. When Dirgan fails, Kenwick seeks to placate the men by establishing club rooms for them and pretending an interest in their affairs. Norma endeavors to influence Bill. As time passes and Bill is unable to obtain Kenwick's signature to a wage agreement, the men believe Bill is losing interest in the fight. They begin to listen to Dorgan, who promises to get them what they ask.

A prize fight for the championship of the water front is about to be fought. Bill, being the white-hope of the Kenwick men, is urged by the longshoremen to enter the bout. He refuses, saying that he promised Miss Kenwick not to fight. Fen fears she is losing Bill. She appeals to the other woman, Norma, who scoffs at her pleas. When Fen remonstrates with Bill about his interest in the Kenwick girl, he declares he is doing it for a purpose; but, Fen is unconvinced. It is arranged that on the night of the big fight, Norma, together with other stockholders of the company, is to have Bill at her home for a reception. During this time, Dirgan is to present to the men an agreement drawn by Kenwick, which presumably, but does not, give the men an increase. While Bill is realizing how much he is out of place with these society people, Dirgan obtains the signatures of the men to the agreement.

The fighter for the Kenwick side sprains his ankle and the Kenwick's are in a fair way to lose the championship of the waterfront. Fen hears this and goes to make a final appeal to Bill to win the battle for the men. In the meantime, Bill, walking restlessly about the Kenwick house, sees Manson Kenwick and Tim Dirgan in conference. It begins to dawn on Bill that he has been tricked. Dirgan flees. Kenwick locks the agreement in his desk. In a battle of intellect versus will power, Bill forces Kenwick to give up the agreement. As he forces Kenwick to sign another agreement, the society people break into the room. Having accomplished his purpose, Bill denounces Kenwick, and Norma as well as the stockholders who brought him there to laugh and sneer at him. Fen arrives in time to hear this and learns that Bill loved her all the time. Bill arrives in time to enter the ring for the Kenwick longshoremen and in a hard fought battle not only wins the championship of the waterfront, but regains the flagging confidence of the men.

THE HIDDEN LAW (Centaur—Five Parts—March 25).—The cast: John Carlton (William Clifford); Henry Richter, producer and theatrical magnate (Frederick Montague); Carl Holmes, a homesteader of the far West (Robert Kenyon); Mildred Holmes, his wife (Mae Adams); Wanda Holmes, the little child of the Holmes (Doris Baker); Princess of the Mountain (Margaret Gibson; Kara, a Squaw (Marie Garette); Dick Arliss, a young aristocrat (John Oaker); Mrs. Arliss, his aristocratic mother (Pauline Williams). Written by Theodosia Harris.

John Carlton is a writer and genius. After superhuman effort against the obstacles of poverty he finishes his play. Being too poor to copyright it he submits it to a producer and, in the stress of the moment, accepts as payment a hundred dollars. The play is the talk of the hour and Carlton, knowing of its immense drawing powers, and being discouraged by the return of his book from the publisher with the usual note of no commercial value, he goes to the producer of the play and demands a royalty. The producer taunts him with the lack of copyright and considers the episode closed. Carlton, grasps a roll of bills from the table and attacks the manager. He is arrested and sentenced to six months in jail.

When he emerges from his imprisonment his genius has died within him and in its place is a hatred of mankind. He makes his way to remote wilds. Here he comes upon a tragedy: the death of a woman, far from a doctor's service, and the death of her husband, who has been going for a doctor and has encountered wild animals. Carlton finds that he cannot desert a little seven year old child that is left and, taking the squaw, the child's only companion, and the child, he presses on to be farther away from the haunts of men but not alone.

Ten years pass and the girl has grown to womanhood. Carlton has built a hut and has brought from civilization many evidences of his taste and culture. With a sort of insanity he guards his paradise from the invasion of men and breaks the law of man ruthlessly. While away on one of his mysterious journeys a young aristocrat, who has been hunting big game, is wounded by a stray shot and saved from death by the young princess of the mountains who comes upon him just as a puma is about to attack him. With the squaw she gets him to retreat. The friends of the hunter give him up for dead and leave the district. Carlton has now to return and find in the girl a love for the youth which he himself has begun to covet. With the added hatred of mankind to the jealousy of love, he determines to shoot the man but comes upon a tryst, and in the face of the girl he reads the story of her heart. He discloses his career to the young man, who, finding himself unable to overcome his love for her, exacts a promise that he—Carlton—will never see the girl again after he—the young hunter—makes the girl his wife. The girl, horrified to find the man she has idolized as her father, a bandit and a thief, turns with relief to her lover to be taken away from his neighborhood.

And so after seeing them married he turns back to the retreat and the light goes out of his life. There seems nothing but death left but the hidden law is working even for him, as it has exacted toll from him. He reads in an old newspaper the story of an unwritten genius, whose book has set the world aflame and the royalties of which await the author, should he ever be found. This strange trick of fate is due to the fact that his old landlady, of former years, has picked up the book he supposed that he had left burning, and has herself submitted it, not claiming to be the author. Thus through the years he has been in his proper status in society without knowing it. Love conquers the heart of the girl and she insists upon returning to bid her foster father a more loving farewell. So in his darkest hour he learns the lesson of truth and allows himself to be persuaded to go back to the world he has deserted.

a small schooner already frozen solid in the ice. Some highly interesting pictures are shown of the Yakuts, a tribe which exists in the eastern part of Siberia. These hardy fellows exist mainly by hunting and maintain cabins on the shooting grounds, where they go during the hunting season. The fishing colony along the banks of the Kolyma is also of more than passing interest. This is inhabited exclusively by Russians who have been banished to Siberia for political crimes. Much has been written of the political exiles of the Czar's government, and they are pictured in the life they have been forced to live.

SOME VIEWS OF SINGAPORE (British Straits Settlements) (Pathe—March 18).—On the same reel as the foregoing.—This important town of the British Straits Settlements is interestingly pictured in this release. Singapore is the commercial center of the Straits Settlements and as such carries on an enormous trade. Many and beautiful are the engineering feats performed there by British engineers. The bridges are probably the most noteworthy achievements along these lines, and the Gavenah and Anderson spans are of especial interest. Quaint Malay villages, always interesting to our Occidental eyes, are also shown.

THE RED CIRCLE (Episode No. 14 and last installment, "Judgment Day"—Two Parts—Balboa—March 18).—After being bailed out by Mary, June and the faithful nurse, exiled from home by Mrs. Travis, find refuge in a small apartment. Here the spirit of "Circle" Jim Borden appears to June and urges her to stamp out the curse of the Circle by the only sure means—will power. June determines to fight off the curse as he has suggested. Lamar urges her to jump her bond and flee, but she refuses, and Gordon offers his services as her counsel. Meanwhile, the Farwell employees declare a strike because of the curtailing of their bonuses, and attack Farwell. Unnerved by their attacks, he consents to Gordon to clear the latter's name of the embezzlement charge, but declares he will prosecute June for the theft of the papers. Tod Drew wires the Chief of Police that he has a charge against the Red Circle lady, and George Grant, the loan shark, prepares to press his charge of theft against her.

At the trial, Mrs. Travis dramatically becomes reconciled with June, and the men whom she benefited by her benevolent crimes make such a demonstration that the Judge suspends sentence, although June had been found guilty, and she is released in custody of her foster mother. Mary testifies that the Circle has not appeared on the defendant's hand in two weeks, and June is confident that she has conquered the curse. She then surrenders herself to Lamar's waiting love and another circle appears on her hand—but it is a gold one, with a diamond solitaire.

THE VILLAGE BLACKSMITH (Keystone—Two Parts—March 12).—The cast: Hank Mann, Vivian Edwards, Glen Cavender, Reece Gardner, Tom Kennedy and Polly Moran.

Vivian and Reece are in love but are separated through the conspiracy of Hank Mann, a disreputable lawyer, and Glen Cavender, the girl's guardian, who has been stealing money that rightfully belongs to her. At last she thinks that her sweetheart is untrue to her and she goes to ride with Mann, who has discovered the guardian's peculations. They stop at a blacksmith shop to have a shoe fixed and Vivian in entranced with the strength of the burly smith. After they depart her horse runs away and as it heads toward the shop Kennedy rushes out and rescues her. His conquest is soon complete and she goes away with a horseshoe nail bent around her finger by Tom. He is invited to a dinner in her home, and there his lack of breeding makes her realize her mistake. Meanwhile Reece, who had been imprisoned by the conspirators, is released during the fight which follows an attempt to eject Tom and his father. Polly, the blacksmith's former sweetheart, persuades him by force that he should return to her. Reece and Vivian are reunited and the conspirators confounded.

THE VILLAGE VAMPIRE (Keystone—Two Parts—March 12).—This picture was originally scheduled for release during the week of March 5. A story of it can be found on page 1718 of March 11 issue.

MARTHA'S VINDICATION (Fine Arts—Five Parts—March 19).—The cast: Norma Talmadge, Seena Owen, Tully Marshall, Ralph Lewis, Charles West, William Hinckley, Josephine Crowell, Francis Carpenter, George Stone, Alice Knowland, Alberta Lee, Edwin Harley, George Pearce and Porter Strong.

Martha and Dorothea are devoted girl friends, Dorothea the weaker relying in times of trouble on Martha, who is always willing to accept the other's burdens. Thus it is that Dorothea, when the man whom she had loved so much that she had given him her all is killed in an automobile accident before he can keep his promise to marry her, goes to Martha. The two girls go away to a refuge in the country, and when a boy is born Martha accepts the responsibility for placing the baby with her old nurse and thereby saving Dorothea from disgrace.

In a hotel, where Martha stays with the child, she is seen by an unscrupulous man named Sell Hawkins. Hawkins is the husband of a woman who runs a boarding house for children whose parents want to get rid of them. It happens later that the house is raided through Martha's instigation and one of the lodgers is adopted by her. Forced to find new ways to make a living Sell and his wife worm their way into the good graces of the minister of the church of which Martha is a member. Dorothea and Deacon Hunt, whose wife she now is, are also members of this church.

Angered by criticism of his wife and himself, Sell declares that there are worse sinners in the church than they. He knows that Martha is innocent of the charge that he makes, but he is determined to be revenged for her activity in putting his wife's house out of business. In her trouble Martha sends for her fiance, John. He hears her story and forces from her the information that it was Dorothea's child for whom she was seeking a home.

Dorothea is deaf to his plea that she tell the truth and save Martha's reputation, and a night is set for trial of Martha before the congregation. Meanwhile Dorothea, who has brought her child to a house where she can see him frequently, orders that he be taken out of town and promises to go to an obscure park and say goodby. At the hour when the trial is reaching a climax she endeavors to leave the church, but is halted by John, who openly charges that she and not Martha should be on trial.

Weary of waiting, the old nurse and her husband had gone along in a taxicab with the boy. A speeding motor truck runs down the smaller vehicle and the boy is badly hurt. Picking him up, the old nurse runs to the church with him, arriving just as Dorothea is cringing before the loud charges of Martha's fiance. The mother sees them as they enter the church, rushes from the platform and clasps her boy in her arms.

The truth comes out and through Martha's pleading Deacon Hunt forgives his wife for keeping her secret and the congregation gives thanks that a wrong has been righted in Martha's case and that a shadow has been lifted from Dorothea.

THE MORAL FABRIC (Kay-Bee—Five Parts—March 19).—A description of this release was published on page 1896 of last week's issue. This subject was originally slated for release during the week of March 12. "Bullets and Brown Eyes," a five-part Kay-Bee subject, was substituted.

THE BLINDNESS OF LOVE (Rolfe Photoplays, Inc.—Five Parts—March 6).—The cast: Joseph Wilton (Julius Steger); Robert Wilton (George Le Guere); Grace Maynard (Grace Valentine); Aubrey Maynard (Edgar L. Davenport); Herbert Graham (Walter Hitchcock); Molly (Maud Hill); George Lennan, foreman for Wilton (Chas. F. Gotthold); Leeds, a faithful clerk (Harry Neville). Directed by Charles Horan. Scenario by Harry C. Hoyt.

Joseph Wilton is a thrifty German and an expert piano maker, who through his industry has built up a small factory and acquired considerable money. His whole life and further ambitions are centered on his son, Bob, whom he has entered in a big university. His only daughter, Molly, has taken the place of her mother in the home, since Mrs. Wilton's death.

Bob is carried away by college life, and begins to feel embarrassed over his father's humble life and surroundings. He falls under the influence of Herbert Graham, a suave society leech and college mate, who inveigles him into drinking, gambling and a life of profligacy. Bob is induced to draw on his father for large amounts, on the excuse that he needs the money for expenses at college.

The blindness of the father's love for his son is emphasized when he insists on attending a football game, where his son is the hero of the hour. Bob practically denies his father in the presence of his friends on the campus. Soon afterward Bob's continued escapades cause him to be expelled from college. Graham induces Bob to take him home with him, hoping to get an opportunity to swindle his father. They arrive and explain that they have been granted several extra weeks for the Christmas holidays.

Graham induces the elder Wilton to finance a small bank for himself and Bob. They are popular and succeed from the start. But Graham indulges in many wild-cat speculations, and the bank is ruined. In a run on the bank both narrowly escape bodily injury. Graham commits suicide. Bob decides to face the disaster, but after hearing Aubrey Maynard, the father of Grace Maynard to whom he is engaged, denounce him in the presence of his own father, he decides to leave, as he has borrowed money from Grace when the bank was first in trouble, and her father threatens him with imprisonment as a swindler. He leaves her a note, saying he will return when he has made a man of himself, and can make good his obligations.

Molly, his sister, is in love with George Lennan, and their advice to the elder Wilton to halt Bob in his early profligacy has resulted in the aged piano manufacturer ordering Molly from home. After Bob's departure, Wilton, who has lost his entire fortune in his son's failure, in an effort to make good with his son's creditors, takes up his abode in the slums, ekeing out an existence by tuning pianos.

In a distant city, Bob starts life over and steadily rises to a position of trust and importance. He is promoted to be general manager of the New York office of the big concern in which he has made his success. Upon his return to New York, his sister Molly, who has married Lennan, has started to search for her father. She succeeds in locating him the very day that Bob returns. There is a happy reunion, including Bob's fiancee and a little four-year-old grandson, the child of Molly, whom the older Wilton sees for the first time.

LOVELY MARY (Columbia Pictures Corp.—Five Parts—March 13).—The cast: "Lovely Mary" Lane (Mary Miles Minter) Claiborne Ogilvie Lane (Frank De Vernon); Peter Nelson (Russell Simpson); Oscar Nelson (Schuyler Laud); Wade Dempster (Fred. Tidmarsh); Aunt Becky (Myra Brooks); Uncle Joe (Harry Blakemore); Roland Manning (Thomas Carrigan). Directed by Edgar Jones. Written by Richard Barry.

In a little Florida town, not far from the Everglades lives Mary Lane. She is the last female descendent of her branch of the Lane family. A short distance away lives the last male descendant in the person of Claiborne Ogilvie Lane. He is shiftless, lazy and a hard drinker. Among the natives Mary is known as "Lovely Mary" Lane. She is only a girl, but having to do things for herself, as her parents are dead and she is living with two old colored retainers, Aunt Becky and Uncle Joe, she is wise beyond her years.

Wade Dempster, a land speculator from the North, appears in the town. He proceeds to fall in love with Mary Lane. At about the same time Roland Manning comes to town. He represents large real estate interests in the North, which are seeking to buy up valuable lands in the Everglades. At the present time the land is worth little but the State is draining the swamps and making them the most fertile in the state.

Owing to a youthful promise, Mary Lane is engaged to Oscar Nelson, the son of Peter Nelson. Roland meets Mary and the two are attracted to each other. They ride over the land owned by Mary and Roland tells her frankly that the land is valuable. His attentions arouse the jealousy of Oscar, who advises Roland to leave before there is trouble.

At the hotel Roland tells his firm by wire that the land is valuable and advises them to make a large initial payment. He rings for a boy to get the telegram and about the same time Wade Dempster rings for a boy to take his wire, which is to the people he represents telling them that the land is valueless. He hopes to get it for himself. The boy collects Roland's telegram and goes to Wade's room. Wade sees the wire and destroys it and substitutes his own and gives him a letter. The boy thinks he called on account of the letter and believes he has Roland's telegram, hence pays no attention.

The next day at the court house Roland gets valuable information by looking over the deeds. At about the same time Wade offers Claiborne a small sum for the lands. Claiborne feels that he can sell them, as his interest is equal to Mary's share. He needs the money and accepts. Claiborne is intoxicated. Peter Nelson enters about this time and tells Wade that there must be something queer about the business transaction, if he has to get Claiborne Ogilvie Lane drunk to carry it through. He sees the check in Claiborne's hand. He takes it and a strugle ensues in which Peter is killed and the check torn to pieces. Oscar sees all this through the window. Wade makes his escape, taking all of the torn check as he thinks. Manning enters to try and secure an option on the land from Claiborne. He finds Claiborne intoxicated and Peter seemingly dead drunk. He picks up the revolver as the people outside, having heard the shot, enter. Roland is arrested, tried and convicted and sentenced to hard labor, according to the statutes of Florida.

Oscar meanwhile goes to Wade and tells what he knows. Wade gives him money to hush it up There are no State prisons in Florida and the convicts are placed out fixing the State roads. In one of these gangs is Roland.

Mary Lane sees Roland, and loving him and still believing in his innocence, decides to try and get a commutation of his sentence. She appeals to the Governor, who tells her that he cannot help her. He suggests that under the Florida laws, however, she can hire him for her own personal work, if she can find some one to go on the bond. This gives her an idea. She gets Wade, who is only too pleased to assist her, to go on a bond. Roland is freed and forced to work for Mary Lane. Roland, however, never presumes upon her good nature and is content to do the work allotted.

Uncle Joe overhears Claiborne Lane tell Wade that he will sign the deeds to the land the following morning at the office of an attorney. He tells Roland this and they prepare a plan to foil the men. Uncle Joe provides a suit for Roland who hurries away early to the court house. As Claiborne Lane and Wade are preparing the deeds Roland enters and orders them to stop. He tells them that under the original Spanish grants the land cannot be sold without the consent of the eldest suriving member of the Lane family, on the female side as well as the eldest surviving member on the male side. Wade is foiled but demands that Roland be arrested as he has no right to be there. Mary Lane then enters and tells them all that Roland is acting for her. Wade is surprised and discovers, that he has gone on the bond of Roland, his hated rival. He withdraws his bond.

Oscar meanwhile discovers that a piece of the check, given to Claiborne by Wade in the home the day of the fight has fallen under a rug. He holds this over Wade's head. Wade is furious. He strikes Oscar and knocks him senseless. When Oscar recovers consciousness, he determines to make Wade suffer. Wade is arrested as he is about to make his get-a-way. Oscar's story and the fragment of the check prove Roland's innocence and Wade's guilt. Roland and "Lovely Mary" are united.

WORLD-EQUITABLE.

THE UNPARDONABLE SIN (Shubert—Five Parts—March 13).—The cast: Julia Landis (Helen Fulton); Maë Forsythe (Lila Hayward Chester); Walter Norman (Holbrook Blinn); Richard Grant (William A. Norton); John Royce (Charles D. Mackay); James Harker (Walter D. Greene). Director, Barry O'Neill.

Walter Norman, a wealthy member of the smart set of a small city, becomes an habitual inebriate. His best friend, Richard Grant, makes every effort to bring Walter to his senses, but has no influence until one night, when Norman, under the influence of liquor, attacks James Harker during a party at a fashionable restaurant.

Grant takes Norman away on his yacht, and succeeds in curing him of all desire to drink. Norman takes up a new life in New York and becomes socially popular and successful in business. He falls in love with Julia Landis who considers drinking to excess an unpardonable sin. She returns Norman's love, thereby arousing the intense jealousy of John Royce, a successful Wall Street man. In the meantime Harker has married the girl over whom he and Norman quarreled, and has come to New York to raise funds for a questionable business enterprise. He meets Royce in a business way, and at a reception discovers Norman and his fiancee and learns the reason for Royce's hatred for Norman.

From Harker, Royce learns of Norman's former indulgence in drink. He promises Harker to back his enterprise if he will get Norman drunk and bring him before Julia, knowing that she would break the engagement if she ever saw Norman in such a condition. Harker succeeds in getting Norman to take the first drink he has had since the sea voyage. With the first drink Norman's weakness returns, and Harker parades him before Julia in a drunken condition.

Julia breaks her engagement to Norman, who plunges into the wildest dissipation until, money gone and friendless, he is forced into the streets to make a pitiful living as best he can. Royce at length prevails on Julia to marry him. He is blackmailed from time to time by Harker, who threatens to tell Julia the trick by which Royce and he shamed Norman before her.

Norman learns of the trick played upon him and inspired by revenge decides to reform. Under another name he gambles on a careful system and wins. With his winnings he goes into Wall Street and steadily piles up his capital until he becomes a formidable figure in the market. He then turns his financial guns on Royce and brings him to the verge of failure.

Julia at length overhears a conversation between Royce and Harker and learns how Norman was tricked by the two plotters. Infuriated, she seeks out Norman, pledges her love to him. Norman tells Julia to return to her home and forgive Royce, and in turn permits Royce to recover from the financial trap in which he has caught him.

Desperate for money, and maddened by Royce's final rejection of his demands, Harker waylays Royce and shoots him. On account of the known enmity between Royce and Norman the latter is accused of the crime, brought to trial and convicted. He is sentenced to die, but at the last moment Harker's wife discovers that it was her husband who shot Royce and gives the news to MAN AND HIS ANGEL (Triumph—Five Parts—March 13).—The cast: Sonia Demitri (Jane Grey) Paul Demitri (Willard Deshielle); Schuyler (Edward MacKay); Arthur Sutton (Robert Lee Hill); David Tryne (Henri Bergman); Kitty Fish (Mayme Kelso). Directed by Burton King.

Sonia Demitri is the daughter of an exiled Russian nobleman, who comes to this country almost penniless, teaches a while, and then, being a lover of books, starts a little second-hand book store. Sonia grows to womanhood unaware of her noble birth, she has a great singing voice. In an old Bible which her father treasures, are the documents which will establish her claim to large estates, but her father tells her she will learn it all after his death.

David Tryne, living in the same neighborhood, deformed and with a twisted mind, is a remarkable penman and a lover of the beautiful. He forges a letter of recommendation given to one man. The second man uses it and as a result the first man is accused of forgery. The neighbors try to mob Tryne, who takes refuge in the book store. Sonia pities his deformities, aids him, and wins his adoration.

To the book store comes Sutton, a society man, with Kitty Fish, and an impresario. Later, with Schuyler, they all go to hear Sonia sing. She succeeds and it is planned that she shall go abroad and study. Tryne is with her father while she is away and when Demitri dies Tryne learns from the papers in the old Bible of Sonia's high birth. Sonia makes a great success, Schuyler falls in love with her, and Tryne, crazed with jealousy, forges a note which he places in the old Bible, saying that Sonia is the daughter of a disreputable woman. This he signs with Demitri's name, and gives the book to Sutton to give to Sonia, asking him to say that he had found it in an old book shop.

Schuyler's mother asks Sonia about her ancestry, and learning nothing decides to institute inquiries in Russia. Sutton sprains his ankle on his way to Sonia, and sends for her to come and get the book. Tryne learns of this and sends a note to Schuyler, telling him of her going to Sutton. Schuyler meets her there. She shows Sutton's note, and while Schuyler declares his trust in her, she feels that she cannot marry him with the stain on her birth, and sends him away.

Sonia gives up everything, and with Tryne as her servitor, awaits only death. Kitty feels for her, and sends for Schuyler to come and see her. The day he is to come, Sonia finds the genuine documents regarding her birth which had fallen from Tryne's coat pocket. Tryne sees the papers in her hands, and tries to get them back, but she holds him with her eyes, and as Schuyler enters the room, Tryne sees that he has lost and quietly slips away. With the barrier to their love removed, Sonia and Schuyler find their happiness.

THE YELLOW PASSPPORT (Shubert—Five Parts—Feb. 7).—The cast: Sonia Sokoloff (Clara Kimball Young); Fedia (John Sainpolis); Myron Abram (Alec B. Francis); Carl Rosenheimer (John Boyle); Mrs. Rosenheimer (Mrs. Landau); Adolph Rosenheimer (Edwin August); Anna Sokoloff (Mrs. Kimball); David Sokoloff (Ed. Kimball); Alex Sokoloff (Silas Feinberg); Akulena, Fiodor's wife (Florence Hackett); Fiodor, a landlord (Thomas Charles); Ivan (Robert Cummings); Music Master (Nicholas Dunaew); Chief of Police (Adolph Lestina). Director, Edwin August.

Sonia Sokoloff, the daughter of a well-to-do Jewish family in Kiev, is ambitious to become a grand opera singer. Fedia, a Russian police spy, is employed by the Sokoloff's as a valet. Fedia desires Sonia, and when she is alone, he attacks her. She escapes from him but in order not to alarm her parents, discharges Fedia and tells them nothing of her experience. Fedia swears allegiance to the notorious Black Hundred, a mob organized to destroy the Jews.

Fedia incites Ivan, a leader of the Black Hundreds, to a terrible massacre. The Sokoloffs are all killed except Sonia and her uncle, Myron. Fedia during the massacre, steals into the house in search of Sonia. Ivan, returning for loot, hears Sonia's cries for help. Seeing her beauty, he and Fedia fight for possession of her. Ivan is killed and Sonia escpaes.

Weeks later Sonia, no longer considered a citizen, is ordered to leave Russia. Loath to be torn from the graves of her family and give up her music lessons, Sonia, in spite of her uncle Myron's protests, registers with the police as a public woman and take out a yellow passport. (Only Jewish women with yellow passports are allowed to remain outside the Pale which is the Jewish settlement.)

Suspecting that Sonia is a moral woman living under false pretenses, the police master finds out that she has paid the landlords and neighborhood police for protection. Fedia, now a police inspector, is sent to spy upon her. Sonia and her uncle Myron trick the police, but fearing that Fedia will annoy her again, they leave for America.

On the ship are Carl Rosenheimer, an impresario, and his son, Adolph. They hear of the Russian Nightingale among the steerage passengers and interview her. During the voyage Adolph and Sonia fall in love. Reaching Ellis Island, Sonia and her uncle Myron once more trick the officials, concealing from them all knowledge of the yellow passport and making it possible for Sonia to be admitted.

In America Sonia becomes a famous opera singer and is formally engaged to Adolph. Fedia is sent by the Russian government to this country. At the height of her success and happiness, Fedia appears on the scene and discloses to the Rosenheimers the history of Sonia's yellow passport.

The proofs of her innocence, the letters written by her to the Police Master, were left in Russia when she and her uncle Myron fled to America. Akulena and Fiodor, expelled from Russia, come to America carrying with them these letters, in hopes of finding Sonia. Adolph regrets his denouncement of Sonia even before the proofs of her innocence are produced.

THE HAVOC (Essanay—5 Parts—March 20). The cast: Kate Craig (Gladys Hanson); Richard Craig (Lewis Stone); Paul Hessert (Bryant Washburn).

Richard Craig and Paul Hessert, who work in the same office, are great chums. Both are in love, however, with the stenographer. Craig is successful in winning her heart and they are married. The rivalry does not break the friendship of the two men. Instead Craig is so happy in his new home he invites Hessert to come and live with them.

Craig becomes engrossed in his work and fails to see that his wife is lonesome. He stays away from home more and more in the evening and Mrs. Craig is thrown much to the society of Hessert. Finally, a love springs up between the two.

Craig is called away from the city on business and his wife finally yields to Hessert's importunities. Craig returns unexpectedly and finds the two together. The wife confesses her love for Hessert and tells her husband to shoot them. He, however, calmly tells her that he will get a divorce so that she can marry Hessert, if they will consent to let him live in the house under the same condition as Hessert had. They agree.

Craig then sets about to win back the love of his former wife. He promotes Hessert in the office and throws temptation in his way, believing he will prove himself a scoundrel. Hessert finally steals a large amount of money and is about to flee from the country. Craig tells the woman of his theft but she will not believe it. Just at the moment, however, Hessert enters the house and when confronted by Craig, confesses his guilt. Instead of having him arrested Craig tells him to go and never to show up again. The wife is overwhelmed with remorse and asks Craig what she can do to atone. He takes her back to the office as his stenographer.

THE SUPREME TEMPTATION. (Vitagraph—Five Parts—March 20).—The cast: Herbert Dubois (Antonio Moreno); Dubois, Senior (Charles Kent); Mrs. Dubois (Mary Maurice); Annette (Dorothy Kelly); Lydia (Kate Davenport); Milton (Evart Overton); Grumps (valet) (Jack Brawn); Paris Lawyer (Templer Saxe); Lockwood (Daniel Leighton); His daughter Florence (Marguerite Blake); Mon. Picard (John Robertson); Marie (Yvonne Dangman); Assist. Surgeon (Frank Brule). Author—Arthur J. Westermayr. Produced by Harry Davenport.

Herbert DuBois, a young medical student in Paris, falls in love with and marries, Annette, a grisette. They do not get along well, however, and he later secures a separation from her. He returns to America, to find his father greatly worried over impending financial ruin. The blow falls and DuBois, senior, kills himself, leaving Herbert to care for his mother and sister, Lydia.

Some time later, he falls in love with Florence, the daughter of the family lawyer, and his friend, Milton, is fascinated by Lydia. Mon. Picard, a French milliner, pays Herbert a visit and informs him of Annette's death. He and Florence are then married. A year later, Herbert has been promoted to the head of the medical college and he learns that he is soon to become a father. Annette has come to America to live. While DuBois is preparing to perform an autopsy on a young woman who has died suddenly, he discovers, to his horror, that it is Annette, and that she is not dead, but in a cataleptic trance—a disease to which her family was subject.

Then the supreme temptation comes to him to kill her with a slight movement of his scalpel and thus remove forever the dark past, but his better nature conquers, and after calling the attention of the others to the body, he goes out. Restoratives are quickly applied and Annette comes back to life. Then follows an agony of suspense for Herbert. Will she live and spoil his present happiness, or will she die? After what seems eternity, one of the doctors informs him that Annette has died, and rushing up to his wife's room, he is stopped by the nurse who tells him that a son has been born to them.

MR. JACK TRIFLES (No. 5 of "Frank Daniels Comedies"—Vitagraph—March 20).—The cast: Mr. Jack (Frank Daniels); His Wife (Kate Price); Jeanne, the maid (Betty Howe); Saleslady (Mrs. C. Jay Williams). Author—Bruno Lessing. Produced by C. Jay Williams.

While seated in a restaurant, Mr. Jack flirts with a chic little miss seated nearby, they become friends and when he accidentally knocks one of her gloves into the soup dish, promises to buy her a box of gloves in reparation. He forgets all about it until next morning, and is then horrified at breakfast to confront the same girl in the person of his wife's new maid.

When wife is not looking, Mr. Jack promises to keep his promise about the gloves if the maid will keep the secret of their first meeting. He takes the measure of her hand and downtown, tells the salesgirl to send the gloves to his house, but has to beat it before paying for them, as his wife enters the store. Later Mrs. Jack hears her husband talking to the salesgirl over the phone and immediately flies into a jealous rage. She rushes home and unbraids Jack, who coolly follows the maid's advice by explaining the gloves were for Mrs. Jack and sent to the maid to keep until Mrs. Jack's birthday. But the size gives away this neat plan, and only the maid's quick wit in phoning for a box of correct size gloves saves the situation. But Mr. Jack trifles no more!

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS, INC.

THE FLIRT (Five parts—Bluebird—Mar. 26).—The cast: Cora (Marie Walcamp); Laura, her sister (Grace Benham); Hendrick, her young brother (Antrim Short); Mr. Madison, (Ogden Crane); Mrs. Madison (Nannie Wright); Valentine Corliss (Juan De La Cruz); Ray Vilas (Paul Byron); Richard Lindley (Fred Church); Wade Trumbell (Robert Lawlor); Pryor (Robert M. Dunbar). Produced by the Smalleys.

In a typical American small town lived a man and wife who had two daughters and a younger son. One of the girls was a born flirt, and her trifling disposition was the bane of her brother's young life. The other sister was of the self-sacrificing type not at all uncommon in American families.

Three men of the town have fallen victims to the flirt, but show their grief in different ways. One takes to drink, another is reconciled and a third clings with despairing hope to his suit. Comes to the town an adventurer, who seeks to finance his swindling schemes.

The flirt's father is the leading representative of integrity in the community. To secure her father's influence, the swindler works through the weakness of the flirtatious daughter. Her egotism leads her to further his swindling schemes. Meanwhile there is an inner-plot involving the self-sacrificing sister in her deep love for one of the flirt's victims. The mischievous brother takes matters into his own hands and the methods he employs in his attempt to set things right according to his own ideas, involves almost everybody in the village in some highly exciting episodes.

"They FILL the TILL"

THE PORTOSCOPE

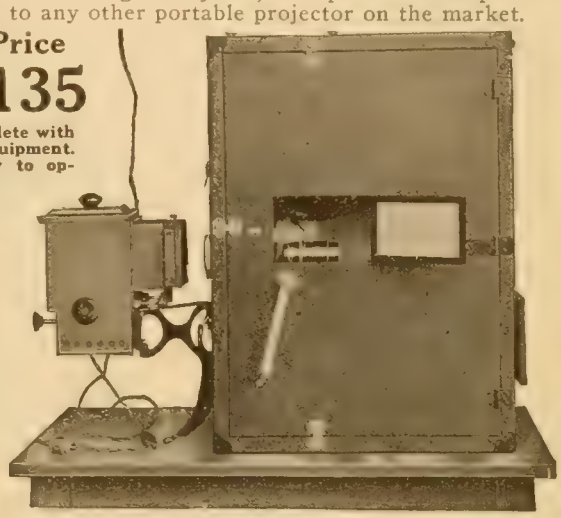
WINS HEARTY APPROVAL OF THE TRADE

For years, the film industry has needed a practical, portable projector, which would measure up to standard in every respect.

Film Manufacturers have said—"If a really practical, portable machine could be developed, it would be a wonderful success." THE PORTOSCOPE is that machine and right they are, it is purchased in preference to any other portable projector on the market.

Price $135

Complete with all equipment. Ready to operate.



One of 3 Models—Model No. 1

THE PORTOSCOPE

—is practical as well as portable—TAKES STANDARD FILM—is absolutely safe—projects steady brilliant pictures, has no flicker—is simply and sturdily constructed.

The Portoscope operates on alternating or direct current. It is equipped with either 1000 C.P. incandescent lamp, arc lamp, or calcium light. Takes 2 minutes to adjust ready for operation. Film is threaded from side—all operating parts readily accessible.

REALLY PORTABLE

THE PORTOSCOPE weighs about 35 lbs.—size of a suit case. Carry it anywhere. See cut. Its entire mechanism is built into an asbestos lined carrying case.

"STILL" PICTURE SAFELY SHOWN

A really portable projector

THE PORTOSCOPE Heat Eliminator allows only cool white light to strike film. Stop machine and examine detail in any picture without damage to film. Equipment includes Stereopticon attachment.

DEALERS

Successful dealers everywhere are selling THE PORTOSCOPE—so can you. Secure territory before it is too late. Write us at once. Learn about the attractive Portoscope proposition.
Such dealers as Porter, Picture Theatre Equipment Co., Swaab, Hyatt's Supply Co., Kansas City Photographic Supply Co., Southern Electrical Co., George Breck, Metcalfe, and others, are selling THE PORTOSCOPE. Ask them what THEY think about it.

Index to Reviews, Comments, and Stories of Films

Appended is a list of subjects covered by our reviews and comments and the synopses furnished by the manufacturers released for the three months ending March 31st, 1916. This list of releases with dates is as accurate as it is possible to make it with the information that we have received from the companies whose productions are included. Should any of our readers detect errors we shall be pleased to have our attention called to them so that we may correct our card index. The letter before the folio indicates the page where the review, comment, or synopsis can be found. "R" stands for review; "C" for comment; and "S" for synopsis. Where reference letter is omitted to either review or comment it signifies that none was published, and the omission of reference letter "S" indicates that synopsis was not furnished by the manufacturer. Of the later releases where any or all reference letters are omitted it may be said that the missing information, or part of it, will probably be published in the next volume.
